Those interested primarily in rehabilitating prisoners and those interested primarily in protecting free enterprise and free labor against prison factories and prison labor have tried to make it possible for these men in the prisons to work, but to restrict their market to the State where they produce.

Now I yield very briefly to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman know that only one-twentieth of 1 percent of the goods manufactured in prisons compete with similar goods manufactured by free labor in the United States?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know the percentage but I do know that if we do exempt these two commodities, binder twine and farm machinery, then we naturally turn into the production of binder twine and farm implements the productive energy of the penitentiaries of the country, and these manufacturers and workmen who are engaged in producing binder twine and farm implements with free labor will have to meet this combined productive energy of the penitentiaries.

We have, however, established the general policy of prohibiting the shipment in interstate commerce of the product of prisons, and to make these exceptions would turn the productive energy of the penitentiaries against the laborers in these particular industries.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, all time has expired.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report to its adoption or rejection.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

Mr. MICHENER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman qualifies.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MICHENER moves to recommit the conference report to the conference committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. If this motion should carry, the conferees would then be permitted to go back and cut out all the exemptions which they have included here if they wanted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The whole matter would be before the conferees.

The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MICHENER) there were—ayes 28, noes 94.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-nine Members are present; not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 40, nays 262, not voting 127, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech prepared to be made by Speaker BANKHEAD at the opening of the Democratic rally in Baltimore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. D'ALESANDRO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in memory of our late colleague, Mr. Seger, of New Jersey, and to include a eulogy by Rev. George H. Talbott.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 597

Resolved, That Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the President and the Senate be notified by the Clerk of the election of Hon. SAM RAYBURN as Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN assumed the chair and was sworn as Speaker pro tempore by Mr. McCORMACK.

CODIFICATION OF THE NATIONALITY LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 544, and ask for its immediate consideration.

House Resolution 544

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9980, a bill to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, later on I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. Speaker, this rule will make in order consideration of the long-delayed bill covering codification of our nationality laws. The report is unanimous. I think this is the first time that the Committee on Immigration has reported a bill by unanimous vote and I congratulate the committee upon its action.

The rule is an open rule and provides for 1 hour's general debate, after which the bill will be taken up and read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. I have been informed by members of the committee and the Rules Committee has been so informed, that in view of the many months the committee and subcommittee has spent in the consideration of this bill, and due to the further fact that this has the unanimous report of that committee, the 1 hour allowed for general debate will not be utilized by members of the Committee on Immigration. This bill strengthens the arm of the Government, as I understand it, and restricts naturalization. It provides for heavy penalties for any misinformation or false statement on the part of anyone who aids and endeavors to obtain naturalization. There is also a heavy fine provided and properly so, the fine being up to $5,000 and imprisonment not to exceed 5 years.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not change the immigration laws in any respect. It has the approval of four outstanding departments, and in fact urgent requests for the enactment of this legislation have been made for some time by the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of War, and the Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the letters urging the adoption of this bill which I have received from the Secretaries whom I have mentioned, as well as an excerpt of a letter from the President of the United States, in which they urge the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 27, 1940.

The Honorable ADOLPH J. SABATH,
Chairman, House Rules Committee, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SABATH:

* * * * * * * *

I have no hesitation in believing that the facts and arguments strongly point to the desirability of the rule being granted and the bill considered by the House with as little delay as possible, which would conceivably result in its becoming a law before adjournment of the present Congress. It seems to me the following facts should be given great weight:

For several years the importance of such legislation has been recognized. I think it was during the first year of my administration that I requested the Departments of State, Justice, and Labor to undertake the preparation of such a measure. In compliance with my request, the officials of the Departments named have done a great deal of work, and those Departments now urge its enactment, and this also appears to be the attitude of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, which has reported the bill. Furthermore, it is stated that there is no opposition to the bill. In addition, I am informed that the opinion is entertained in some quarters that its enactment might serve to curb certain "fifth column" activities.

Further detail is unnecessary in view of the communications you have received, and which you have given me the privilege of reading.

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 27, 1940.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
Chairman, Committee on Rules, House of Representatives:

I am informed that H. R. 9980 has been approved by the Immigration and Naturalization Committee of the House of Representatives and is now before your committee. This bill has been drawn up in consultation with the State, War, and Navy Departments. The War Department is particularly interested in section 402, which, if enacted, would greatly simplify the important military problems.

I take this occasion to request your good offices in expediting the passage of the bill in question, in the interests of national defense.

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS JOHNSON,
Acting Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 21, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Navy Department understands that the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code has been approved by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives, and that it is now before your committee for consideration.

It is assumed that the bill will be amended to conform to the provisions of Reorganization Plan No. V, transferring the administration of immigration and naturalization from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice.

The Navy Department favors the enactment of this bill in the interest of the national defense.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS COMPTON, Acting.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON RULES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 13, 1940.

DEAR MR. SABATH: I understand that the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor are asking that, if possible, your committee afford an opportunity, as requested by the Committee on Immigration, for a rule to provide for the consideration as early as possible of H. R. 9980, known as the Nationality Act of 1940. This being assumed, I am writing to say that it would gratify this Department if such a disposition of the matter could be had.

Yours very sincerely,

R. WALTON MOORE,
Counselor, Department of State.

The Hon. A. J. SABATH,
Chairman, Committee on Rules,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 13, 1940.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
Chairman, Rules Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On June 5 the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed H. R. 9980, designated as Nationality Act of 1940.

The proposed nationality act of 1940 is based on a codification of the nationality laws of the United States, submitted on the request of the President by the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Labor and transmitted to the Congress with a message of recommendation by the President on June 13, 1938. It represents 5 years of work by representatives of the Departments of State, Justice, and Labor. It has been a very extensive and important undertaking for the benefit of citizens of this country who, by reason of foreign birth or marriage or family relationship with aliens, are interested in a clarified restatement and codification of our nationality laws. Representatives of the three departments named above have worked closely with members of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee of the House of Representatives through the present session of Congress; and the proposed nationality act of 1940, H. R. 9980, which has resulted, is a piece of legislation which I can recommend highly.

I sincerely hope that your committee may adopt a rule which will admit this proposed legislation to prompt consideration by the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1940.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
Chairman of the Rules Committee, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It has been brought to my attention that the chairman of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, Mr. DICKSTEIN, proposes to ask a rule from your committee so that the proposed Nationality Code, H. R. 9980, be presented to the House for consideration.

For your information, you are advised that by Executive order dated April 25, 1933, the President designated the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Labor as a committee to review the nationality laws of the United States, to recommend revisions, particularly with reference to the removal of certain existing discriminations, and to codify those laws into one comprehensive nationality code. In due course the proposed code was submitted to the President, who in turn sent the matter to the Congress of the United States.

The proposed code has been considered for some time by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization under H. R. 6127, which committee has held a large number of hearings on the merits of the bill. The House committee seems to have approved the bill and is ready to submit it to the House under H. R. 9980.

Undoubtedly there is a great need for a nationality code, and it is to be hoped that your committee may aid in having the matter considered by the whole House.

With kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

Mr. SABATH. About 4 years ago the President recommended that a commission be created to study a revision of these laws. This commission, as I recollect, was composed of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and I believe the Secretary of the Navy. They agreed on and recommended a bill to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and that committee has spent nearly a year through its subcommittee in perfecting and strengthening the provisions of the bill.

Right here I wish to commend and compliment the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in its splendid work, and I wish to compliment especially the gentleman from Kansas, who has been the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this work. He has devoted a great deal of time to this matter and has worked diligently and ably on it. He has prepared a report, which was submitted to the President, who also commended the painstaking efforts of the gentleman from Kansas. I hope that others on the left will follow his example, and when it comes to legislating in the interest of the Nation will show the same accord and unanimity that has been displayed by and within the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration.

In view of the fact that there is no opposition to the bill, and that it comes to us with a unanimous report and is approved by various Departments, I shall not detain the House any longer. I reserve the balance of my 30 minutes and now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 9980, contains 98 pages. The report accompanying the bill contains 164 pages. Of course, no member of the Committee on Rules has read the entire bill or the report. I, therefore, shall make no comment on the bill.

The rule provides for consideration of the bill in the House. Under general debate and the 5-minute rule the matter can be thoroughly discussed.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] 5 minutes. I may say that the gentleman from New York is the chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and should know something about this measure.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I stand before the House at this time with a full consciousness of the difficulties that always confront the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and which particularly confront that committee in times like these. This bill seeks to revise and codify the immigration and naturalization laws into a nationality code. Of course, I am grateful to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] for his introductory remark about me, but I asked for this time not so much to talk on the substantive features of this bill but rather to call to the attention of the House a matter which necessarily comes to me in my capacity as chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

The function of the Congress in enacting laws is an important one. It seems to me, though, that the putting of those laws into form and shape so that the bench and the bar and the general public of the country may know what the laws are and may know where to find them is equally important.

Congress took a step that was perhaps the greatest advance in the method of preparing the laws enacted by the Congress when, in 1926 the first edition of the United States Code was prepared and published. In that code all the laws of a permanent and general nature were codified under 50 separate and individual titles, alphabetically arranged. From the date of the publication of that first edition of the United States Code to this very moment your committee has been classifying all the laws permanent and general in nature that have been passed by each Congress.

We took another forward step in the manner and the method of compiling and codifying laws a year ago last January when, under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means, title XXVI of the United States Code, which is known as the Internal Revenue Code, was enacted into positive law. That title is the only title of our present code that is positive law. The remaining titles of the code are simply prima facie statements of what the law is. The reference of that bill to the Ways and Means Committee rather than the Committee on Revision was by unanimous consent.—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, first session, 76th Congress, page 637.

We now have before us this admittedly huge task that has been performed by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The chairman of the Committee on Rules in his opening remark mentioned that the subcommittee and the committee had been working for months and for years on this codification of the nationality laws. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill now before us was introduced on Monday, June 3, and was reported by the standing Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on June 5.

I submit to the House, without passing at all on the merits or demerits of this attempt to codify the nationality laws, that we must be careful in the enactment of these various codes else we will, bit by bit and piece by piece, destroy the effectiveness of the United States Code as a whole. I call your attention particularly to the fact that in the bill before us we have this committee taking from United States Code, title V, on the Executive; title VIII on Aliens; title XVIII on the Criminal Code and Criminal Procedure; title XXVIII on the Judicial Code and Judiciary; title XXXIX on the Postal Service; and title XLVIII on Territories and Insular Possessions, various sections of existing law, and bringing them in under this nationality code, which in all probability will eventually constitute title VIII of the United States Code.

We have pending before this House a resolution to create a joint committee composed of members of the Judiciary Committees of this House and the other body to codify the Judicial Code. I am informed that other standing committees of the House are attempting to codify the laws coming within and under their jurisdiction.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEOGH. If your Committee on Immigration and Naturalization can in preparing a nationality code draw from at least six titles in the United States Code, there is no earthly reason why any other committee which seeks to codify the laws coming within its jurisdiction cannot draw from all the titles of the United States Code, including even the pending bill which you will probably enact today. So I say that the result of it is going to be that we will have confusion worse confounded by individual and separate efforts to codify the laws of the United States.

I submit to the House that what should be done and what should have been done in this case is that the nationality code or any other revision of any of the existing laws or statutes of the United States should have been referred to the standing committee of this House which has been constituted for that sole purpose, and under the jurisdiction of that committee any codification or even any revision might be taken. That Committee on Revision of the Laws would preserve and protect the structure of the entire United States Code, to the end that we will eventually have a code composed of those 50 titles enacted into positive law. Thereafter any changes, any amendments, or any revisions of the laws will be a relatively simple matter.

What this House does in connection with the nationality code is personally of little importance to me, but what this Congress does with respect to offering the laws it enacts to the people of this country in such a manner that they can more easily determine what the law is and where it is, is very important to me.

I do hope that in the future, if there are standing committees of this House that are working without legislation before them and, therefore, rendering impossible raising any point of order on the jurisdiction of that committee with respect to codifying or revising existing laws, that they will be good enough to advise the House Committee on Revision of the Laws so that we may consider the effect, not of the particular subject that might be before that committee, but rather that we may consider the effect of this codification on the entire code structure.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEOGH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the House had this experience in the codification of the United States Code. For a number of years the Committee on Revision of the Laws, as members of the committee—and all good lawyers—attempted to recodify the law. It was a splendid effort but so full of errors and mistakes that it just could not be used. It got as far as the Senate, and now the Committee on Revision of Laws, under the gentleman who is now addressing the House as chairman, has the assistance of experts like the lawbook publishing companies and concerns of that kind that know how to codify and who do the work in a proper manner. I am not reflecting on the Committee on Immigration at all. They are all splendid men, but I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I do not think the Judiciary Committee would be qualified by experience to codify without expert assistance.

Mr. KEOGH. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I am familiar with the difficulties that were confronting the Congress when they sought to enact the entire United States Code into positive law, and that is the reason the United States Code today is simply prima facie evidence of what the law is. It was in the nature of a saving clause that enabled the creation of this code structure of 50 titles into which all the laws of a permanent and general nature may be classified in their appropriate places, but the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House, under the precedents of the House, has dealt not only with the codifying of laws or the revising of existing statutes, but in some cases or in certain instances that committee has had referred to it bills which change existing law or which enact new law. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman who preceded me has stated, this is not a very easy matter. We are now addressing ourselves to the situation of whether or not we shall adopt this rule. It goes without saying that most likely we will adopt the rule, and as far as I am concerned, I shall not object to the rule because there is no question but that the naturalization and immigration laws of the country are very much confused and need codification. I would not say that these laws are antiquated because the immigration laws and the naturalization laws both are comparatively new, so far as the law goes, as most of the important immigration laws have been passed since 1917. We are not considering here today the laws controlling the admission of individuals into the country or the deportation of them from the country. That is a subject by itself, and the law relating to the admission of immigrants and the expulsion of immigrants is also in such a state that they should be revised and codified. As I understand it, we are dealing today simply with the one subject of naturalization. That means conferring citizenship on those who are here and those who have a right to come. When we start out to confer citizenship we have to investigate as to whether that alien is here properly. That is the first thing to be determined, and if he is, then we proceed to naturalize him. This bill that we are considering will codify the laws on this subject so that they may be more easily understood.

I understand further there are a good many amendments that should be offered to the bill. It is impossible for any one individual to stand here and say this bill is right in every respect or that this is all wrong. Unless he has spent much time on it, it is impossible for him to fit it together, and nobody knows that any better than the lawyers and those who have tried it.

I want to say by way of compliment to our good and distinguished friend, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] he has spent many days and the days of many months in codifying these laws, working with the office of the Secretary of State and the office of the Secretary of Labor and other Government agencies. In my work in connection with immigration and naturalization I have always found it very satisfactory and very worth while to consult the Secretary of State's office.

I have done that in all my experience here, regardless of whether he was a Republican or a Democrat, because the career men in the office of Secretary of State generally know this subject. They generally know it well. Their idea of how it ought to be administered has always met with my approval. As I understand it, they have worked on this bill. They have spent many hours on it and they have approved most of it. Standing alone I would be willing to accept their approval, but I understand there are some sections that have not entirely met with the approval of the office of Secretary of State, but which have met with the approval of the other departments of Government. I shall withhold my support or refusal to support this bill until I hear more from those who are familiar with its details. I think it behooves all of us who have been for restriction and those who have not been so strong for restriction to understand what is before us. Let us adopt the rule and then let us consider page by page this important codification. Immigration and naturalization are not a difficult subject to understand, because they deal with humanity and with human beings. But the laws on these subjects have been passed piece by piece and need to be reconciled. The question we will want to know eventually is, Does this codification infringe upon fundamental law as we understand it now? If it does, does it infringe in a way to improve it or to weaken it? Then we will govern ourselves accordingly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is nothing in this that affects immigration, the quota laws, or anything the gentleman is talking about. We are simply strengthening the arm of the Government with a number of substantive laws to do away with dual nationality; strengthening the arm of the Government dealing with naturalization and other important substantive facts that this Government needs, particularly in this time of emergency.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am glad to have that assurance from the gentleman, and I hope it works out that way.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio, who was a former member of the Committee on Immigration for a number of years, that the House has come to have great respect for his judgment on matters affecting the immigration laws. I realize that he is now a member of the Ways and Means Committee, but I would ask the gentleman if he has given consideration to this bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his comments, but I am sorry to say I am not as familiar with this as I should be. But if I have the assurance of the Committee on Immigration that it has gone into this thoroughly, and if this work meets the approval of the experts in the office of the Secretary of State, I shall be glad to support it, because for years I have recognized the necessity for codification.

Mr DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It not only has the approval of the State Department, but also the Department of Justice, the War Department, and every department of our Government, as recently as yesterday.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I am now the ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I prefer to call this codification a clarification or simplification of the present naturalization laws. It is a problem that has been before us for several years. The departments of Government—the State Department, the Department of Labor, the Attorney General's department—have all been working on it and interested in it and concerned about it. Finally, after years of effort, it has been placed in the shape of this bill.

When the question came up in our committee I was asked to recommend someone from the minority side to act on that subcommittee to work it out. I named the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] on our side as two members who would give it serious and earnest consideration; and they did.

They have discussed this matter with me. This codification, as I understand it, is to simplify and clarify, not particularly amend, although it does in some particulars amend wherever it needs amending, but it amends in the direction of a tightening up of this thing. Our naturalization laws have grown up like Topsy and they conflict and overlap, and there was a real necessity, and has been for years, to straighten them out and codify them so that they can be made workable.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. To a student of naturalization it has been patent for a long time that the law ought to be amended and codified for the benefit of the poor immigrant.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is not altogether necessary to amend it to put any hardships upon anybody, but to help many fine, poor immigrants who need the law, who need a little sympathy, so that they can get what is coming to them.

Mr. MASON. I wish to say in that regard that when an alien appears in one of our courts and applies for naturalization, there is no orderly questioning. Some courts ask the most ridiculous questions of that alien, and they seem to probe into his ability to answer technical questions rather than questions as to his character, his reputation, his standing in the community, and how he has acted as a resident preparatory for citizenship. Those things at least ought to be straightened out.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Knowing the gentleman as I do and having served with him on the committee, I would like to ask if he has thoroughly examined this proposed law?

Mr. MASON. I have not. I have only been consulted on several of the changes that were made. My colleague, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], who served as acting chairman of the committee who made this report, will answer all the questions on the various parts of the bill.

Mr. KERR. And you know his attitude, however?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. KERR. And he is in favor of this bill?

Mr. MASON. He is. It was voted out of our committee unanimously.

They say we ought to have had experts working on these things, that we were not capable of doing it. I admit that, but we have had the experts of various departments of the Government working on this for several years.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. KEOGH. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that one of the sections incorporated in this nationality code deals with the franking privilege accorded the district courts or the Immigration Bureau. I say to the gentleman that if I were a practicing lawyer attempting to find out what rights officials had with respect to the mails, I would more logically look under "Postal Service" than under "Aliens" or any other title of the code. So, from the point of view of immigration officials it may be very good, but we should consider it from the point of view of the public at large.

Mr. MASON. I believe the gentleman is right.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I not say to the gentleman from Illinois, the ranking member of my committee on the minority side that the American Bar Association have endorsed this bill in toto. They are happy to know that we are going to do something for the benefit of the country and at the same time plug up a lot of these loopholes that have existed for the last 50 years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Michigan any more requests for time?

Mr. MICHENER. I have no more requests for time.

Mr. SABATH. I do not desire to take any additional time with the exception of saying to my colleague from New York that his statement that the bill was introduced early in June of this year would contradict my statement that the committee had the bill before them for a long while. This is a reprint.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. KEOGH. I did not mean to contradict the gentleman. What I meant was that this committee has indulged in the increasing practice of considering legislation with no bill introduced before the committee. When the hearings are completed the committee then drafts the legislation, and reports it. The Ways and Means Committee does this in almost all instances.

Mr. SABATH. The bill was introduced during the last session of Congress and demand was made for its consideration. If the gentleman had any objection to its reference to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization he should have raised the point in the House at the time it was referred. The Rules Committee had no jurisdiction to refer the bill to a committee. That power and right is vested in the Speaker, and the Speaker referred the bill to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. KEOGH. I am conscious of the fact that a point of order against reference must be made before the bill is reported. I meant to serve notice that our committee proposed to exercise its right with respect to the point of order. We regret that for some reason or for no reason the point of order was not made in this case.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is jealous of the rights and prerogatives of his committee, and I am very glad to hear the chairman of a committee seeking additional work, especially when he feels that the work assigned to another committee properly belongs to his own.

I am satisfied now from the speeches I have heard on the part of Members on both sides of the aisle that the bill meets with the approval even of the gentleman from New York notwithstanding the fact the bill was not assigned to his committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9980, the Nationality Act, 1940, with Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, this proposed legislation will not only be materially beneficial to the country in the future, but particularly so at this time of disturbance and agitation by "fifth columnists" and other subversive groups.

I cannot help saying a word to my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH], chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws. I listened to him very patiently. In the first place, as my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. SABATH], said, the gentleman from New York should have made his motion at the proper time. But, Mr. Chairman, even though he had, the bill could not possibly have been referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, because this proposed revision practically fixes substantive law, and where there is a change of substantive law the Committee on Revision of the Laws could not possibly deal with the problem.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In a minute.

Let us briefly review the history of this bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] was a member of the Committee on Immigration back in 1931. In those days both Republicans and Democrats on that committee found themselves troubled with complicated immigration and naturalization laws that contained many loopholes. The committee at that time voted unanimously to call upon the President to ask the departments to study this question. Accordingly, in April of 1933, the President issued an Executive order, which I will incorporate in my remarks, directing the State Department, the Attorney General, and other departments to make a complete study of this whole question.

Five years went by, 5 years of study. Study by whom? The Secretary of State, the Attorney General, the Secretary of Labor, and others. Not until June 13, 1938, did the President send a message to Congress on the subject, which I will incorporate in my remarks. This message submitting the report of the special committee requested this legislation and set forth the reasons why the legislation should be speedily enacted.

This committee does not want to take legislation away from any committee. The fact is that when I introduced this bill embodying the report of the committee, I had hoped that the bill would be referred to some other committee. It was apparent to me that a great amount of work would be involved. I felt that this committee had enough work to do involving needed immigration legislation without taking up this codification of the nationality laws contained in H. R. 6127, and I hesitated to call upon the members to assume the responsibility of reporting a bill involving so much study and research, as the report submitted contained some 1,980 pages of references alone, with numerous other documents which were referred to the committee by the several departments.

So far as I personally was concerned, I would have much preferred to have some other committee consider and report the bill. I knew that there had not been a revision of these nationality laws for almost 35 years; that the laws were scattered through more than 40 statutes; that it had been difficult, if not impossible, to decide definitely under the present law just what the law was in certain circumstances. Therefore, knowing the amount of labor this bill involved, you can readily see that I was not anxious to ask the committee to assume the task of recodification in view of the fact that the committee already had pending a large amount of important immigration legislation.

However, as the legislation was referred to the committee I am very proud to be able to say that the members of the committee made no objection or complaint with reference to the additional work and the subcommittee appointed assumed the task and worked faithfully and long, and finally submitted for consideration of the full committee the result of their labors and the full committee approved and unanimously reported the present bill, 9980.

Let me call to the attention of the Committee just a few of the urgent reasons for the recodification of the nationality laws.

For many years native and naturalized citizens who accumulated wealth through the opportunities afforded in the United States, have gone abroad, purchased chateaus and fine homes in these foreign lands, have spent their money, and the only responsibility as citizens of the United States has been to register at certain intervals as citizens of the United States, but in times of stress have demanded the protection as citizens of the United States.

There are others who, through accident of birth and circumstances have been born in the United States of alien parents, yet can claim citizenship and return at any time, regardless of character or political affiliations or beliefs, that are un-American and a danger to the country.

Not only these alien Americans, but others who now are able to claim citizenship, will be definitely expatriated, for example those who become naturalized in foreign countries, those who renounce their citizenship, deserters from military or naval forces who have been convicted by court martial, those who serve in foreign armies, those voting in the political elections of foreign countries, and others. Children of alien parents or naturalized parents whose parents return to their native land and become naturalized or repatriated. In short, this bill would put an end to dual citizenship and relieve this country of the responsibility of those who reside in foreign lands and only claim citizenship when it serves their purpose.

There has been reference to the fact that legislation of this kind should have had the benefit of legal experts. If any committee ever had the benefit of expert advice and the benefits of persons qualified as experts on the subject, the subcommittee has had such assistance. It has had the assistance and suggestions of an expert committee appointed by the President after 5 long years of study, it has had the benefit of the most expert talent of the Department of State, it has had the benefit of the legal experience of the Department of Justice, in the persons of Messrs. Flournoy, Butler, Shaughnessy, and Shoemaker. It has had before the subcommittee able representatives of the American Bar Association, other associations of attorneys, such as Mr. Noel and Mr. Butler, it has had before its subcommittee representatives of civic organizations and finally it has had the endorsement for this bill of the American Bar Association.

As chairman of the committee I gave considerable study to the report submitted by the President's committee, and I want to give credit that is due to the excellent work of the subcommittee each and every member and especially to the acting subchairman, the gentleman from Kansas, Congressman REES, and I desire to acknowledge the careful consideration given the report of the subcommittee by the full committee, and I am especially proud of the fact that from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a unanimous report was made by the full committee. There was not an element of partisanship in the consideration and report on this bill, but it was reported unanimously as a necessary and component part of our defense legislation.

I venture to say that few bills presented to this House have received more careful consideration and painstaking preparation, nor have more individuals, associations, or officials presented their views before a committee on proposed legislation.

Speaking for the full committee I ask that the bill as presented receive quick action.

As stated, I submit the following which is the message of the President commending the legislation and also the letter of submittal of the departments:

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I transmit herewith a report concerning the Revision and Codification of the Nationality Laws of the United States, submitted upon my request, by the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Labor. The report is accompanied by a draft code with three appendixes containing explanatory matter, prepared by officials of the three interested departments who are engaged in the handling of cases relating to nationality.

The report indicates the desirability from the administrative standpoint of having the existing nationality laws now scattered among a large number of separate statutes embodied in a single, logically arranged and understandable code. Certain changes in substance are likewise recommended.

In the enclosed letter forwarding the report to me the Secretary of State calls attention to a single question on which there is a difference of opinion between the Departments of Justice and Labor on the one hand and the Department of State on the other hand. If the committees of Congress decide to consider this question, the views of the three departments may be presented directly to them.

I commend this matter to the Congress for the attentive consideration which its wide scope and great importance demand.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
June 13, 1938.

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL

JUNE 1, 1933.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

By your Executive order of April 25, 1933, you designated the undersigned a committee to review the nationality laws of the United States, to recommend revisions, and to codify the laws into one comprehensive nationality law for submission to the Congress.

In pursuance of this order a committee of advisers, composed of six representatives of the Department of State, six of the Department of Labor, and one of the Department of Justice, was appointed to study the existing laws governing nationality, and to prepare a draft code, embodying such changes and additions as might seem desirable, together with a report explaining the same. Because of the wide field covered by these laws, the complexity of the problems involved and certain obstacles which could not have been foreseen, the report was not completed until August 13, 1935.

In view of the unusual importance of this subject, which is designed to determine the basic status of nationality itself, upon which so many rights and obligations depend, the draft code mentioned above was thoroughly reviewed by officials of the three Departments, some of whom had taken no part in its preparation.

As a result of this review and of conferences between these officials, various changes were made in the original draft.

While the nationality laws of nearly all foreign states have in recent years been completely revised and codified, the laws of the United States on this subject are found scattered among a large number of statutes, and it is sometimes difficult to reconcile the provisions of different statutes. On the other hand, there are no statutory provisions fixing the nationality status of the inhabitants of certain of the outlying possessions of the United States, including American Samoa and Guam.

The nationality problem in the United States is especially complex and difficult for several reasons. In past years large numbers of persons of foreign origin have come to the United States, have had children born to them in this country, and have subsequently returned to reside in the foreign countries from which they came, or have moved on to other foreign countries, taking their American-born children with them. In some cases the parents while in the United States obtained naturalization as citizens thereof, and in such cases children born to them in foreign countries after such naturalization have acquired citizenship of the United States at birth, under the provision of the existing law (R. S. 1993). Children born in the United States to persons of the classes mentioned acquired at birth citizenship of the United States, and in many cases they also acquired at birth the nationality of the foreign states from which their parents came, thus becoming vested with dual nationality. Dual nationality has also attached at birth to children born in certain foreign countries, having in their law of nationality the territorial rule (jus soli), to parents who acquired American nationality at birth or through naturalization.

The Draft Code submitted herewith is divided into five chapters, as follows: Chapter I, Definitions; Chapter II, Nationality at Birth; Chapter III, Nationality Through Naturalization; Chapter IV, Loss of Nationality; and Chapter V, Miscellaneous.

Since the citizenship status of persons born in the United States and the incorporated territories is determined by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, the proposed changes in the law governing acquisition of nationality at birth relate to birth in the unincorporated territories and birth in foreign countries to parents one or both of whom have American nationality. Cases of the latter kind are especially difficult of solution, in view of the necessity of avoiding discrimination between the sexes, and of the fact that, under the laws of many foreign countries, the nationality thereof is acquired through birth in their territories.

With regard to chapter III, it may be observed that naturalization constitutes a vital part of the nationality system of the United States, and the naturalization measures proposed by the committee of advisers constitute a considerable portion of the committee's proposals.

United States citizenship is a high privilege and ought not to be conferred lightly or upon a doubtful showing. The experience of the naturalization courts and administrative officers who have had to deal directly with the problems presented has demonstrated, however, the need for an accurate, comprehensive, and detailed code by which naturalization is to be conferred and any abuse of the process remedied. No alien has the slightest right to naturalization unless all statutory requirements are complied with, and every certificate of citizenship must be treated as granted on condition that the Government may challenge it in regular proceedings for that purpose and demand its revocation unless issued in accordance with statutory requirements.

The proposed code, herewith, represents a studied effort to draft a measure which would conform to the constitutional requirement that the rule of naturalization be "uniform," and facilitate the naturalization of worthy candidates, while protecting the United States against adding to its body of citizens persons who would be a potential liability rather than an asset.

The provisions of chapter IV, Loss of nationality, are of special importance. Loss of nationality is in all cases to result from the existence of stated facts. In this relation mention may be made of the provision of section 501, in which diplomatic and consular officers are required to send to the Department of State reports concerning persons found by them to have committed acts resulting in loss of American nationality under the provisions of chapter IV of the proposed act. It is important to note that such reports are intended merely for the information of the Department of State, the Department of Labor, and any other branches of the Government which may be interested.

Chapter V, Miscellaneous, in addition to the provision of section 501, mentioned above, contains a provision (sec. 502) for the issuance of certificates of nationality, for use in foreign states in cases of American nationals other than naturalized citizens.

The most important changes in the existing laws proposed in the annexed code are as follows:

(1) The provision of section 201 (g) requiring that, in order that a person born abroad may acquire citizenship of the United States at birth when only one of his parents is a citizen of the United States, the latter must have resided 10 years in the United States. The requirement of the existing law concerning residence in the United States as a condition to retention of citizenship has been modified for the benefit of children of persons representing the Government, or American commercial, or other interests.

(2) The provisions of chapter III, concerning the facilitating of naturalization under special conditions, and in particular the following:

The provisions of section 311, for the naturalization, without prior residence in the United States, of the alien spouse of a citizen of the United States residing abroad in the employment of this Government or of organizations of certain specified classes.

The provision of section 314, for the naturalization of a person under 18 years of age upon the petition of a citizen parent; and the similar provision of section 315, for the naturalization of an adopted child.

The provision of section 317 for facilitating the entry into the United States and naturalization, without the usual requirements concerning residence in the United States, of a person who was formerly a citizen of the United States but who became expatriated while residing in a foreign country through the naturalization of a parent therein.

(3) The provisions of chapter IV concerning loss of nationality, especially the following:

The provisions of section 402 concerning loss of nationality by a naturalized citizen as a result of the following acts:

(a) Residing for at least 2 years in the territory of a foreign state of which he was formerly a national or in which the place of his birth is situated, if he acquires through such residence the nationality of such foreign state by operation of the law thereof;

(b) Residing continuously for 3 years in the territory of a foreign state of which he was formerly a national or in which the place of his birth is situated, except as provided in section 404 hereof.

Special mention may also be made of the provision in section 337 of the code for the revocation of naturalization in the case of a person who takes up a permanent residence in his native land or some other foreign country within 10 years (instead of 5 years, as provided in the existing law) after the date of his naturalization.

The problem of the child born abroad to parents of different nationalities was the subject of extended consideration by the committee and finally resulted in the draft of section 201 (g) referred to above which confers American citizenship at birth upon a person born abroad if one of his parents is an American citizen. Prior to the Citizenship Act of May 24, 1934, only the children of American fathers acquired citizenship at birth if they were born abroad. This, however, was changed by the 1934 act so that a woman retaining citizenship after marriage to an alien also transmitted citizenship to her children. In enacting this measure Congress apparently took into consideration the fact that persons born in foreign countries whose fathers were nationals of those countries would be likely to have stronger ties with the foreign country than with the United States, and consequently annexed as a condition for retaining citizenship a 5-year period of residence in this country between the ages of 13 and 18. This condition was equally applicable irrespective of whether the citizen parent was a father or a mother.

It has been recognized, however, that these residence requirements will impose great hardship in some cases. This is especially true where the head of the family is a salaried person residing abroad as a representative of the American Government or some American commercial or other organization. The committee has therefore recommended that in cases of this character the conditions relating to residence during minority shall no longer be imposed. If the citizen parent does not represent the American Government or an American educational, scientific, philanthropic, religious, commercial, or financial organization, the foreign-born child, in order to retain American citizenship, is required under section 201 (g) to reside in the United States 5 years between his thirteenth and his twenty-first birthdays. The committee recommends strengthening the 1934 act in another respect, however, by restricting the right of transmitting citizenship in a case of this kind, through the requirement that the citizen parent should have resided at least 10 years in the United States prior to the birth of the child.

Mention is made above of section 317 of the code. While probably the majority of former American nationals who have been naturalized in foreign states through the naturalization of their parents therein continue to reside in such foreign states, some of them return to the United States to reside, and it seems only reasonable to adopt special provisions to enable the latter to recover their American citizenship if they so desire.

None of the various provisions in the code concerning loss of American nationality, such as those applicable to children born abroad to parents only one of whom has American nationality and persons who, after obtaining American nationality through naturalization, establish a residence abroad, is designed to be punitive or to interfere with freedom of action. They are merely intended to deprive persons of American nationality when such persons, by their own acts, or inaction, show that their real attachment is to the foreign country and not to the United States.

Important reasons for terminating American nationality in cases of persons who reside in foreign countries and have to all intents and purposes abandoned the United States lie in the fact that it will prevent them from transmitting American nationality to their foreign-born children having little or no connection with the United States, and embroiling this Government in controversies which they may have with the governments of the foreign countries in which they reside. The mere presumption of expatriation provided for in section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907, in cases of naturalized citizens residing for 2 years in the foreign states from which they came or 5 years in other foreign states, has proven inadequate. In general the right to protection should be coexistent with citizenship, and a law under which persons residing abroad are denied the protection of this Government, although they remain citizens of the United States and transmit citizenship to children born abroad, is deemed inconsistent and unreasonable. The admission of an alien to the privilege of American citizenship is subject to the condition that he intends to reside permanently in the United States and perform the duties of citizenship. When a naturalized citizen abandons his residence in the United States and takes up residence in the state of which he was formerly a national, definite termination of his American citizenshp should follow.

Further explanations of the various provisions of the code submitted herewith may be found in the comment on the various articles—appendix 1 herewith. In addition to the code and appendix 1, we also submit herewith the following:

Provisions of the code and corresponding provisions of the existing nationality laws, arranged in parallel columns (appendix 2), and constitutional, statutory, and treaty provisions relating to nationality (appendix 3).

Your committee, in the light of the experience of the interested departments in handling cases presented to them for action, is convinced that it is most desirable to have the nationality laws of the United States revised, and embodied in a single code, the meaning of which may be readily understood. We feel that there is no branch of the law of more importance to the country, or requiring more careful attention, than that branch which governs nationality, determining, as it does, what classes of persons shall compose the national society itself.

The proposals contained in the accompanying draft code are to be regarded merely as suggestions for the use of the appropriate committees of Congress. When the matter is to be considered by these committees, the undersigned will be glad to designate members of their respective departments whose duties involve the handling of citizenship cases to confer with the committees, if that is desired.

Respectfully,

CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.
HOMER CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.
FRANCES PERKINS,
Secretary of Labor.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think, with unusual propriety, I may say to our colleagues on this side of the aisle that in my humble judgment the Congress owes the gentleman from Kansas, ED REES, a great debt of gratitude for the labor which he has earnestly and diligently given a job that is long overdue. One of my first assignments in 1933 was to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, where I served in entire felicitous harmony with the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

That is a very absorbing committee. You deal with hardship, you deal with human nature, you deal with people from all corners of the earth, people who have a full appreciation that this is one spot on the face of the earth where you have certain guaranties of liberty.

It is not strange at all that on the frozen steppes of Russia or in the shadows of Buckingham Palace or along the highway going by Potsdam Palace in Berlin or in all the other corners of the earth there appears a great desire to come to this country. So, manifestly, that puts some execution on the naturalization as well as immigration laws of the country, and in proportion as you try to reconcile those laws to individual cases so they furnish a lot of human drama.

I want to say again to our good friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], who has labored on this thing from January to May 1940, and about whom some of the most refreshing and engaging things were said by people like the American Bar Association for the patience, devotion, and tolerance he put in the task, that the Congress does owe him a debt of gratitude.

I remember when I was a member of this committee—and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] will bear me out—we undertook to discuss this matter and to urge a codification, compilation, and clarification of these divergent laws, reconciling or ironing out some of the conflicts, and to me it is one of the most amazing things in the jurisprudence of this country. We have a lot of basic laws going away back to 1906. Of course, this whole field of endeavor goes away back to 1789. So that, little by little, there have been accretions, first by this Congress, then by that Congress. Too often a bill would go across the floor and we would not fully appreciate its implications until it got into the statutory law, then had to be interpreted in terms of and in conflict or in reconciliation with existing law that has not been repealed or nullified.

It puts a burden on the ingenuity of the immigration and naturalization administrators of the country. Too often the Congress has not been fair to them in the amount of time and devotion that has been addressed to a problem that is now receiving tremendous emphasis as a result, first, of the fitful and feverish condition that exists in the world today; second, the desire of people to come to these shores; and, third, a general demand in this country that more and more we require some kind of training, some kind of fitness, some kind of assimilation of the American philosophy before the door is open too wide and we extend our hands and say, "Welcome into the fold of American citizenship."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This matter was considered on the basis of equality and justice to all, and no politics was played in its consideration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sure of that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I believe every member of the committee did his best to bring about this legislation which is so sorely needed, and has been for the last 7 years. The gentleman from Illinois himself was on this committee when we discussed that very question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Quite right. I recall when we discussed this whole matter with Mr. Wilbur Carr, later Minister to Czechoslovakia, who was then with the State Department and who had done a tremendous amount of work on it. This is, after all, a job for experts. They set up a technical advisory committee.

I think they have labored on this for 5 or 6 years. So the product that is before us today represents the best thought and industry of the Attorney General's office, the State Department, the Labor Department, the American Bar Association, and other agencies that now give the seal of approval to this bill.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I recall that we sought even way back in 1934 to initiate a compilation and codification. We never quite got up to it until our friend from the plains of Kansas came and addressed his energy and his devotion to the job. So I take off my hat to him.

Let me conclude with this one other observation: There is one thing in this bill that engages my particular attention, and I am happy that it is here. It is a provision that is found on page 37 which authorizes the Commissioner to prescribe the scope and nature of the examination of petitioners for naturalization as to their admissibility to citizenship for the purpose of making appropriate recommendations to the naturalization courts. Such examinations shall be limited to inquiry concerning the applicant's residence, good moral character, understanding of and attachment to the fundamental principles of the Constitution of the United States, and other qualifications, and so forth.

As I understand, there is no prescribed course of examination today set down in the law, so it is sort of hit-and-miss. Here is one Federal judge who may be satisfied if a petitioner can tell him who the Governor is of the State where he has his monetary residence. Here is another judge who will ask him whether he can repeat the first 10 lines of the Declaration of Independence. There is no uniformity. It seems to me that the thing that needs emphasis today above everything else, if we are going to take any pride in this thing that we call American democracy, is to be sure that those who knock on the door for entrance as citizens know a little something about it.

How are you going to make a real American citizen out of somebody who came from foreign shores unless he is first familiar with the basic predicate of citizenship, until he knows what democracy really means, until he has some appreciation of the American way of life? Way back—further back than I care to recall right now—in the days when I was a dredging contractor up on the Illinois River, I had lots of people march across my pay rolls year in and year out. Some of them had to go through the naturalization court. On occasion I used to go with them. I have had some of these old timers go through who have been here a long time.

To me, it was the most amazing experience that I ever underwent to stand there as a witness and as a coach trying to get these people into citizenship, knowing at the same time their limitations as well as the limitations of the examination to which they were to be subjected.

I shall never forget one who was entered into citizenship because he could recite the name of the Governor of Illinois. He had some difficulty doing it at the time, but he did it, and it was about as much as he knew. I labored with that man on a quarter boat on the Illinois River for months, trying to pound into him what this country meant, how it differed from a foreign country, and what was embraced in the philosophy of democracy and Americanism.

Too often, you know, it sort of recedes. I recognize the difficulties on both sides. A man has come here and been over here 30 or 40 years. He becomes 60 years of age. It is a pretty hard matter to sit down by the light of a kerosene lamp out in the sticks somewhere and take him over and over it, just as you would a child in the first grade, and seek to bring him up on the pabulum of Americanization. Yet if we are going to hold our own, if we are going to keep this lamp alight, if we are going to set an example for all the rest of the world, then it becomes imperative as we go along that to those who knock on the door and say, "Uncle Sam, I would like to be a citizen of your country," we have the right to say, "You qualify," and show him the basis on which he must qualify.

Heretofore, it has been hit-and-miss. This bill contains a provision whereby they can prescribe certain qualifications and a certain, shall I say, course that has continuity and that leads up to an ultimate result, and that is an appreciation of democracy and a capacity for assimilation.

So once more I take off my hat to my esteemed friend from Kansas for the grand job he has done. It was a laborious task, and the Congress owes him a debt of gratitude. [Applause.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I should like the gentleman from Illinois, as well as the other members who have spoken, to know that I appreciate the fine compliments that have been extended to me, to which I feel I am not really entitled. I do want to share these compliments with the representatives of the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the War Department, together with the representatives of the American Bar Association, who diligently and unceasingly worked in an effort to bring about the legislation that is proposed this afternoon.

I only wish that a larger percentage of the members were a little more interested in this legislation. I believe we ought to be interested in this measure, because it is, I believe, one of the most important pieces of legislation that has come before this House during the present session.

The purpose of H. R. 9980 is to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States, as has been suggested, in a comprehensive nationality code. We have tried here to put into systematic order a consolidation and a restatement of the laws of citizenship, naturalization, and expatriation. A further purpose, so you will not be mistaken, is to amend the law with a view to making it more workable and to strengthen it where experience has found it to be weak or vague in its terms, and a further purpose is to repeal obsolete and conflicting, as well as undesirable, provisions of the present law.

The code is arranged in five chapters: Chapter I, Definitions; Chapter II, Nationality at Birth; Chapter III, Nationality Through Naturalization; Chapter IV, Expatriation; and Chapter V, Miscellaneous.

As I have told you before, this code is the result of years of study, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] stated, on the part of career men, in the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the State Department and the Department of Justice, together with representatives of the War Department. Subcommittee hearings were held on this bill and technical advice was received from representatives of these departments, and their representatives cooperated with the subcommittee 100 percent. The American Bar Association, through a special committee, gave this code its careful study, and the code has its approval today, and so far as I know, no particular organized group appeared against it, at least before our committee. And right now the State Department, the Department of Justice, and the War Department not only are supporting the bill, but are extremely anxious that it be passed. This is the reason the bill is on the floor this afternoon. I think that it is well to state also that this measure comes within the category of emergency legislation, and it is certainly in the best interests of national defense.

The bill provides for a tightening up as well as a definite enforcement of our nationality laws, and if there is any place in this measure where there is any more laxity provided than at the present time, either directly or indirectly, I do not know about it. Personally, I think the bill should be passed as it is presented to you with the exception of a few amendments that are going to be offered by the committee. One amendment especially is a corrective one, because when this bill came out of the committee the Immigration and Naturalization Service was under the Department of Labor, while it is now under the Department of Justice.

I would like to point out briefly, if I may, some of the defects existing in the nationality laws and call attention to some of the changes made in the proposed code; and, before going on, I would like to call attention to this fact: That most of the procedure followed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service is based upon rules and regulations which they have promulgated from time to time, sustained by opinions of the Attorneys General through the years. This situation prevails because there was no definite, basic law governing the particular question involved. We even have two or three important court decisions that are based largely upon the opinions of Attorneys General, opinions that were handed down years ago. The famous Elge case had to do with the question of whether or not a child who was born in this country, taken to the old country in her infancy, and who then returned and claimed citizenship was a citizen of this country. The Supreme Court decision quotes in particular the opinion of the Attorney General on the question rather than any particular interpretation of a basic law.

One of the principal defects now found in the statutes beginning with the act of 1802, is drafting, which in many cases is vague, uncertain, and not clear, and notwithstanding the various court decisions in which it has been sought to clarify the laws, the meaning is still unsettled. For example, right now it is impossible to say with any degree of certainty what the law actually is on the subject of naturalization of minors through the naturalization of their parents. We do not have anything definite on that question. Surely, the law ought to be stated in such manner that individuals directly interested would be able to ascertain whether or not they are citizens of the United States. It is equally important from the standpoint of the safety and the general welfare of the country that the several departments of the Government should be able to determine without any great difficulty whether certain individuals are or are not citizens of the United States.

The situation ought to be more clean-cut than it is now, because of the duty of the Government to protect citizens abroad, and because of the fact that one who is a citizen of the United States has the right to reenter this country regardless of his character, regardless of his political views, and regardless of any criminal record he may have. If he has once become a citizen of the United States and has not lost that citizenship, it does not make any difference what kind of a record he has, he still has the right to come back into the United States.

Not only do the nationality laws need clarifying and orderly arrangement in a single code, but substantive changes are necessary in connection with certain rights, with a view to preventing persons who have no real attachment to the United States from enjoying the high privilege of American nationality.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. Is the codified law brought down to date? Does it include the provision of the Smith Act, which called for the fingerprinting of aliens?

Mr. REES of Kansas. It does not. The Smith Act was passed since that time.

Mr. HANCOCK. Since this bill was introduced?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK. So this does not include all the statutes dealing with aliens?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I believe two statutes are not included, which were enacted after this bill was recommended for passage by the committee.

Mr. HANCOCK. Could not the bill be amended to include those additional provisions?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I believe it could.

Mr. HANCOCK. And would that not be wise?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I am sure it would be the wise thing to do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I am always glad to yield to my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I have glanced over the report in this matter. There are not a great many Members paying close attention to the debate. The reason for that is because they know the members of the committee have given a lot of attention to this very technical matter. I say to the gentleman from Kansas that he could have no greater compliment paid to him in connection with this matter than the fact that this bill is going to be passed unanimously, or almost unanimously, possibly without a roll call, relying entirely upon the standing of the gentleman, together with the other Members serving with him on his committee.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the compliment extended to me.

Mr. MASON. And you feel the additional responsibility upon you?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I do, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his observation.

Now, one of the most important features of this legislation relates to the acquisition of citizenship in cases of persons born abroad to parents of whom one is a citizen of the United States and the other parent is an alien. The existing law is so lax that it confers citizenship at birth upon persons who are not at all likely to be American in character or become imbued with American principles.

Reference is made to section 1 of the act of May 1934, amending section 1993 of the Revised Statutes, that provides for the acquisition of citizenship in case of a child born abroad to an American mother married to an alien, as well as one born abroad to an American father married to an alien. While this statute requires specifically that the parent should have resided in the United States prior to the birth of the child, it does not require that he or she should have resided in this country for any specified length of time.

It may be that I will not have time to discuss this bill as fully as I should, and I want to call attention to one thing which I do not think you realize that is extremely important. That is this: Do you know that a man and his wife who are Italians may come to this country and become naturalized, then return to Italy and have children born to them abroad while they are still citizens of this country, or go to Germany or some other country, and yet those children who have never been in this country are citizens of the United States, because both of their parents were American citizens when the children were born. These children continue to be citizens of the United States unless they voluntarily perform some act of expatriation.

There are thousands of them abroad now who have dual citizenship. That is, they have citizenship of some foreign country and at the same time claim citizenship in the United States. We do not know how many there are. Nobody can tell. The State Department does not know. The Immigration and Naturalization Service does not know. But nevertheless that situation exists. This measure attempts to terminate such claims of citizenship. This is something that has never heretofore been attempted. So if no other reason existed, then the correction of this laxity in our naturalization laws would be sufficient reason for the passage of this legislation. This measure provides that after a 2-year period from the passage of this act, those individuals just described who may be citizens of the United States are forever barred from claiming such citizenship, unless they come to this country and establish permanent residence. However, section 201 (g) of the code requires that the citizen parent, in order to transmit citizenship to a child born abroad, should have had—

> Ten years' residence in the United States or one of its outlying possessions, at least 5 of which were after attaining the age of 16 years.

Very important changes are found in chapter IV—Loss of nationality. Section 401 thereof not only clarifies the law concerning the loss of nationality as a result of naturalization during minority in a foreign state through the naturalization of a parent therein but specifies certain acts causing loss of American nationality, including entry into a foreign army, acceptance of an office under a foreign government, and voting in a political election in a foreign state.

Section 402 was adopted upon the special recommendation of the War Department with a view to checking the activities of persons regarded as prospective "fifth columnists." This section provides for a presumption of loss of American nationally in the case of a person born in the United States—

> When he shall remain for 6 months or longer within any foreign state of which he or either of his parents shall have been a national according to the laws of such foreign state, or within any place under control of such foreign state.

Sections 404–406 contain very important provisions under which persons who have been naturalized in this country will lose their American nationality as a result of protracted residence in foreign countries. In the case of one residing in his native land, nationality is lost after a residence of 2 years, if as a result of such residence he acquires the nationality of the foreign state in which he resides. If he does not acquire such nationality, American nationality is lost as a result of 3 years' residence in the native land. Residence of 5 years in any other foreign state has the same result. Certain exceptions are provided in sections 405 and 406. The principal exceptions relate to persons residing abroad to represent the Government of the United States, or American interests of certain specified classes.

The provisions just mentioned are deemed to be distinctly preferable to the provisions in section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907, under which a mere presumption of loss of citizenship arises, in the case of a naturalized citizen who has resided for 2 years in any other foreign state. The courts have held that this presumption means merely a loss of the right to the protection of this Government, and not a loss of American nationality itself. Therefore, under the existing law, a naturalized citizen, notwithstanding the fact that he has been granted naturalization upon the understanding that he intended to reside permanently in the United States, may reside for any number of years in a foreign state, even though it be his native land, without losing his American nationality. Such a person is not likely to have any real attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. However, he has a right, whenever he pleases, to return to the United States as a citizen thereof. Furthermore, he may marry a citizen of the foreign country in which he resides and transmit citizenship to children born therein.

As already indicated, officials of this Government, regardless of party connections, have for many years been convinced that there is great need of revising the nationality laws of the United States in such a way that the acquisition and retention of American nationality would be based upon realities. They deemed such changes necessary to further the welfare and protect the interests of this country. Conditions which have arisen in various countries since the inauguration of the project to revise and codify these laws—have made it even more important than it was before.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I yield to my good friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON. Would the gentleman care to explain how a revocation of naturalization which has once been issued may be brought about? I refer particularly to an instance of where there is fraud evidenced at the time the application for citizenship is made.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is to say, if an individual has received a certificate of naturalization by fraud, then the gentlemen's question is, How do you go about it to revoke it later on?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does the gentleman have that section before him?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes. It is 338.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

There are a number of grounds upon which the certificate may be revoked. For example, it may be discovered that the person granted naturalization had committed a felony before his certificate was granted, or it might be learned that he entered this country illegally, or made false representations at the time he filed his petition.

Mr. NORRELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. NORRELL. Is there anything in the bill providing for revocation of citizenship where a naturalized citizen becomes an undesirable person, such as becoming a believer in the philosophy of communism, or something like that? If he becomes a strong advocate of these foreign "isms," is there anything in the bill whereby we might revoke his citizenship?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The old law denies citizenship to anarchists, believers in polygamy, and some other classes. Under this bill, we believe we have covered the question of fascism, nazi-ism, communism, or any other "ism," although they are not specifically mentioned by name. Provision is made for careful investigation into the applicant's attitude in these matters, both at the time he files his declaration and when he takes out his final papers.

Mr. NORRELL. In other words, if he is that kind of person to begin with, he cannot become naturalized?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman is right.

Mr. NORRELL. And if he gets that way afterward, I assume the bill contains provisions whereby the naturalization may be revoked.

Mr. REES of Kansas. It is my opinion that it would be.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Right here I should like to call attention of Members of the House to section 305, beginning on page 10 and running over to page 13:

No person shall hereafter be naturalized as a citizen of the United States—

(a) Who advises, advocates, or teaches, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that advises, advocates, or teaches opposition to all organized government; or

(b) Who believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches—

1. The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; or

2. The duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States, or any other organized government, because of his or their official character; or

3. The unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property; or

4. Sabotage; or

(c) Who writes, publishes, or causes to be written or published, or who knowingly circulates, distributes, prints, or displays, or knowingly causes to be circulated, distributed, printed, published, or displayed or who knowingly has in his possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, or display any written or printed matter advising, advocating, or teaching opposition to all organized government, or advising, advocating, or teaching:

1. The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; or

2. The duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government; or

3. The unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property; or

4. Sabotage; or

(d) Who is a member of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, prints, publishes, or displays, or causes to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, or displayed, or that has in its possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, issue, or display, any written or printed matter of the character described in subdivision (c).

For the purpose of this section:

1. The giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to be used for the advising, advocacy, or teaching of any doctrine above enumerated shall constitute the advising, advocacy, or teaching of such doctrine; and

2. The giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to any organization, association, society, or group of the character above described shall constitute affiliation therewith, but nothing in this paragraph shall be taken as an exclusive definition of advising, advocacy, teaching, or affiliation.

The provisions of this section shall be applicable to any applicant for naturalization who at any time within a period of 10 years immediately preceding the filing of the petition for naturalization is, or has been, found to be within any of the classes enumerated in this section, notwithstanding that at the time petition is filed he may not be included in such classes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not true that in the kind of case described by the gentleman from Arkansas citizenship is revoked as a part of the sentence of expulsion? When the man is found deportable and is deported, generally his citizenship is revoked. While I am on my feet will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I yield to the distinguished Member from Ohio, a former member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, who has given these questions careful study.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, when you start out to codify the laws you do not start out primarily to change any law.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And as you proceed the burden will be not to change any law, but assume you meet up with a situation not covered by any law, that you have come to the place where the law does not speak but is silent, will the gentleman tell us what he has done in such a situation? Has he inserted a law to meet the situation?

Mr. REES of Kansas. We certainly have. We have tried to met every contingency and have made a special effort to make this measure definite and workable.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Have inconsistencies been taken care of?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes, the existing inconsistencies have been eliminated. We have tried to make this code as fair and complete as possible. Our subcommittee with the help and advice of these officials from the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the War Department who have had years and years of experience in dealing with these problems feel we have produced a very complete and clean-cut measure.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. One more question, if the gentleman will permit. I believe the gentleman is familiar with the American coalition, which is the outstanding restrictive immigration organization. Am I correct in understanding that the gentleman is ready to offer certain amendments to take care of suggestions they made.

Mr. REES of Kansas. We believe we have already met practically all of the important criticisms. We are going to offer amendments that we believe will take care of the most important questions raised. I regret that Mr. Trevor, who sent out that letter, did not appear personally before the committee. I am not criticizing him for not appearing, but if he were interested—and I know he was—I regret that he did not come before the committee to present his views while we were considering this legislation. We would have been glad to have his suggestions.

The CHAIRMAN. All time allowed the gentleman under the rule has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I notice in the bill a distinction is made between nationals and citizens. Can the gentleman give us an example of the kind of person who would be a national but not a citizen?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes. The gentleman has asked an important question. It is one of the questions that was raised by Mr. Trevor: Can an individual be a national but not a citizen. All citizens, of course, are nationals, but in some of our outlying possessions we have those who owe allegiance to the United States but who are not citizens of the United States; for instance, a native of Guam is one of our nationals but not a citizen. Have I answered the gentleman's question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman has.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement on the bill. He made a statement a moment ago about American citizens who reside in foreign countries for 2 years losing their citizenship in this country. Has ample care been taken, however, to protect Americans who are detained for as long as 5 years because of business requirements?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; that situation has been properly safeguarded in the bill.

If aliens who are naturalized return to the country of their origin and stay 2 years and do anything that would identify them as a citizen of that country, for instance, voting or taking part in an election, it would cause them to lose their citizenship. If they go back to their home countries and stay for 3 years they lose their citizenship under those circumstances. If they go to any other foreign country and stay for 5 years they lose their citizenship except only for the provisions set forth in this bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And American citizens who go abroad and participate in elections, vote in elections, or participate in wars for dictators are also in the same class.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right. I probably should emphasize the fact that the bill contains a provision whereby if a naturalized citizen of this country goes abroad and stays for a period of more than 6 months the burden rests upon him to show that he has not served in a foreign army. This is a new provision of law and is regarded as being especially important in view of the world situation today.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I presume, of course, that such an individual could go before the proper official in the State Department and indicate before he goes what he expects to do and in that way expedite his return.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; that is right.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. What evidence must such an individual submit on his return, anything but his own testimony?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The consul abroad may accept the individual's own testimony or may require additional evidence to establish that this section of the act has not been violated.

Mr. KELLER. I rather gather there is no fundamental change in the law that would not be agreed to readily.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, when I first came to Congress it was my pleasure to serve as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I enjoyed the work very much. I found it to be one of the earnest, hard-working committees of this House and many times I heard the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] bring out the fact that codification and revision of the statutes pertaining to immigration and naturalization, and to the control of those features pertaining to citizenship was badly needed.

I want to congratulate him on the appointment of this subcommittee, and especially do I want to congratulate the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] for bringing out this bill and report as well as for the work he has done on it. May I add my word of tribute to that of others to Mr. Shaughnessy, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. He has always been one of the most faithful, capable, and dependable workers aiding the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The same thing may be said of Mr. Shoemaker and others who I know have worked faithfully in the preparation of this measure.

I do not know of any argument in favor of this measure better than the message of the President when he transmitted to the Congress of the United States a recommendation pertaining to such needs. I want to read a part of that message date June 13, 1938:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I transmit herewith a report concerning the Revision and Codification of the Nationality Laws of the United States, submitted upon my request, by the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Labor. The report is accompanied by a draft code with three appendices containing explanatory matter, prepared by officials of the three interested departments who are engaged in the handling of cases relating to nationality.

The report indicates the desirability from the administrative standpoint of having the existing nationality laws now scattered among a large number of separate statutes embodied in a single, logically arranged, and understandable code. Certain changes in substance are likewise recommended.

In the enclosed letter forwarding the report to me the Secretary of State calls attention to a single question on which there is a difference of opinion between the Departments of Justice and Labor on the one hand and the Department of State on the other hand. If the committees of Congress decide to consider the question, the views of the three departments may be presented directly to them.

I commend this matter to the Congress for the attentive consideration which its wide scope and great importance demand.

Attached to that message was letter of submittal signed by the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State; Mr. Homer Cummings, Attorney General; and Mme. Perkins, Secretary of Labor.

This committee has labored long and faithfully on this matter and it has brought out what I believe to be a very able work and a very clear report. I think it would be helpful to every Member if he would get a copy of the report, keep it and study the proposed code as contrasted with the existing laws. I am pleased with the reaction that this work has received, and I am happy to see the virtual unanimous approval of this measure.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the nationality laws of the United States are revised and codified as follows:

(c) It shall be the duty of the clerk of each and every naturalization court to issue to any person admitted by such court to citizenship a certificate of naturalization and to forward to the Commissioner within 30 days after the close of the month in which such certificate was issued, a duplicate thereof, and to make and keep on file in the clerk's office a stub for each certificate so issued, whereon shall be entered a memorandum of all the essential facts set forth in such certificate, and to forward a duplicate of each such stub to the Commissioner within 30 days after the close of the month in which such certificate was issued.

(d) It shall be the duty of the clerk of each and every naturalization court to report to the Commissioner, within 30 days after the close of the month in which the final hearing and decision of the court was had, the name and number of the petition of each and every person who shall be denied naturalization together with the cause of such denial.

(e) Clerks of courts shall be responsible for all blank certificates of naturalization received by them from time to time from the Commissioner, and shall account to the Commissioner for them whenever required to do so. No certificate of naturalization received by any clerk of court which may be defaced or injured in such manner as to prevent its use as herein provided shall in any case be destroyed, but such certificate shall be returned to the Commissioner.

(f) It shall be the duty of the clerk of each and every naturalization court to cause to be filed in chronological order in separate volumes, indexed, consecutively numbered, and made a part of the records of such court, all declarations of intention and petitions for naturalization.

Revocation of naturalization

SEC. 338. (a) It shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys for the respective districts, or the Commissioner, or a Deputy Commissioner, upon affidavit showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court specified in subsection (a) of section 301 in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing suit, for the purpose of revoking and setting aside the order admitting such person to citizenship and canceling the certificate of naturalization on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such order and certificate of naturalization were illegally procured.

(c) If a person who shall have been naturalized shall, within 5 years after such naturalization, return to the country of such person's nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on the part of such person to become a permanent citizen of the United States at the time of filing such person's petition for naturalization, and, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the revocation and setting aside of the order admitting such person to citizenship and the cancelation of the certificate of naturalization as having been obtained through fraud. The diplomatic and consular officers of the United States in foreign countries shall from time to time, through the Department of State, furnish the Department of Justice with the names of those persons within their respective jurisdictions who have been so naturalized and who have taken permanent residence in the country of their nativity, or in any other foreign country, and such statements, duly certified, shall be admissible in evidence in all courts in proceedings to revoke and set aside the order admitting to citizenship and to cancel the certificate of naturalization.

(d) The revocation and setting aside of the order admitting any person to citizenship and canceling his certificate of naturalization under the provisions of subsection (a) of section 338 shall not, where such action takes place after the effective date of this act, result in the loss of citizenship or any right or privilege of citizenship which would have been derived by or available to a wife or minor child of the naturalized person had such naturalization not been revoked, but the citizenship and any such right or privilege of such wife or minor child shall be deemed valid to the extent that it shall not be affected by such revocation: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply in any case where the revocation and setting aside of the order was the result of actual fraud.

(e) When a person shall be convicted under this act of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke, set aside, and declare void the final order admitting such person to citizenship, and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be canceled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication.

(f) Whenever an order admitting an alien to citizenship shall be revoked and set aside or a certificate of naturalization shall be canceled, or both, as provided in this section, the court in which such judgment or decree is rendered shall make an order canceling such certificate and shall send a certified copy of such order to the Commissioner; in case such certificate was not originally issued by the court making such order, it shall direct the clerk of the naturalization court in which the order is revoked and set aside to transmit a copy of such order and judgment to the court out of which such certificate of naturalization shall have been originally issued. It shall thereupon be the duty of the clerk of the court receiving such certified copy of the order and judgment of the court to enter the same of record and to cancel such original certificate of naturalization, if there be any, upon the records and to notify the Commissioner of the entry of such order and of such cancelation. A person holding a certificate of naturalization or citizenship which has been canceled as provided by this section shall upon notice by the court by which the decree of cancelation was made, or by the Commissioner, surrender the same to the Commissioner.

(g) The provisions of this section shall apply not only to any naturalization granted and to certificates of naturalization and citizenship issued under the provisions of this act, but to any naturalization heretofore granted by any court, and to all certificates of naturalization and citizenship which may have been issued heretofore by any court or by the Commissioner based upon naturalization granted by any court.

Certificates of derivative citizenship

SEC. 339. A person who claims to have derived United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent or through the naturalization or citizenship of a spouse may apply to the Commissioner for a certificate of citizenship. Upon proof to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the applicant is a citizen, and that the applicant's alleged citizenship was derived as claimed, and upon taking and subscribing before a member of the Service within the United States to the oath of allegiance required by this act of a petitioner for naturalization, such individual shall be furnished by the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner with a certificate of citizenship, but only if such individual is at the time within the United States.

Revocation of certificates issued by the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner

SEC. 340. The Commissioner is authorized to cancel any certificate of citizenship or any copy of a declaration of intention or certificate of naturalization heretofore or hereafter issued by the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner if it shall appear to the Commissioner's satisfaction that such document was illegally or fraudulently obtained from the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner; but the person to whom such document has been issued, shall be given at such person's last known place of address, written notice of the intention to cancel such document with the reasons therefor and shall be given at least 60 days in which to show cause why such document should not be canceled. The cancelation of any such document shall affect only the document and not the citizenship status of the person in whose name the document was issued.

Documents and copies issued by the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner

SEC. 341. (a) A person who claims to have been naturalized in the United States under section 323 of this act may make application to the Commissioner for a certificate of naturalization. (b) If any certificate of naturalization or citizenship issued to any citizen, or any declaration of intention furnished to any declarant, is lost, mutilated, or destroyed, the citizen or declarant may make application to the Commissioner for a new certificate or declaration. If the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner finds that the certificate or declaration is lost, mutilated, or destroyed, he shall issue to the applicant a new certificate or declaration. If the certificate or declaration has been mutilated, it shall be surrendered to the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner before the applicant may receive such new certificate or declaration. If the certificate or declaration has been lost, the applicant or any other person who may come into possession of it is hereby required to surrender it to the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner.

(c) The Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner shall issue for any naturalized citizen, on such citizen's application therefor, a special certificate of naturalization for use by such citizen only for the purpose of obtaining recognition as a citizen of the United States by a foreign state. Such certificate when issued shall be furnished to the Secretary of State for transmission to the proper authority in such foreign state.

(d) If the name of any naturalized citizen has, subsequent to naturalization, been changed by order of any court of competent jurisdiction, or by marriage, the citizen may make application for a new certificate of naturalization in the new name of such citizen. If the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner finds the name of the applicant to have been changed as claimed, the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner shall issue to the applicant a new certificate and shall notify the naturalization court of such action.

(e) The Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner is authorized to make and issue, without fee, certifications of any part of the naturalization records of any court, or of any certificate of naturalization or citizenship, for use in complying with any statute, State or Federal, or in any judicial proceeding. SEC. 408. The loss of nationality under this act shall result solely from the performance by a national of the acts or fulfillment of the conditions specified in this act.

SEC. 409. Nationality shall not be lost under the provisions of section 404 or 407 of this act until the expiration of 1 year following the date of the approval of this act: Provided, however, That a naturalized person who shall have become subject to the presumption that he has ceased to be an American citizen as provided for in the second paragraph of section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. 1228), and who shall not have overcome it under the rules in effect immediately preceding the date of the approval of this act, shall continue to be subject to such presumption for the period of 1 year following the date of the approval of this act unless it is overcome during such period.

If the report of the diplomatic or consular officer is approved by the Secretary of State, a copy of the certificate shall be forwarded to the Department of Labor, for its information, and the diplomatic or consular office in which the report was made shall be directed to forward a copy of the certificate to the person to whom it relates.

Mr. DICKSTEIN (interrupting reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean that any amendments may be offered?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is my intention.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, the amendments just adopted to section 402 of H. R. 9980, a bill to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, correct a feature of this section that would have stigmatized the American citizens of the two incorporated Territories of the United States—that is, Alaska and Hawaii—as alone incurring the presumption of expatriation provided by the section. As first introduced, such presumption was limited to a national "born in any incorporated Territory of the United States" or of "a parent who was born in any incorporated Territory of the United States."

I called this provision to the attention of the chairman of the committee in the following letter:

JUNE 14, 1940.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman, Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have been studying the bill which you introduced, H. R. 9980, "to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code," and desire to congratulate you on the excellence of this greatly needed legislation. Both the bill and the accompanying report show the result of much study and hard work.

However, I do want to suggest an amendment to section 402, which prescribes that "a national of the United States who was born in any incorporated Territory of the United States or who was born in any place outside of the jurisdiction of the United States of a parent who was born in any incorporated Territory of the United States shall be presumed to have expatriated himself under subsection (c) or (d) of section 401, when he shall remain for 6 months or longer within any foreign state of which he or either of his parents shall have been a national according to the laws of such foreign state, or within any place under control of such foreign state, and such presumption shall exist until overcome, whether or not the individual has returned to the United States."

Whatever may be the reasons for this section, it singles out the two incorporated Territories of the United States for special treatment different from that accorded the several States, and it places upon the American citizens of those two Territories a presumption of guilt under subsection (c) and (d) of section 401, which is not applied to the citizens of the several States. I am not an attorney and cannot speak with any authority on the legal aspects of this provision. However, I am under the impression that it is not constitutional.

If there is some abuse which this section attempts to remedy, the actual language of the section would punish the innocent with the guilty. There may be many nationals of the United States born in Alaska and Hawaii who in all good faith might prolong their visits to the country of their parents' origin beyond 6 months and find themselves expatriated without having violated the provisions of section 401 in any particular. It is also true that there may be any number of nationals of the United States born in any one of the several States who may visit the country of their parents' origin for periods of 6 months or more and who could with equal justice be presumed to have offended the provisions of section 401.

In other words, there is no justification for singling out the nationals of incorporated territories in this instance. If the objective of this section is considered necessary or desirable, certainly it is just as important to extend this feature of the law to American nationals wherever born. No valid reason exists for adopting a different procedure for United States nationals born in Hawaii than that prescribed for those born in California, for instance.

May I, therefore, suggest and request that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization accept the following as a committee amendment:

Line 24, page 86, after the word "in", strike out the words "any incorporated territory of."

Also, in lines 1 and 2, page 87, after the word "in", strike out "any incorporated territory of."

I know you will realize that as a Delegate in Congress from Hawaii it is incumbent upon me to protect the interests of the American citizens of my Territory whose loyalty to the United States cannot be questioned. Legislation such as is proposed in section 402 is no more necessary for Hawaii than any other part of the United States.

With highest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely,

SAMUEL W. KING.

As this matter was also one of considerable importance to the Territory of Alaska I called the attention of the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] to the language of the bill as originally introduced. He in turn addressed the chairman of the Committee and the Deputy Commissioner of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, as follows:

JUNE 8, 1940.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman, Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, contains provision in section 402 for a presumption of expatriation of a national to the United States who is born in any incorporated Territory of the United States or who is born in any place outside of the jurisdiction of the United States of a parent who was born in any incorporated Territory of the United States, if such person shall remain for 6 months or longer within any foreign state of which he or either of his parents shall have been a national.

This provision is clearly a discrimination against those who reside in the Territories as compared with those who reside in any of the 48 States. If the rule is a good one, I am unable to understand why it should not apply to the United States and all places subject to its jurisdiction rather than incorporated Territories alone. In Alaska a considerable number of our citizens were born abroad, most of them in the Scandinavian countries. If section 402 should become law, any one of these citizens who happen to remain abroad more than 6 months would be faced with the presumption of loss of citizenship, whereas under similar circumstances a citizen born abroad but residing in one of the States would not be affected.

I respectfully suggest that the entire section 402 should be stricken out, or else should be amended so that its provisions will apply to the United States and all Territories subject to its jurisdiction, and not only to the incorporated Territories.

Sincerely yours,

ANTHONY J. DIMOND,
Delegate.

JUNE 8, 1940.

EDWARD J. SHAUGHNESSY, Esq.,
Deputy Commissioner, Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SHAUGHNESSY: Attached hereto is copy of self-explanatory letter of even date addressed by me to Hon. Samuel Dickstein, chairman of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, with respect to section 402 of H. R. 9980, a bill to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States.

So far as I am aware, there are only two incorporated Territories, one being Alaska and the other Hawaii. I am sure that there is no condition of affairs existing in Alaska which would justify the application to that Territory of the provisions of section 402 when all of the 48 States are excepted from its provisions.

The proposed legislation embraced in this section is, in my judgment, highly discriminatory and, therefore, objectionable to the citizens of the Territory. Putting aside for the moment the question of the constitutionality of section 402, I suggest that on grounds of public policy no such legislation should be enacted.

Sincerely yours,

ANTHONY J. DIMOND, Delegate.

The chairman of the committee referred the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] and myself to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], chairman of the subcommittee who drafted this measure. The gentleman from Kansas accorded us every opportunity to present our arguments in opposition to this singling out of the Territories for different treatment. Conferences were called between the representatives of the departments interested, and the amendments that would strike out the objectionable language were accepted. The gentleman from Kansas obtained committee approval of the proposed amendments, which have now been accepted by the House. I know I voice the sentiments of the Delegate from Alaska when I join with other members in expressing appreciation of the thoroughness which the gentleman from Kansas has shown in handling this difficult and complicated legislation. I wish further to express my personal thanks for his consideration of the special problems of the Territories.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further committee amendments?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking some questions of the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], the real author of the bill. When I questioned the distinguished gentleman from Kansas heretofore today, he indicated that the objections that were made by the American coalition had been practically met. As I understand, the amendments offered by the committee do not meet any of the objections offered by the coalition. The amendments offered are only those more or less clerical changes like the substitution of the words "Department of Justice" for "Department of Labor," because the Bureau of Naturalization has been transferred from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I will answer the gentleman's question, and we can go right down through the objections.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to ask first with reference to section 101 (a).

Mr. REES of Kansas. That has to do with the question of nationals. I discussed that a few minutes ago. The term "nationals" has been used for years and years in the State Department, and it has been used in our treaties. It would be almost impossible to go along without that term. President Coolidge, together with the distinguished Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Hughes, while Secretary of State, signed a treaty with Bulgaria wherein the term "nationals" is used several times and is defined as "a person owing allegiance to the United States." The term "nationals" has been used in a number of other treaties. It is necessary to use the term. So far as those who made the objection to which the gentlemen refers are concerned, I know they would be satisfied with this term because it has always been used, and it is necessary to write it into the law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I quite agree with the gentleman. If section 101 (a) should be stricken, then naturally section 101 (b) should also be stricken.

Mr. REES of Kansas. It certainly would not do any good to strike the word "nationals" out of the bill. It would not change the law any.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I agree with the gentleman, because I believe that if it is stricken out something else must be put in its place.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That would have to be done.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let me proceed further. Did the gentleman go into the objection that this gentleman raises with reference to the fact that section 101 (a) and section 101 (b) applies to residents of Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands or Hawaii or any other territory or possession that may become a State at some time or another?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes. We are in no wise making a State out of Puerto Rico. The term "State" is used only insofar as the question of naturalization is concerned. That is all there is to this. It is used only insofar as the naturalization laws are concerned. The citizens of Puerto Rico are citizens of the United States with the exception of a certain few there. Under a law that was passed about the time we took over Puerto Rico it was provided that if the people of Puerto Rico so wished they could retain their allegiance to the Spanish Government. It just seems to us that if Puerto Rico is a part of the United States then the people born in Puerto Rico ought to be citizens of the United States. This bill places them in the position of becoming citizens of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand, a legal, bona fide resident of Puerto Rico is a citizen of the United States.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is the present law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And a legal, bona fide resident of the Virgin Islands is a citizen of the United States.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman from Ohio is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This is the proposition this gentleman advances. Let me read this sentence:

These are unincorporated territories of the United States, and in a broad sense these two sections would confer statehood upon these unincorporated territories.

Mr. REES of Kansas. No; if it conferred statehood I would certainly object to it. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it can be easily explained because they are not citizens of unincorporated States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I appreciate that what we do in this bill could not confer statehood, but it could complicate the thing if we do something here that would give citizens of that territory full recognition, the same as we would citizens of the State of New York.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I agree with the gentleman that we do not want to confer statehood on Puerto Rico, and we do not do it in this bill. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that right now our courts down there naturalize citizens, and they have been doing it all the time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have apprised the gentleman of these objections, and I am going to yield to his superior information and knowledge about the subject.

Let me proceed to the next objection, if I may.

Regarding section 201 (a) and (b) no change is suggested with the exception of the deletion in the first line of the words "nationals and."

That would revert back to our other objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let us proceed:

Section 201 (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h) should be stricken from the code. The Revised Statutes, section 1993, as amended, should be reenacted as amended. The proposed new section would complicate a situation and extend citizenship too liberally.

What has the gentleman to say about that? I am referring to the second paragraph from the bottom on the first page, which starts "section 201," and so forth.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is the gentleman reading from the bill or is he reading from a letter of the coalition?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am reading from a letter from the American coalition. The gentleman from Kansas and I both understand what we are covering. We have come up to this gradually.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does not the gentleman believe other Members should understand to what the gentleman is referring? Would the gentleman be good enough to tell me where it is?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I will do that. It will take but a moment.

In section 201 there is a provision that Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts may become citizens of the United States. There are only a few of them. Under the present law there is a question whether or not Indians are citizens. We clear that up, that is all there is to this. The Eskimos are in the same category. There is a little group of folks who live in the Aleutian Islands near Alaska, and we take care of them. This is clarifying the matter for once and for all so we will not have any argument about it one way or the other.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then the gentleman's justification for that is that if we do not clear it up there will be a loophole and there will be some people not provided for and their citizenship will be indefinite.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Now, let us see what is set out in section 303.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does the gentleman want to knock anything out of section 303? I just do not believe that he does.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That has to do with African nativity?

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And at the present time the gentleman holds they are pretty well taken care of and there is no complaint about that.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think so; yes. I do not think either the gentleman from Ohio or myself wants to change the present law as it affects the naturalization of colored persons. If someone wants to offer such an amendment, we will be glad to discuss it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That would be my understanding of that also.

Let us go down to section 307 and see what the gentleman has to say with reference to that:

This subsection should be stricken from the code, as it is indefensible and grossly illogical for a foreigner to claim residence in the United States because he may have happened to have served on a coal barge owned by the United States at some time, when he was, in fact, in the country in violation of the law.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The author of the letter probably has given a rather broad interpretation to this section. Under the present law, if an individual does serve on a ship that belongs to the Government of the United States, the time that he serves on that ship is included in the time that he may have lived in the United States. The present law says that if he serves on a ship that has its home port in the United States, then that time is included; but the old law gave, I believe, about 3 years' time. This code provides that if he does serve he must serve there at least 5 years, and it must be a ship whose home port is in the United States and also must be an American ship. We have strengthened the present law to this extent.

Mr. MASON. It really tightens it up.

Mr. REES of Kansas. In this respect, the ship is regarded as United States soil.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let us see if this would be a fair statement of the fact. This being simply a bill to regulate naturalization, the individual referred to here would have to prove lawful entry in order to become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. REES of Kansas. He would have to come into this country lawfully.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And simply having served on a coal barge in and out of the country would not be lawful entry.

Mr. REES of Kansas. No; he would have to come in lawfully and show that he had served on this particular ship. I do not know whether it could be a coal barge, but I presume a coal barge might come within that category, although I am not sure.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I see it, then, if you have prepared this bill with all due care, and I know you have, you can take the position that if you have omitted anything those omissions can be cured in the Senate.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. You have not invaded the rights of those who control the matter of legal entry into this country.

Mr. REES of Kansas. No.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is a province of another department, and in order to have the right to be naturalized at all, a man must always be able to prove lawful entry.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is one objection many people may have to some features of this bill. If they thought it would permit a man to come in unlawfully, and in spite of his unlawful entry to hide behind this new provision of the law, it would be a very unfortunate situation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes, that is right, but this measure does not have anything to do with the question of immigration at all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There are many corrections and criticisms made here, but I am not going to be tedious and press them all. I have done this simply that I might bring to the attention of the gentleman and the committee the importance of the measure and to indicate that experts can find many loopholes, and today one of the biggest immigration experts in the United States told me that this bill was full of loopholes. I said, "If you will stop long enough to show me what they are and how to correct them, I will be glad to try to do it." There is one thing about it, however, we can take refuge in the fact that this is not the only day we are going to live, we hope, and it is not the only day Congress is going to be in session, and if this bill is not perfect, we can perfect it as we have been compelled to do in connection with every other gigantic step we have taken in connection with new legislation of this kind.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit one further statement, there is a paragraph in that letter calling attention to the question of fingerprinting. That was taken care of by the law passed by this Congress on August 27, 1940.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is, the Smith bill?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I hope we are doing what is best and that time will prove it. If not, we must change it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN, having resumed the chair, Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9980, pursuant to House resolution 544, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. DICKSTEIN a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks by including the message from the President, the submission of the report to the President by the Attorney General, the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include sundry letters and telegrams. I will say this exceeds the limit, but I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under previous unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the discussion of the bill H. R. 9980, I ask permission to include some correspondence with various departments of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and the business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for one-half hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, would the Chair indicate what the program is for tomorrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two rules from the Committee on Rules. One of them makes in order a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, H. R. 7236, known as the tort-disputes bill. There is another report from the Committee on Rules on the bill S. 1610, an act to prevent discrimination against the graduates of certain schools.

Mr. MICHENER. That is from the Committee on the Civil Service?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is from the Committee on the Civil Service.

Then the Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] for a unanimous-consent request on a bill which he says has a unanimous report from his committee.

Unless these rules, or one of them, is called up there will be no program for tomorrow except unanimous-consent requests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ELLIS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE EXPANSION—REPLY TO CONGRESSMAN JOHN M'DOWELL'S VERSE AND HUMOR, HIS RHAPSODY AGAINST THE MIDDLE WEST, AND HIS CASTIGATION OF THE OZARK HILLBILLIES

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in defense of the Middle West, of its 62 Members of the House, and of the so-called Ozark hillbillies, all of whom our esteemed colleague from Pennsylvania, the Honorable JOHN MCDOWELL, of Pittsburgh, so thoroughly castigated during my absence last Wednesday while on a defense mission in the West.

Referring to an address which I made in the House on August 26, and which appears in the Appendix of the RECORD, at page 5241 the gentleman stated, on September 4, page 11517 of the RECORD:

> The whole gist of Mr. ELLIS' contention appears to be that Pittsburgh is a rich and busy city, turning out the metals and the hardware and the millions of other objects that are used by people all over the world; and we Pittsburghers confess to the truth of that; but Mr. ELLIS also appears to want to tear down our factories, throw out of work our workingmen, close up our mines and our mills, and remove them to the wild hills of the Ozarks where the business and the prosperity will redound to the everlasting glory of the Ozark hillbillies.

Not until I checked my gifted friend's autobiography in Who's Who in America and found that he lists himself as a "contributor of verse and humor," could I comprehend his eloquent and satirical allusions.

In my statement of August 26 I said not a disparaging word of Pittsburgh, nor of Pennsylvania, nor of any man. To keep the record straight, the situation was briefly this: Nearly a billion dollars of our defense appropriations had been allocated for defense contracts and for the establishment of new defense industries. Most of them had gone to New England. Practically nothing had gone to the Middle West. Not a penny had gone to my State of Arkansas. All this in spite of statements by the President, the National Defense Commission, and the War Department that, in the interest of national defense, many of the proposed new defense factories should be located in those invulnerable areas far distant from the borders. Our people were getting restless. Business and civic leaders of Arkansas, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and North and South Dakota had called a meeting at Kansas City for August 30 in an effort to convince the Government of the logic of its own original thought. The 62 Members of the House from those 9 States had organized for the same purpose and elected as our chairman an able young member of the gentleman's own party. On August 23, Manager Charles E. Robinson, of the Pittsburgh Commission for Industrial Expansion, had written the Honorable William S. Knudsen, of the National Defense Commission, charging that "political pressure is being used to obtain Government plants for 9 Midwestern States unsuited to industry."

In my statement I said, and now repeat:

> Shame on you, Mr. Robinson. * * * Already Pennsylvania has received, out of the vast billions we have appropriated, $182,835,551. Pittsburgh alone has received $12,806,480. Arkansas has received exactly nothing. We love you, Pittsburgh; marvel at your indeterminable industries. We are proud that we of these nine States constitute one-sixth of your domestic market.

The able editor from Pittsburgh, or Wilkinsburg, found cause in my statement to say, with fear and trembling:

> My home has been assailed, my people have been accused, my State has been defamed. * * * I thoroughly agree with Manager Robinson. * * * What manner of reasoning is it that would break up the highly geared mechanical circumstance of the greatest industrial city in the world? * * *

I would humbly suggest that, had the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] read my statement less recklessly, he would not have become so exacerbated. I challenge him or any other reasonable man to point out any statement or implication wherein I "assailed his home," "accused his people," "defamed his State," or manifested any desire to "break up the greatest industrial city in the world." Nor did I even criticize the Government for allocating $12,000,000 of defense funds to Pittsburgh. I have the confidence in my Government to believe the expenditure was wise, and I am happy for you, but I am disappointed to learn that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] "thoroughly agrees with Mr. Robinson" in his ominous fulmination designed to extirpate the inestimable value of the Middle West to the defense of this Nation.

The gentleman's personal reference to me as having been affected by war hysteria and his reference to Arkansas as a State best suited for boiling delirium tremens out of alcoholics is beneath the dignity of a Member of this House, but perhaps is justified as another of his "contributions to verse and humor."

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield.

Mr. NORRELL. Do you know how he managed to learn that that treatment was given down in Arkansas?

Mr. ELLIS. A lot of people learn by personal experience, but, of course, I am sure he did not learn that way.

Incidentally, the gentleman in his address referred to the conscription bill as "this infamous draft bill" and 3 days later voted against it. His party leader, "Windy" Willkie, finally decided he was for it. Is that war hysteria?

We want nothing from Pittsburgh. There is enough for all. Is not defense as sacred for us as it is for you? You have not heard of us writing the Defense Commission objecting to anybody getting anything. Out West we believe in the philosophy of "live and let live." Furthermore, and I refer to Mr. Robinson, we believe in keeping our noses out of other people's business.

Who is Mr. Robinson anyway? Why, he is the manager of the Pittsburgh Commission for Industrial Expansion. Is he the paid lobbyist of Pittsburgh? Apparently his duties consist also in looking after the industrial contraction of the rest of the Nation.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Has the gentleman any foundation for claiming that Mr. Robinson is a paid lobbyist? How does the gentleman know he is paid at all?

Mr. ELLIS. It is my information that he is the manager of the industrial commission of Pittsburgh. Whether he is paid money for it I do not know, but he speaks for Pittsburgh.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman made the statement that Mr. Robinson was a paid lobbyist from Pittsburgh. Pittsburgh is my home town. From all I understand Mr. Robinson is an industrialist there. He is in business, and he is cooperating with other industrialists there to gear up the Pittsburgh industrial enterprises.

Mr. ELLIS. Then, if I am wrong about his being paid, I stand corrected, but that is not the point. The point is—and I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whom I admire greatly, feels this way, too—that he should not be writing the Defense Commission asking them not to give new industries to the Middle West.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am sure the gentleman from Arkansas will agree that contracts under the defense program of the Government should be allotted to that section of the country which can produce most economically and rapidly. He will also agree that Pittsburgh is the industrial heart of America and is better suited to give immediate response to this urgent demand for national preparedness. Is that not correct?

Mr. ELLIS. I agree with the gentleman. I am talking about new plants for the Middle West. We do not object to Pittsburgh's getting any or all the contracts she can get, but we do object to the gentleman's objecting to our getting anything.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If the gentleman will——

Mr. ELLIS. I am sorry, I cannot yield further, Mr. Speaker; my time is limited.

The trouble with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] and Mr. Robinson is that, in the words of Mr. Richard W. Robbins, secretary of the Midwest Defense Conference—

> It is pork if it is for the Middle West, but sugar if it is for Pittsburgh.

Except for those two great barriers, high freight rates and a shortage of cheap, developed power—both of which we are endeavoring to eliminate—we would have already been in this critical hour assisting Pittsburgh and the industrial East materially in their struggle to supply the existing shortage in war materials.

In his address the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania made this bold prophecy:

> I shall even venture to make the prediction that the Government of the United States will agree with Manager Robinson.

In his next breath he said:

> The trend of the present administration to break up established and substantial and historic concentrations of industry and labor and skill has been growing more pronounced since 1932.

A bit inconsistent, is not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL]? In the second breath I know you were wrong, and I believe you were in the first. As proof of the one I refer you to the daily reports of the ever-increasing profits of the great corporations of the country. As proof of the other I quote the Honorable Ralph Budd, member of the Defense Commission, in his address to the Midwest Defense Conference at Kansas City on August 30, which, by the way, was attended by more than 800 delegates from these 9 States:

> Because industry has found it necessary competitively and economically to locate in the East, it does not follow that defense industries should be so located. There are many reasons why the opposite should be true.

I also quote in full a letter which I have received from the able Secretary of War, also a member of the gentleman's own party:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 23, 1940.

Hon. CLYDE T. ELLIS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. ELLIS: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of August 20 calling attention to your statment on the floor of the House regarding the location of new production plants for the manufacture of munitions.

An important principle which we have been endeavoring to follow in the location of new munitions plants is that as far as practicable they shall be placed in interior locations, so as to minimize the risk of bombing attack. Another principle is that we should avoid, if possible, erecting munitions plants in areas already congested with manufacturing establishments essential to the national defense.

In locating the first plants under our program of construction the urgency of the requirements has placed these plants where the earliest possible production would be obtained. As the program proceeds, however, and the high priority plants have been located, the War Department will be able to adhere more closely to the above principles. The part of the program so far initiated is only a small portion of the total and it is therefore expected that interior areas will receive more and more consideration as the program develops.

You may be assured that the State of Arkansas and others in the Mississippi Valley will receive full consideration in locating new munitions plants under the defense program.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

These able men recognize, and President Roosevelt recognizes, and every one of my 61 colleagues from these 9 States, Democrats and Republicans, recognize that the great, impregnable Middle West, hundreds of miles from any border line, rich in practically all the minerals of the land, rich in coal, oil, gas, and potential water power, home of the country's purest Anglo-Saxon blood, bread basket of the Nation, is our most unconquerable area, and hence the area that, if recognized, offers the greatest guaranty against a repetition of the battle of France.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON. I compliment the gentleman on his fight for some industrial defense expenditures for the Middle West. I assure the gentleman and the House that we of the Middle West are not asking for any special favors. All we want is recognition and consideration in this great national-defense program, and if we get some of the crumbs we shall be well satisfied.

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I join in complimenting the gentleman on his very able presentation. May I not observe, however, that although the Secretary of War states in that splendid letter that he proposes to put these defense activities in the Middle West where they will not be vulnerable in time of emergency, yet it seems they go right on ignoring the Middle West.

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman, but we hope that is only temporary.

"Hillbillies?" Yes, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL], but true and unselfish Americans. We have spilled our blood on the battlefields of every war in which the liberties and ideals that we cherish and the democracy that we love were imperiled. For half a century we have suffered the discrimination which I strive to end and the ridicule which you stoop to perpetuate.

"Contributor of verse and humor!" "Assailed," "accused," "defamed"; castigator of "Ozark hillbillies"; authority on "delirium tremens."—the gentleman's rhapsody on the Middle West. [Applause.]

SENATE

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, before whom all things created are even as the dust. Thou art hidden behind the curtain of sense; Thou art mysterious in Thine almighty power, and incomprehensible in Thy greatness; yet we are privileged to call Thee Father. Thou dost keep within Thy grasp the threads of each day's life, and, because it is Thy spirit that stirs within our spirit's inmost room, we know all will be well.

Make this a day of spiritual joy and peace as we commit our lives into Thine own keeping. Do Thou control our thoughts and feelings, direct our energies, instruct our minds, sustain our wills, and make our hands skillful to serve Thee, our feet swift to walk Thy ways. Help us to keep our eyes fixed upon Thine everlasting beauty, and do Thou touch our lips with live coals from off Thine altar, making them eloquent in testimony to Thy love. And since it is Thou, O Blessed One, who dost appoint our lot, we beseech Thee to make this day's work to have a share in the upbuilding of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, in whose name and for whose sake our fervent prayers are said. Amen.

CONSTRUCTION OF GRAVING DRYDOCK IN NEW YORK HARBOR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4165) to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building, which were, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of the following public work projects at a cost not to exceed the amount stated after each item enumerated:

Third naval district: Graving drydock and accessory construction in New York Harbor, including acquisition of site, $10,000,000.

Caribbean area: Graving drydock and accessory construction, including acquisition of site, $7,500,000.

First naval district: Improvements to South Boston drydock, $6,180,000.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments, but I think a brief explanation should be made, as the amendments are of some importance.

The Senate originally passed a bill providing for the building of a drydock in New York Harbor in conjunction with the Port Authority of New York. The Government was to pay a large subsidy to the Port Authority, and they were to build the drydock, and it was to be used jointly for commercial and naval purposes, the Navy having prior rights to use the dock. The House has substituted for the Senate bill a measure providing that the drydock shall be built directly and owned and operated by the Navy itself at a cost of $10,000,000.

It also provides for a graving drydock in the Caribbean area, to be built for $7,500,000, and for improvements in the drydock in the first naval district, to cost $6,180,000.

The Committee on Naval Affairs approves of the building of these drydocks.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Where in the Caribbean zone is the drydock to be built?

Mr. WALSH. It is not yet known or determined.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that a drydock in connection with the new base program?

Mr. WALSH. No; it has been contemplated for some time, irrespective of that program.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator does not know whether it comes under that program or a previous reference?

Mr. WALSH. In fact, there was a recommendation made a year ago for the establishment of a drydock in that area. A bill was then pending, but it was not pressed, because it was not thought to be of necessity at that time. The present emergency had not arisen.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This is not a part of the new program?

Mr. WALSH. It is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, for the past 6 years the grand lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of North Dakota, has conducted for high-school pupils throughout the State an oratorical contest on some pertinent phase of Americanism.

This year, the seventh of the contest, the subject chosen is the Monroe Doctrine, its aim and purposes. Probably about 2,000 young men and women will be engaged in this contest, through the local contests, the district eliminations, the regional eliminations, and finally the State-wide finals.

It occurs to me that the topic chosen for this year is extremely significant and highly interesting. The executive secretary of the grand lodge, Mr. W. J. Hutcheson, of Fargo, solicited my help in obtaining for these contestants a short, easily understandable discussion of the Monroe Doctrine available for distribution on a wide scale.

I sought in vain for such a publication. I have, therefore, prepared a brief history of the Monroe Doctrine, incorporating its aims and purposes, which I desire to have entered in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that excerpts therefrom can be made available to those who will compete in this splendid program. I ask unanimous consent for its incorporation in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE MONROE DOCTRINE: ITS HISTORY, AIMS, AND PURPOSES

The United States had not been a nation very long before it recognized an essential truth which is still the principal element of American foreign policy. That truth was that if the hard-won freedom of America was to be maintained it was going to be necessary for this Nation to stay entirely away from the tangles and strife of European power politics. Right along with that determination and just as forceful, there was a determination not to permit any European power to interfere with any of the Americas.

This conviction, despite a treaty of alliance with France, which had grown out of the Revolutionary War, led America, in 1793, to lay down a declaration of neutrality. The Farewell Address of Washington had been more than a warning; it was a statement of deep-seated principles:

"The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible," he said. "Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence therefore it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities."

FRIENDLY TO SOUTH AMERICANS

But the United States had watched with strong interest the struggle of the peoples of South America to rid themselves of domination by European powers. The United States recognized the Republic of Colombia in 1822, the Government of Buenos Aires and the states of Mexico and Chile early in 1823. In 1824 it recognized the independent Empire of Brazil, and in the same year the federation of Central American states.

The Holy Alliance in Europe, formed by the sovereigns of Austria, Russia, and Prussia, was seeking to enforce the divine right of kings as opposed to the growth of liberal government. France joined the alliance in an attempt to put an eternal end to representative government, and there began an effort to overthrow the new governments built out of the old colonies of Spain in the Western Hemisphere.

This was the way matters stood in August of 1823. President Monroe, consulting with Jefferson and Madison, discovered that Jefferson regarded the new threat from Europe as a question of the utmost importance.

"Our first and fundamental maxim," said Jefferson, "should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs."

PRINCIPLE LAID DOWN IN 1823

With the advice of his Cabinet, President Monroe, on December 2, 1823, formulated a message to Congress which was a declaration of policy for the United States and which incorporated what is known as the Monroe Doctrine.

The doctrine is contained in two paragraphs in President Monroe's message. The first paragraph, however, grew out of something else than the situation respecting the former Spanish colonies south of us. It grew out of Russian claims on the northwest coast of North America. The Russian Czar in 1821 had declared that citizens of other nations would be prohibited from navigating and fishing within 100 miles of the northwest coast of North America, from Bering Straits to the fifty-first parallel, north latitude. There were protests, of course, from the United States, and President Monroe covered the situation in this language:

"In the discussions to which this interest has given rise, and in the arrangements by which they may terminate, the occasion has been judged proper for asserting as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers."

SECOND PARAGRAPH SIGNIFICANT

It was the second paragraph of President Monroe's message which touched on the situation of the former Spanish colonies.

He said:

"In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries and make preparation for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere, we are of necessity, more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the Allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America * * * We owe, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose indpendence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny, but any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. * * * It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can anyone believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition, in any form, with indifference."

A SIMPLE BUT STRONG POLICY

In very brief language the two paragraphs together mean just this:

1. We want no part of anything in Europe and we aren't interested in interfering in Europe. Our best interests are served by staying out of European power politics.

2. But we intend that Europe shall stay out of the Americas; we will not stand for its interference in our affairs or the affairs of our sister republics, and any European nation attempting to so interfere in any of these nations will have us to reckon with.

The Monroe Doctrine is really the foundation stone of American foreign policy. It has proved the wise course through the years, and most American Presidents have removed the Monroe Doctrine from its resting place, dusted it off, and said, "This goes for me too" whenever it looked as if Europe had forgotten about it.

There have been some modifications in the original Monroe Doctrine; that is, its application has been widened. All non-American powers were destined to take heed, not only European powers. And it was interpreted to imply that no power which had possessions in this hemisphere, not affected under the original declaration, could extend such holdings. Essentially, these modifications in no way changed the fundamental principle, but, indeed, strengthened it.

The French tried to intervene in Mexico while America was busy with its War between the States, and they attempted to take advantage of our unhappy internal situation. They shortly discovered that busy as we were, we had not forgotten the Monroe Doctrine.

IT HAS OFTEN BEEN APPLIED

There were instances, such as the settlement of the controversy over the boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana in 1895 to 1897, when the doctrine was cited as a case in point, and again there was the matter of disposing of German, British, and Italian claims against Venezuela in 1902–4.

It is necessary to keep in mind that the Monroe Doctrine is not an act of Congress. It has been approved by the Congress, of course, but it could well be said that it draws its main strength from the very spirit and sentiment of the American people themselves. It is not part of any treaty, and it is not part of any international agreement.

It is as American as sweet corn or baked beans.

It expresses the way we, as Americans, interested in our own country first, last, and all the time, have always felt and, if we are wise, will always continue to feel. As we have grown as a nation, our influence in world affairs has grown, too; but the Monroe Doctrine has been an effective force against ambitions of some few to extend our influence into quarters which would be dangerous to our own welfare.

But while it has no basis itself in a treaty, the Monroe Doctrine has had to be recognized in treaty making and in international deliberations. There were two conventions in The Hague, Holland, one in 1899 and one in 1907, the declarations of which took careful note that nothing therein should apply to the United States position as covered by the Monroe Doctrine.

NO THOUGHT OF AGGRESSION

Another essential in any consideration of the Monroe Doctrine is that it does not carry with it any thought of aggression on our part. It carries with it no threat to the security of any other American state. Not by any means can it be construed as a protectorate over other American countries. Such protectorate would naturally be resented by them and, indeed, be dangerous to them.

It simply means that our sister republics are free to pursue their individual ways as they see fit, but that they may enjoy at all times the knowledge that no non-American power can interfere in their affairs without reckoning with the United States.

President Theodore Roosevelt put it this way:

"It (the Monroe Doctrine) is in no wise intended as hostile to any nation in the Old World. Still less is it intended to give cover to any aggression by one New World power at the expense of any other. It is simply a step, and a long step, toward assuring the universal peace of the world by securing the possibility of a permanent peace in this hemisphere."

Again, at a later date, he said:

"In many parts of South America there has been much misunderstanding of the attitude and purposes of the United States toward the American Republics. An idea had become prevalent that our assertion of the Monroe Doctrine implied or carried with it an assumption of superiority and of a right to exercise some kind of protectorate over the countries to whose territory that doctrine applies. Nothing could be farther from the truth."

HELPS TO KEEP THE PEACE

The doctrine has gone a long way toward keeping peace in the Western Hemisphere. It is an example of how a strong nation, wanting only to mind its own business, and with no selfish ambitions of its own, can serve the cause of peace in at least a part of the world.

Other nations, unlike the United States, have operated on the basis of alliances, to maintain a balance of power, or else made no secret of aggressive ambitions.

For 2,000 years in Europe, they have been fighting a war on the average of every 25 years, the boundary lines shifting like sand dunes after each engagement, but never has the result of any such war left the people of either the victorious or defeated nations any happier, better governed, or better fed.

No other nation had a hand in the declaration of the Monroe Doctrine, and no other nation need be consulted as to its application. President Woodrow Wilson once emphasized this fact:

"The Monroe Doctrine was proclaimed by the United States on her own authority. It has always been maintained and always will be maintained upon her own responsibility."

So it was not only the Hague conventions, but also the League of Nations Covenant which found it necessary to take recognition of the Monroe Doctrine. It was stated in the covenant that "nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of * * * the Monroe Doctrine."

THE SENATE STOOD FIRM

The United States Senate did not consider this recognition strong enough, however, and in discussion of the Treaty of Versailles, written after the close of the World War, the Senate declared the Monroe Doctrine "to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said League of Nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in said treaty of peace with Germany."

Jealously, indeed, and rightfully so, have American statesmen guarded the Monroe Doctrine and the right of America to interpret it as it alone desires to. So jealously has this cherished safeguard of the American way been guarded, that it has been guarded even against forces within our own country whose ambitions to play a larger hand in the international field have carried them far in their thinking from the basic principle of the welfare of the United States and its sister republics.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the operation of the draft law and the operation of the National Guard mobilization law will undoubtedly suspend or interrupt the rights of many workers under both the old-age pension section and the unemployment section of the Social Security Act. It seems to me that the quickest method of curing this situation is through an amendment to the tax bill. Therefore I offer an amendment to the tax bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table, and also printed in the RECORD. Meanwhile I should like particularly to call it to the attention of the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and also will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. VANDENBERG to House bill 10413 is, at the appropriate place, to insert the following:

Title II, section 209, of the Social Security Act of 1935, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (o), as follows:

"(o) In determining eligibility and in computing benefits under section 209, and for no other purpose, the term 'total wages', as used in subsection (f) of this section, shall, in the case of any covered individual who, after July 1, 1940, has served in the land or naval forces of the United States, be deemed to include for each month of such service an amount equal to the average monthly wage received by such covered individual during the quarter immediately preceding such period of service, but in no event shall such 'total wages' exceed $3,000 for any single year."

SEC. 2. Section 1603 of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act of 1939 is hereby amended by adding at the end of subsection (a) a new paragraph (7), as follows:

"(7) For the purpose of computing eligibility and benefits of any covered employee who, since July 1, 1940, has served in the land and/or naval forces of the United States, such period of service shall be included in the same manner as though said individual had continued in a covered employment during such period of service, and for the purpose of computing benefits only, such individual shall be credited for each week of such service with wages equal to the average weekly taxable wage earned in the quarter immediately preceding induction into such land or naval forces."

TRANSPORTATION IN COMMERCE OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 3550.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the report being laid before the Senate, but I shall have something to say before it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report? The Chair hears none. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, insert the following:

"That whoever shall knowingly transport or knowingly cause to be transported in interstate commerce, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist, knowingly, in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal or District of Columbia penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State, or States, or political subdivisions thereof; to parts for the repair of farm machinery; or to agricultural commodities: Provided further, That this act shall go into effect 1 year after its approval by the President."

And the House agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

PAT MCCARRAN,
M. M. NEELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, Jr.,
C. E. HANCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, this bill was unanimously approved by the subcommittee and the full committee which reported it. The Senate passed it without a dissenting vote. The House passed it with an amendment. The bill was sent to conference. The conferees, after many meetings and much deliberation, reached an agreement which is embodied in the conference report before the Senate.

The bill is now identical with that which was passed by the Senate, except that the proviso has been enlarged so as to include the District of Columbia, and the following additional language which was inserted after the word "Government", in the tenth line on page 2, namely—

Or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State, or States, or political subdivisions thereof; to parts for the repair of farm machinery; or to agricultural commodities.

In my opinion these additional exemptions from the operation of the bill sufficiently explain themselves.

Mr. President, I move that the conference report be adopted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not quite clear as to the Senator's explanation. Did the House amendment also cover binder twine?

Mr. NEELY. It included both binder twine and farm machinery; but the conferees refused to accept these provisions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the date when the binder-twine prohibition goes into effect?

Mr. NEELY. The entire act will become effective a year after its approval by the President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly, after I redeem my promise to yield to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from West Virginia not to take up the conference report this week; and I desire briefly to state why I make that request.

The conference report has been agreed to by the House; so we are in a different position, so far as delay is concerned, than though we had before us a bill which had to have action by the House. When the Senate acts on the conference report, if it approves it, the bill will go directly to the President for his signature.

I am one of the conferees. I did not agree with my brethren from the Senate, and I have not signed the conference report.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is very much interested in the report, and, as I understand, is exceedingly anxious to be heard upon it. His State, in his judgment, has a great interest involved. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] also desires to have the report go over, because of the work he has been doing on the Finance Committee, which, as we all know, has been very busy on the tax bill; and the Senator from Wisconsin felt that on that account he would be unable to go into a discussion of this question today or yesterday.

No injury can come from delay, because the bill itself provides that it shall not become effective for 1 year after its enactment; so there will be no injury to anybody if it goes over. I think the Senate ought to extend that much courtesy to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who, as we know, is absent on account of the primary fight in his State, and will not be here, as I understand, until next week.

So far as I am personally concerned, I would just as soon see the matter taken up now as at any time, but under the circumstances, since delay cannot work any injury, I am asking the Senator from West Virginia if we will not refrain from asking action until next week, so as to give the Senator from Minnesota particularly an opportunity to be heard on a question which to him he believes to be quite vital.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I could never willingly refuse to grant a request made by the able and beloved senior Senator from Nebraska. But unhappily for me, the friends of the bill have already complained again and again of what they consider the conferees' unreasonable delay in obtaining a final vote on this important measure. In the circumstances, will not the Senator from Nebraska submit his request or suggestion for delay to the Senate instead of to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see how I could submit it to the Senate. If the Senator does not press for action on his motion, it will simply be on the table until next week.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the request of the Senator from Nebraska for an additional brief delay.

Mr. NORRIS. Then let us have an understanding.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like again to call the attention of the Senate to the statement made by the Senator from West Virginia. This matter has been in conference since the 8th of July. The bill was reported out of the subcommittee unanimously and out of the full committee unanimously, and passed the Senate unanimously, and has been held up in conference on certain items which have now been agreed to, and from which the House made the principal recession. The House, after receding from the principal position it had taken, adopted the conference report yesterday by a vote of 251 to 48. I certainly would not want in any way to discommode the Senator from Nebraska or the Senator from Minnesota, for whom I have great respect and affection, but the fact is that last week the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] delayed a vote on the conference report on the transportation bill for 2 or 3 days to permit the Senator from Minnesota to return to the Senate. It does not seem to me that on matters of the importance as that now before us, which have been delayed for so long, when a conference report has been agreed to, action on it should be postponed for another week to enable any Senator to return to the Senate. It seems to be an unreasonable request for the Senator to make.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not believe any fair-minded man, if he will give consideration to the request I have made and the reasons I have given for it, will think that it is an unprecedented request. It would not delay the legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think the Senator from Minnesota, as fond as I am of him, should expect the business of the Senate to be held up indefinitely while he was away. I understand the reason why the Senator from Minnesota is away. He has a very good reason for being away. As I have said, the Senate delayed a vote on the conference report on the transportation bill for some time out of consideration for the Senator from Minnesota, and the matter now before us has been hung up so long, and is a matter as to which it will be necessary for certain States to make adjustments, and I think it should be taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. If the action I am asking would delay matters, would delay putting the proposed law into effect, there would be a different situation, but no one would be delayed. If the Senator from West Virginia wants to make a request for unanimous consent to agree now to fixing a specific hour on a certain day when the matter shall be taken up next week, I will have no objection. I am making my suggestion, not because of anything I myself desire, but I believe it is a fair request to make in behalf of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in order to accommodate the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the able Senator from Minnesota for whom he speaks, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be taken up for final action not later than 12:30 p. m. on Tuesday of next week.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that. Then the Senator can notify the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NEELY. He will be notified by telegram this afternoon.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia if this measure would affect cotton grown by convict labor.

Mr. NEELY. No; agricultural commodities are specifically excluded from the operation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was detained and did not hear the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asked that the matter to which he has called attention be postponed until not later than 12:30 o'clock on Tuesday next.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was the agreement that we would vote at not later than 12 o'clock?

Mr. NEELY. No; we should not interfere with the morning prayers in the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Especially the Senator from West Virginia could not, because he is responsible for them.

Mr. NEELY. For the credit which the Senator from Kentucky gives me for the institution of daily prayer in this body, I sincerely thank him.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS—TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. SCHWARTZ to concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool produucts, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the motion pending before the Senate is to concur in the House amendment to Senate bill 162. This amendment is an entirely new bill. The amendment has never been considered by any committee of the Senate or by the Senate itself. The amendment consists of 14 sections, and its importance to my State and the other States and the country as a whole justifies my occupying some time to explain it.

The bill, in the form of a House amendment, is sometimes referred to as a "wool" bill, it is sometimes referred to as the "truth in fabric" bill. The amendment contains nothing which justifies the name "truth in fabric," and the term "truth in fabric" as applied to the amendment is wholly inadequate and is a misnomer.

For many years—30 or 40, perhaps—measures have been introduced in both Houses of the Congress seeking to magnify the importance of wool. In various Congresses the two Houses have considered such proposals, but to date no bill of this kind has ever passed both bodies and received the approval of the Chief Executive.

The facts relative to this particular bill are somewhat as follows: The distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] introduced a bill at the beginning of the present Congress, and the bill was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The subcommittee held hearings, and submitted a report to the main committee. The main committee reported the bill, and it came before the Senate for consideration. On the 21st day of July 1939, more than a year ago, the Senate took final action upon the bill.

This class of legislation has been pending before the House and Senate for upward of 40 years. Various Members of the present and previous Congresses have tried to prepare such legislation, and have introduced such measures. The distinguished senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] years ago sponsored legislation along this line, but, after he had made a thorough investigation and given the subject matter consideration, he decided that such legislation could not be enacted, and he has ceased his efforts along that line.

The distinguished majority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], when the bill now under consideration was before us in July 1939, made the statement, in substance, that "twenty-odd years ago legislation was introduced in the House of Representatives along this line." The legislation was referred to a subcommittee of which the Senator from Kentucky, at that time a House Member, was chairman. The Senator said, "extensive hearings were held upon the House bill, but nothing was done about it." So far as I know, the Senator from Kentucky has not followed up the proposed legislation, because I have served with him in this body and in the other body for something like 17 years, and until the pending bill came before the Senate I had never heard him raise his voice in behalf of wool legislation or in behalf of a so-called truth-in-fabric bill.

In the debates in the House of Representatives a few days ago a Member of that body made a statement to the effect that he became convinced that legislation should be passed to protect consumers against various materials being woven into cloth and mislabeled and misbranded, so that the consumers buying what they thought was one thing, would later find they had bought something else. The particular Representative, to whom I shall refer later on, came to the conclusion that such legislation could not be enacted, and he gave up in despair.

Only the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming has persisted; and for his persistence I commend him. After 20 years or more of investigation, and thorough consideration, the Senator from Wyoming prepared a bill, or had prepared a bill which was referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. That committee made something like 20 changes in what, obviously, was the best bill the experts could draft.

Then when the bill was reported to the Senate with something like 20 amendments to it, the Senate added some more amendments to the bill, and finally, when the Senate had perfected the bill as best it could, it was passed and sent to the House of Representatives.

When the bill reached the House it went to the Speaker's desk, and there it rests today. It was not referred to a House committee. The other body did not give the bill sufficient consideration even to order it printed, and the Senate bill, with all the amendments, the bill passed by this body on the 21st day of last July 1939, has never been printed, and is not printed now. So that if any Senator wishes to see what was done by the Senate more than a year ago, he must go to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and search out the amendments, or perchance go to the Secretary's office and get a copy of the engrossed bill. I tried to obtain a copy of the engrossed bill some days ago, but the document room did not have a copy of it. The Secretary's office had a part of a copy of the engrossed bill, and the office kindly typed the remainder and afforded me a copy. That is the only copy I have. If Senators send to the document room for a copy of the bill as it passed the Senate more than a year ago they cannot obtain a copy. It was not printed in this body, as mentioned by the Senator from Wyoming, and was not printed by the other body when it reached that body. It lay upon the Speaker's desk for more than a year. It never received the courtesy of being referred to the regular committee which would naturally handle it in the other body of Congress.

It may be said that the other body had a bill of its own, and that is correct. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives had its own bill, which it proceeded to consider. In due time the House committee reported its own bill to the House Calendar. When the bill was reported by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce there were absent 2 members of the committee. The vote on the question of reporting the bill from the committee was 12 in favor of reporting it and 11 against reporting it, with 2 members absent. So Senators can see that the House bill, a companion bill, started out to be identical, but one bill took one road and the other bill another road, and we have before us the bill which took the other road than that taken by the Senate bill. We have now before the Senate the House bill in the form of an amendment to the Senate bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to get an understanding of the parliamentary situation. It seems to be quite complicated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was coming to that.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Oklahoma said the bill was still on the Speaker's desk.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That statement was slightly inaccurate, but I will explain it in detail. The bill came upon the House calendar. Efforts were made to have the bill taken up for consideration and passage. The opposition was so strenuous in the House that it could not be brought up by unanimous consent. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce never had its day in the House apparently, and the bill could not be brought up except on an Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee day. So the bill remained upon the calendar.

An application was made for a rule to place the bill upon the calendar with a preferred status. For months the opposition to the bill in the Committee on Rules was in the majority, and the bill could not be reported by the Rules Committee. For some reason—I do not know the reason, and I care less—some members of the Rules Committee changed their minds, and at last, when one or two members were absent, the members of the Rules Committee in favor of the bill found themselves to be in the majority, and a rule was authorized.

The bill came before the House then under the rule. That was the House bill. The Senate bill was still on the Speaker's desk, and had never been referred or printed. No one knew what it contained, unless he had gone to the Speaker and made inquiry with respect to the contents of the Senate engrossed bill. Under the rule the bill was brought up for consideration, and it was passed.

After the House had passed the House bill (H. R. 944) a companion bill to the Senate bill, but entirely different, on the same day the chairman of the committee asked unanimous consent to take the Senate bill from the Speaker's desk and have it laid before the House. There was no objection. There could have been none. The Speaker laid the Senate bill before the House, whereupon a motion was made that all after the enacting clause of Senate bill 162 be stricken, and that the substance of House bill 944 be inserted in lieu thereof, and that motion was adopted.

Then the Senate bill, as amended with the House text, came to this body, and that is the bill which is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. President, the House amendment has not been printed. If any Senator present wants to see what the Senate has done on this matter he is not able to obtain a printed copy of the Senate action. If a Senator desires to see what the House did on the bill, likewise he would be unable to obtain a copy of the amendment, because it has not been printed. So we have the situation, Mr. President, of a bill pending before this body which not a single Senator has read, save the distinguished author of the measure, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ].

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I have here in my hand the bill as it came over from the House, and I have compared it with the Senate bill and have shown the amendments which were made by the House. I have distributed to various Senators, copies which show each amendment made, and the difference between the original bill and the bill as it came from the House. I shall be glad to furnish the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with a copy of it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will make the further statement that, save the distinguished junior Senator from Wyoming, not a single Senator on the floor, nor a single Member of this body, not on the floor, has any conception of what the amendment means or what it is. The House made 17 changes in the Senate bill. The bills deal with the same subject matter, but that is all. The House bill represents a change almost in toto from the Senate bill. So the Senate is asked to ratify and agree to and concur in a House bill which Members of the Senate have never read, and have had no chance to read, because it is not even printed.

The Senator from Wyoming exhibits a bill to the Senate, and if he will let me take it for a moment I wish to exhibit the changes. Here is the House engrossed amendment. I show the Senate the amendments on page 1. Here are the amendments on page 2. Here are some typewritten amendments on page 3. Here are some typewritten amendments on page 4. Here is a flock of amendments on page 5. Here are amendments on page 7. Also amendments on page 9 and amendments on pages 12, 13, and 14. It was necessary to have all those amendments written in the bill as amended by the House and sent back to the Senate, in order to show the changes. The two bills deal with the same subject matter, but that is all.

Mr. President, this is an important bill. A motion is now pending to agree to the House amendments—one motion to agree to them en bloc. It is proposed by one motion to agree to 17 changes at least, and perhaps more, from the action of this body. That is to be done by one motion.

Mr. President, I cannot agree to that motion until I at least occupy some time to explain what the bill means. It is alleged to be a wool bill. The bill affects every sheep raiser in America—at least the sheep raisers think it does. In 1935 we had in this country more than 54,000,000 sheep. In that year those sheep produced more than 388,000,000 pounds of wool. At that time wool was selling for 20 cents a pound.

So the clip in 1935 from the sheep was worth at the market price at that time some $84,000,000.

Mr. President, the wool growers, of course, think the bill will help them. I wonder why. I will tell the Senate why. They think the bill, if enacted, will raise the price of wool at least 5 cents per pound. How much money will that mean if the passage of the bill raises the price of wool 5 cents a pound? In 1935 we produced 388,000,000 pounds of wool, and a 5-cent increase per pound would have resulted in a total increase of approximately $20,000,000 on that year's wool clip. So the bill, if enacted into law, would result in raising the price of wool, if the wool growers' claims are correct, and they believe they are correct.

Mr. President, the sheep growers, in my opinion, not knowing what is in their best interest, favor this proposed legislation. But the bill affects more than the sheep growers. It affects the cotton producers of America. There are in the South 11 or 12 States whose people to a great extent depend for their livelihood largely on the raising of cotton. This year we will produce in the United States approximately 12,000,000 bales of cotton, if the estimates which I have before me are correct. The United Press on September 9, only 3 days ago, carried an article dealing with the estimated cotton crop for this year, and I shall read from that news story in a moment.

Mr. President, I have just said that the bill affects the sheep growers of America, or they think it will, and I think it will. If the bill is passed, I think it will result in increasing the price of wool materially. How much the increase will be per pound I do not know, but for 20 years the testimony of those who profess to know has been to the effect that the enactment of the bill or a similar bill will raise the price of raw wool 5 cents per pound.

Mr. President, I contend that the bill is an anticotton bill, as I shall proceed to show as I continue my statement. If it is an anticotton bill, it affects the cotton produced this year. I now read from the news story to which I referred:

> The Agricultural Department Monday reported that the condition of the cotton crop as of September 1 was 74 percent of normal, with an indicated total production of 12,772,000 bales.

So Mr. President, if I am correct in my interpretation of the measure, that it is an anticotton bill, it will affect adversely almost 13,000,000 bales of cotton. The cotton growers are opposed to the bill. They are not opposed to truth in fabric. If it were a measure which would require the consumer to be informed of what he was buying, in toto or reasonably accurately, they would not oppose it. But the bill does not profess to be a truth-in-fabric bill, except as to one thing, and that is wool.

Mr. President, the bill is an anticotton bill because if the bill should become law it would place cotton in a category below the lowest grade of wool, which is shoddy—and rotten shoddy at that. A woolen mill might take shoddy and process it, weave it into cloth, cut the cloth into a garment, and put the garment on sale as an all-wool product, a 100-percent-wool product, even though it were the rottenest shoddy on the market. No doubt the consumer would rather have an all-wool product, whatever grade of wool it might be made of or in whatever condition the wool might be, than to have a product made of cotton or of a certain percentage of cotton. So I say that the bill is an anticotton bill. If it would adversely affect the use of cotton, it would adversely affect the price of cotton.

If the bill would stimulate the use of wool where cotton is now being used, or if it would provide for replacing cotton with wool, it would injure cotton. No one can doubt that. The only purpose of the bill is to glorify what is termed "virgin wool." As I shall show as I proceed, some virgin wool is worse than the worst shoddy, if the shoddy originally was good wool.

So my objection to the bill is, first, that it is an anticotton bill, and, second, that it is an anti-national-defense bill. By that I mean that if the bill should pass and become a law, and do what those who favor the bill think it would do—raise the price of wool—the Army and Navy, in their necessary purchases of cloth with which to make uniforms, overcoats, blankets, sweaters, underwear, and socks for the soldiers, would pay more. If 5 cents a pound were added to the price of raw wool, there would be a difference of at least 10 cents a pound in the price of processed or scoured wool. To make a uniform for a soldier requires about 4 yards of cloth; and I think 3 uniforms a year are allowed to an active soldier. Therefore, 12 yards of cloth would be necessary each year to clothe each of our active soldiers. About 4 yards of cloth are required to make an overcoat. About 3½ yards of cloth are required to make a blanket. The requirements for other things are in proportion. So, if the bill should become law and should raise the price of wool 5 cents a pound, as the proponents think it would do, the cost for each soldier each year would be increased approximately by a sum between $7.50 to $8 as compared with the cost if the bill should not pass. We are now contemplating the equipment of an army of 2,000,000 men. If the bill should raise the price of wool, as the proponents think it would, and as much as I think it would, to equip an army of 2,000,000 men would cost the taxpayers of America 5 cents a pound more for each pound of wool-in-grease, which means an ultimate cost of 12½ cents a pound, because about 2½ pounds of wool-in-grease are required to make 1 pound of scoured wool. Each pound of scoured wool would cost about 12½ cents more. It would cost the United States Army and Navy, which means the taxpayers of America, something like $7.50 or $8 more because of the higher price of wool, reflected in the higher price of cloth and the higher price of uniforms, overcoats, blankets, sweaters, underclothing, and socks.

So, Mr. President, the bill is an anticotton bill. It is an anti-national-defense measure. Before I conclude I shall read a letter from the Quartermaster General wherein he states that the bill should not pass.

The bill is most imperfect. A perfect bill on this subject cannot be written. The testimony shows that there are hundreds of classes of wool. There are almost 150 different classes of cotton. The Department of Agriculture has standards for cotton, and it classifies the different cotton fibers grown in the South into about 130 different classes.

There is greater variety in wool than there is in cotton. For example, take the alfalfa and clover-fed sheep of Ohio, or of New England, or of the eastern States, where the sheep have plenty to eat: They are purebred, and they produce a fine quality of wool. Then go farther west and take the sheep from the mountains, or go down to the desert and take the sheep from the desert. I have seen them.

The bill defines wool as the fleece of the sheep or lamb. It makes no distinction between the fleece of the sheep in Ohio and the fleece of the sheep in Utah, New Mexico, or Oklahoma. It is all wool. The Senate bill defines it as "virgin wool." The House deleted the word "virgin." The House did not like that term for some reason, and defined it simply as "wool."

Under the terms of the amendment pending before this body, the House defines wool as being the fleece of a sheep or lamb, or of a goat, a camel, a llama, or a vicuna. Originally, this bill contained the word "rabbit." That word was stricken out by the Senate. When the Senate completed the bill a year ago last July, it struck out goat hair. The Senate held that goat hair is not wool. The Senate, by its action, held that camel's hair is not wool. By its action, the Senate held that llama hair is not wool, and that vicuna hair is not wool. The Senate bill simply defined virgin wool as the fleece of the sheep or lamb. As the amendment comes back, it eliminates the word "virgin," and says that wool is the fleece of the sheep or lamb, or the goat—mentioning two kinds—or of the camel, the llama, the vicuna, and the alpaca.

So we have the hair of all those various kinds of animals classified as wool. The bill makes no distinction between the wool from the fat, fleecy Ohio, Maryland, New England, or Indiana sheep, grown where there is plenty of rain and ample forage, and the fleece of the sheep on the desert. I have seen the sheep on the desert. I do not blame the sheep. I should not like to be a sheep on the desert. Sheep on the desert have to live on sagebrush, shinnery, cactus, wire grass, and imagination. I have seen those sheep. They do not look very healthy. Yet under the terms of the bill the clip from the measliest sheep in the desert is the highest-class wool, and the mill might take the clip from those sheep, unfortunate animals they are, process it, and advertise it as the finest wool in the world. The bill seeks to legalize and make possible that sort of thing.

There is more difference between the various grades of wool of the sheep than there is between the various grades of cotton. There are hundreds of classes of wool. Under the terms of the bill, which define the hair of the goat to be wool, it would be possible to take the whiskers from billy goats and process them into yarn, weave the yarn into cloth, make the cloth into a garment, and sell the garment as a wool garment.

Mr. President, there is one class of wool called rear ends. What that is I am not sure, but I think I know. Under the terms of the bill one could take the wool from the south end of a goat going north, or the north end of a sheep going south, and it would be the best quality of wool.

The tags, or wool coming from the ankles of the poor desert sheep—and I feel sorry for them—which sells for about 5 cents a pound on the market, while other classes of wool sell for as much as 30 cents a pound, or more, are classified according to the terms of the bill as wool, which means virgin wool.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] tried to write a bill on this question. He could not do it. Twenty years ago the Senator from Kentucky made an exhaustive study of this question and tried to bring forward a bill. There was no agreement on the question. Another Member of the House, whose statement I shall read, tried to write a bill after months of work, and he could not write a bill which would do justice to the subject.

Mr. President, no one is opposed to truth in fabric. If some system could be devised which would tell the purchaser what he is getting in a suit or overcoat, or in a pair of shoes, or in a hat, or in jewelry—I care not what it be—everybody would be for such a bill. But this bill is not a perfect bill. It does not approach perfection. It is so imperfect that it is a hodgepodge. If enacted, those who now favor it would be disappointed. It could not be enforced.

As I said a moment ago, the bill is an anticotton bill, and it is an antidefense bill. If the bill were enacted, the cost to the American people each year for the wool necessary to make the uniforms which we must provide for our soldiers, sailors, and flyers would be increased by from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. If the bill were enacted, it could not be enforced. No one knows of any test by which the coat from the back of any Senator could be analyzed so as to tell whether the wool in the coat is virgin wool, reprocessed wool, or used wool.

Can one seriously challenge that statement, when the author of this bill in the report sets forth that he did not intend to rely on the acid test or the scientific test as to whether or not the wool had been used, but reliance was to be placed upon the factory test? The factory test cannot be relied upon because no test has been devised that is accurate to enable any scientist to say "This wool is virgin wool and that wool is either reprocessed wool or used wool." I will come to that later, and place some material on the subject in the RECORD.

So, Mr. President, if this bill becomes law, the determination cannot be made by examination or by any test known, and then agents and inspectors must be placed in every factory in America. That will be difficult, because the factory that makes the clothes, the suit, does not make the cloth. There must be agents at every tailoring establishment in America, every establishment that makes clothes, because the tailors and the clothes makers do not make the cloth; they cut the cloth and make the garments.

In addition to these inspectors, inspectors must then be placed in all the mills in America to see what goes into the mills. That cannot be determined by looking at the cloth; there is no test which will distinguish it; so that there must be agents at the mills to see what goes into the mills. The mills, as a rule, do not manufacture their own yarn, but buy the kind of yarns they want, and then weave the yarns into the cloth they desire. So, in addition to putting inspectors at the clothing establishments and at the mills, agents must be stationed at the places where the yarn is spun from the wool. You can imagine, Mr. President, how many agents that will take; you can imagine, as well as I, the expense that will entail upon the people of the United States.

So, Mr. President, I assert that this bill is an anticotton bill; it is an anti-national-defense measure; it is a wholly imperfect bill; and, if enacted, cannot be enforced save at the expense of vast numbers of inspectors located throughout the United States.

Because this bill is not printed we cannot know what it contains, and because it contains 21 separate amendments which have never been considered by the Senate, and which cannot be considered by the Senate, except as, perhaps, I can explain them very briefly and imperfectly, the House amendment should not be concurred in by the Senate, but should go to a committee to consider the amendment or it should go to conference. I cannot make a motion that it go to conference now. When the bill came back from the House, with an amendment which embraced 14 sections, there were only a few motions that could be made. The first motion would be to refer to a standing committee; that is the motion that should prevail; and I will make such a motion a little later. If that motion should not prevail, the second motion that can be made is a motion to concur in the House amendment with amendments; and, if my first motion shall not prevail, I shall submit some amendments which I think should be adopted if the bill must pass. That is motion No. 2.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Why would it be improper to send this bill to conference; and why could not the motion be made to send it to conference?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are four motions that can be made on this amendment, and which have precedence. The author of the bill has moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment. The motion to send the bill to conference comes later, and that motion cannot be made until the motion pending is rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. But I understood the Senator to say the bill could not be sent to conference, although he thought it ought to be. It seems to me the usual practice here in the case of a bill of this kind which has passed the Senate and been amended by the House is to send it immediately to conference, although a motion to concur in the House amendment would take precedence.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is correct, and this bill should go to conference. There the Senate conferees, who are presumed to be familiar with the Senate action, would have a chance to present the Senate's viewpoint, and the House conferees would have a chance to present the House viewpoint, and where the two bills conflict, as they do in many cases, an agreement could be worked out. So I say the bill should go to conference. But the Senator from Wyoming has prevented that by his motion. His motion must be rejected before the motion to send to conference can be made.

I can make two preferential motions, and I am going to make one of them; namely, that the House amendment be sent to the regular committee whence the bill came.

Mr. NORRIS. What committee is that?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is chairman. The Senator from Montana is present and he will verify the statement that this amendment has not been considered by his committee, and I think

I am safe in saying that it has not been considered by any member of his committee save the one member who is the distinguished author of the bill.

Mr. President, I do not favor this manner of legislating, taking a bill we have not considered, taking a bill which is certainly different from the Senate bill, and in one motion agree to from 17 to 20 amendments, especially when we have no idea what they mean.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it not be proper, under the rules of the Senate, if the Senator objects—and his objection seems to be reasonable—to including so many amendments in one motion, to ask for a separation? In that way he could get a separate vote on each one of the amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct, but the Senator can appreciate that would take much time. I do not desire to occupy the time on this bill. If it could be sent to conference where it should go, I would gladly yield and have it go to conference, and then, when the conference report comes back, having had the joint consideration of the House and Senate conferees, I could not make serious objection if I wanted to. I might not be agreeable, but my voice would be in the vast minority, and I would not be permitted to be heard to any extent.

Mr. President, in order to show the importance of this bill, I ask that an editorial appearing in the Journal of Commerce of the issue of Monday of this week under the heading "Wool Labeling Legislation" be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WOOL-LABELING LEGISLATION

One of the latest examples of unnecessary burdensome legislation for an industry now largely concerned with national-defense problems is furnished by the passage through the House of Representatives this week of the so-called wool-labeling bill. Overriding strong objections from manufacturers and distributors, the House passed the bill and sent it for concurrence to the Senate, which early in the year approved a similar measure.

The bill as passed, cloth and garment manufacturers contend, will merely raise prices of raw wool without giving material benefits to consumers. Since the measure, if enacted, would compel retailers to describe in detail the fiber content of wool garments advertised for sale, it is feared that many stores will prefer to turn to competitive products which can be merchandised more easily without such restrictions.

Three different definitions of wool are contained in the House bill. In addition to the term "wool," used to describe fiber from the sheep's back, the terms "reprocessed wool" and "reused wool" are included. Reprocessed wool is defined as wool from clips and ends, mostly from clothing cutting tables, which have not been worn. Reused wool is described as fiber obtained by reprocessing wool rags from garments that have been worn. A fabric might have to be labeled, when used in a garment, as "60-percent wool, 25-percent reused wool, 15-percent reprocessed wool," to conform to the pending measure. Such a label would obviously confuse consumers and retail-sales clerks, without accomplishing any practical purpose.

Manufacturers have long contended that some grades of reprocessed wool are superior in quality to certain grades of virgin wool, such as noils or short wool fibers. In its specifications for its standard 32-ounce overcoating, in fact, the United States Army permits manufacturers to use 35-percent noils or the equivalent amount of reworked wool. Under the pending bill, however, a mill using noils to manufacture this overcoating could label it "100-percent wool," whereas a mill using reworked wool to produce a fabric of the same quality and wearability would have to describe is as "65-percent wool, 35-percent reused wool."

Distributors are perturbed most because there is no certain way to ascertain whether a finished fabric contains raw or reprocessed wool. The only effective way to enforce the measure would be to check raw material invoices of mills and then follow goods through the long journey from the mill gate, through the apparel trades to the retail store. Since this is impracticable, wool-labeling legislation serves to penalize honest manufacturers as against those who may seek to utilize such involved regulations for their own advantage.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that editorial correctly states the importance of this proposed legislation, especially at this particular time.

Yesterday, the distinguished author of the bill made what purported to be an explanation of the measure. His remarks will be found on pages 11921 and following of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In those pages the author of the bill placed great stress upon the fact that a Mr. Craig, representing the American Retail Federation, was sponsoring this measure or, if not sponsoring it, approving the bill as finally passed by the Senate. Later on in the discussion, certain organizations were referred to as being back of the bill.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a letter of date January 9, 1940, some months after the original bill passed the Senate. This letter is addressed:

To all State and National Association Executives.

It is on the stationery of the American Retail Federation. The letter is signed by Mr. David R. Craig, the same gentleman referred to yesterday by the author of this bill. On the letterhead used by Mr. Craig we find that he speaks, or presumes to speak, for the following organizations:

The National Association of Chain Drug Stores.

That is a very large organization.

The National Retail Dry Goods Association.
The Cooperative Food Distributors of America.
The National Retail Furniture Association.
The American National Retail Jewelers' Association.
The Mail Order Association of America.
The National Shoe Retailers' Association.

Those are the national associations for which Mr. Craig presumes to speak; and he is opposed to this bill, as I shall show when I place this letter in the RECORD.

These several organizations are made up of 27 State organizations; so the American Retail Federation, made up of these national organizations, is likewise made up of 27 State organizations, as follows:

California Retailers' Association.
Colorado Retailers' Association.
Florida Retail Merchants' Association.
Georgia Mercantile Association.
Illinois Federation of Retail Associations.
Associated Retailers of Indiana.
Associated Retailers of Iowa.
Kentucky Merchants' Association.
State Merchants' Association (Maine).
Maryland Council of Retail Merchants.
Massachusetts Council of Retail Merchants.
Michigan Retail Institute.
Missouri Retailers' Association.
Nevada Retail Merchants' Association.
New Hampshire Council of Retail Merchants.
Retail Merchants' Association of New Jersey.
New York State Council of Retail Merchants.
North Carolina Merchants' Association.
Ohio State Council of Retail Merchants.
Oklahoma Retail Merchants' Association.

My State is in this great organization, and my State is against this bill.

Pennsylvania Retailers' Association.
Rhode Island Retail Association.
Retail Merchants' Association of Tennessee.
Retail Merchants' Association of Texas.
Utah State Retailers' Association.
Vermont Council of Retail Merchants.
Retail Merchants' Association of Virginia.

Representing or presuming to represent those associations and organizations, this is what Mr. Craig said in his letter, to all State and National association executives, on January 9, 1940:

You will remember that last year we suggested six amendments to the wool-labeling bill on ballot No. 17. We received unanimous agreement. The bill passed the Senate with only three of our amendments. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the bill to the House, including all six of them.

At the time these amendments were sent out it appeared inevitable that some such bill would pass, and we felt it was of importance to have the bill a practical one.

It may now be possible to prevent the passage of the bill and the change in the wool situation makes the bill undesirable at this time. In the ballot you committed yourself only to the amendments. You did not authorize us to support the bill or to oppose it. In view of the fact, however, that I have yet to meet any retailer who wishes this bill to be passed, we feel that this action is consistent with our previous recommendations.

At the time when the committees were holding hearings and perfecting their amendments the United States was importing large amounts of high-grade virgin wool from Australia and New Zealand. The European war has completely changed this situation. The English Government has taken the Australian and New Zealand clip off the market. According to reports, the stocks of raw wool in the United States are not sufficient to provide for the requirements of domestic mills until the new domestic clip brings large quantities into the market next spring. As a result of this shortage, the prices of woolens and textiles have already increased. For example, textiles have increased about 30 percent, while the price of "standard tops" rose from 86 cents to $1.26 almost immediately after the war was declared.

In view of this shortage of virgin wool and the consequent increase in prices it seems logical to conclude that it would be inadvisable to enact H. R. 944 at present.

The consumer is confused about the difference between reprocessed and virgin wool. Most people think that virgin wool is far superior to reprocessed wool. This is not a fact, as long-fibered reprocessed wool is far superior to many grades of virgin wool.

In the face of this, to enact wool-labeling legislation now would definitely cause the price of virgin wool to increase to an unjustifiable extent. Retailers have been doing everything within their power to prevent any unnecessary price increases of goods to the American people. They now feel that legislation of this sort is untimely and could serve no useful purpose.

This is notice of our new attitude on this legislation.

Cordially yours,

DAVID R. CRAIG.

Mr. President, because I cannot move to send this bill to conference, where it should go, I am forced to move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce for the consideration of that body; and I now make that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, just before the point of no quorum was suggested, I had submitted a motion that the bill in the form of an amendment, embracing some 14 sections, and embodying some 20 changes from the Senate action, be referred to the committee. The bill is not printed. It has had no consideration by the Senate or by any committee in the Senate, or by any group in the Senate, save perhaps by the author of the bill. I do not believe in this manner of legislating, because not a single Member of the Senate present, and not a single Member of the Senate not present, knows what the bill means, or has even read the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator does not mean that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will omit the two Senators from Wyoming from the general statement I made. If any Senator wishes to take exception to my statement, I shall yield for that purpose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to state that I know what the proposed legislation means.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then, Mr. President, two Senators do know what it means.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill was pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, and has been pending there for several years, and I am familiar with the bill as it passed the Senate. In examining the other bill this morning I find that the principal differences between the two bills are in definition of terms. So I would not want to say that I was not familiar with the legislation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not want to ask any particular questions of the Senator from Montana. He is the chairman of that great committee. I should like to ask him, however, to state the differences between the definitions of wool in the House bill and in the Senate bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not familiar with the differences in the definitions in the two bills, but I am familiar with the general purport of the proposed legislation. I understand the Senator was opposed to the bill when it passed the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to ask the Senator a question. If the Senator from Montana votes for the motion made by the author of the measure, after he shall have voted for the motion, I should like to ask him what his definition of wool would be.

Mr. WHEELER. I have not read the definition of wool, I will say to the Senator, except casually this morning.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that is where we find ourselves. Two Members of the Senate admit that they know something about the bill, and only two. If we are now called upon to vote to agree to the House amendment to the Senate bill, after we shall have voted, can Senators give the definition of wool? Two Members of the Senate say they know. Does anyone else profess to know? [A pause.] Nobody. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator from Oklahoma should pursue this system of catechism in respect to the excess-profits tax bill when it reaches the floor of the Senate, I suspect he would find a unanimous confession of complete ignorance on the whole proposition.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, a further question. If the motion made by the author of the bill is carried and if the bill, as amended, is passed by the Senate and signed by the President, and a manufacturer were to take the whiskers of billy goats and process them into yarn, if they would make yarn, and make such yarn into suits, if it could be made into suits, and if thereafter the Senator were to buy such a suit, would he think he was wearing a virgin-wool suit? That would happen under this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I would have to question the accuracy of that statement. I can simply say to the Senator that from the general purport of the proposed legislation, as it passed the Senate, it was never the intention that what the Senator stated should be permitted, and I cannot conceive that it would under the pending measure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana another question. Do either Angora or Cashmere goats——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am asking the Senator from Montana the question.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I thought possibly the Senator wanted the information.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will ask for it from the Senator from Montana. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana the question, Do either Angora goats or Cashmere goats have whiskers? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know anything about the whiskers of goats. I do not know anything about the whiskers of Angora goats or the whiskers of any other kind of goat.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator advises me that he is going to vote against my position, which means he is going to vote to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that I will vote against his suggestion for the simple reason that I do not believe the bill should go back to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. This bill or similar bills have been pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee, and have been reported by that committee, and on at least one occasion a bill was passed by the Senate. This bill passed the Senate. It had careful consideration by a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The subcommittee held hearings on the bill. Everyone who wanted to be heard was heard—at least that is my understanding. Then the Senate passed the bill and it went to the House. It was referred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House which held hearings on it. It was reported by that committee, and passed by the House of Representatives. It now comes back to the Senate with all after the enacting clause stricken out, and a substitute measure inserted.

The reason I say the bill should not be sent to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce is that we should do either one of two things. We should either accept the amendment or the bill should go to conference. However, in the orderly procedure of things it should not go back to the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree with the Senator entirely, but under the present status it cannot go to conference. Four motions can be made with respect to the House amendment. The one of highest precedence is the motion to refer it to the committee. The motion of second highest precedence is to agree to the House amendment with an amendment or amendments. The third motion is to concur in the House amendment. The fourth motion is to have the measure go to conference.

The Senator from Wyoming, the author of the bill, has moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment. I cannot move to send the measure to conference until that motion shall have been disposed of. So, I am limited to making two motions. First, to send it to the committee. If that motion is voted down, then the next motion is to concur with an amendment or amendments. I shall offer one or two amendments to perfect the bill.

The Senate defined wool as follows—and I think it is a correct definition of wool——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I want to speak of the difficulties that are presented in reference to offering amendments. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma expects to offer several amendments, and I hope to offer one also, and I do not think my amendment could be seriously objected to, but I am informed that those who are supporting the bill will not allow any amendments to be adopted, because it would mean the bill would have to go back to the House, and the situation there is so precarious that the bill might die, which I think would be most beneficial to the country. These facts are an added reason why the position taken by the Senator from Oklahoma that the bill should go to the committee for further study and consideration ought to be adopted. I think it is very unfortunate that, no matter how meritorious and universally acceptable any amendment might be that would improve this bill, there is no hope of it being adopted here because of the situation to which I have referred.

I should like to have the amendment I propose to offer printed in the RECORD, together with a statement explaining the reason for it, if the Senator from Oklahoma does not object.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should be glad to have the amendment read at the desk for the information of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. It can be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to have it read.

Mr. WALSH. Very well; I shall be glad to read it myself. It is as follows:

Provided, That in the case of hats or hat bodies made or purporting to be made of virgin wool, reclaimed wool, wool felt, or wool products, the fibers contained therein other than virgin wool and reclaimed wool need not be specified if the aggregate percentage of such fibers is disclosed.

I have here a memorandum accompanying the proposed amendment, as follows:

Some manufacturers of hat bodies have secret processes for manufacturing felt-hat bodies of mixtures of wool and certain chemicals.

Under the terms of this bill it would be necessary for them to disclose the component or proportionate parts of materials used, and thereby reveal to their competitors a formula which is a trade secret.

If the amendment is adopted, it will accomplish the purpose of the bill, but permit lumping the components in a manner which will not reveal such trade secrets.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill will have to go back to the House for this reason: On page 7, in the second paragraph, inadvertently no doubt, the engrossing clerk or the Printing Office made a mistake, and in place of the word "wool" the word "wood"—w-o-o-d—is used. So the bill must go back to the House for that correction, if for no other reason, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to correct the measure by striking out the word "wood" and inserting the word "wool."

Mr. President, the Senate when it acted upon this bill defined wool as follows:

The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb.

That is a correct definition. As I understand wool, it comes from the fleece of the sheep or lamb; but, under the definition before us there might be a thousand kinds of wool. Later, the bill defines virgin wool, but I am referring to the definition of wool. So any hair or fiber, whatever it is, coming from the back of the sheep or lamb, is wool. It makes no difference whether the sheep be a fine, fat, well-fed sheep, or a poor, starved sheep. It makes no difference from what part of the anatomy the fiber comes. It is wool if it is from a sheep or lamb. It may come from the back of a sheep which has starved to death. It may come from the back of a sheep which has been killed by a wolf which has devoured the meat parts. It may come from the back of a sheep from the north, south, east, or west. There are sheep in all countries. There are Mexican sheep, South American sheep, and North American sheep. The wools are all different. So there are hundreds of kinds of wool. But the bill seeks to give preference to the kind of wool which has never been cleaned, spun, or woven into any fabric. If it has been woven into a fabric, it is then second-hand, used wool, and not good, under the terms of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In this connection, will the Senator give us the variation in price as between the cheap fibers of so-called wool and the very best wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. At the present time the tags, or wool from the poorest part of the sheep, sell at prices of from 2 to 5 cents a pound. The better grades of wool, called tops, from the best sheep, sell at prices of 37 or 38 cents a pound, in the grease.

Mr. WALSH. So under the terms of the bill the wool which costs 2½ cents a pound would be labeled "virgin wool."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. As well as wool selling at 37 or 38 cents a pound?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. The Senate bill classified that sort of wool as virgin wool; and the House has amended that section by dropping the word "virgin," and it is described merely as wool. Anything which has not been used is wool. Anything which has been used is not wool.

Mr. WALSH. Does the House provision require a statement on the garment as to the amount of reworked wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It does.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator give us the price of the very best grade of reworked wool, which is in competition with virgin wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Virgin wool may sell for as little as 2 cents a pound; yet wool coming from the best sheep, and the best part of the wool from the best part of the sheep, properly scoured, carded, woven, and spun into cloth, but never used, is reprocessed wool. As I shall show in a moment, if the cloth is sent back to the mill and torn up, the wool so obtained is second-hand, reused, or reprocessed wool. It is not wool at all. It is reprocessed wool.

Mr. WALSH. What does it cost?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Oftentimes reprocessed wool brings the highest price.

Mr. WALSH. Higher than that of the highest grade of so-called virgin wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As high as that of the highest grade of so-called virgin wool.

Mr. WALSH. Yet it must be labeled on the garment as reprocessed wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. Perhaps I had better show the Senate some samples. I used to teach school, and oftentimes I had to show samples to explain my point. Before I do so, let me conclude the inquiry to the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I asked him if Angora and Cashmere goats have whiskers. He does not know. If they have whiskers, then, under the terms of the bill, their whiskers are wool.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. It is my recollection that the last Angora goat I saw had whiskers. I did not examine it very closely to see whether or not it had whiskers. However, if an Angora goat has whiskers, there are not enough whiskers on a goat to make a suit of clothes. I appreciate what the Senator said. From the questions he asked, I knew he had been a school teacher.

What the wool growers are trying to do is prevent manufacturers from robbing the wool growers. Some manufacturers mix chopped-up shoddy with wool and sell the mixture as wool, when as a matter of fact it is only cheap shoddy. They obtain a good price for it, and not only rob the wool grower and prevent him from obtaining a decent price for his commodity but they rob the consumer by making him believe he is buying real wool when he is buying nothing but cheap, chopped-up shoddy. The purpose of the bill is to protect the wool grower on the one hand, and the consumer on the other.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall now read the definition of wool, as wool will be legally defined, if the bill, with House amendment, becomes a law:

> The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat—

That is what wool will be if the bill, with the House amendment, becomes law. The definition of wool in all the dictionaries, in all the languages of the world, would be changed.

The Senate does not know what it is voting upon. I do not think it will know when I shall have finished my discussion, because, in the first place, I shall not be able to make it plain. In the second place, only about 15 Senators are present. Yet the bill affects every citizen in America. It affects every Senator who represents a wool-growing State. It affects every Senator who represents a cotton-growing State. It affects every Senator in whose State there are woolen mills or cotton mills. It affects every Senator who has a constituent who will pay taxes to uniform the millions of soldiers we are about to place in the Army. It affects every consumer in America. Yet, a while ago, while I was talking about the bill, I had the attention of the distinguished author of the bill [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] for a part of the time, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] for a part of the time, the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] for a part of the time, and of other Senators who came and went. I realize that it is the lunch hour. I could not expect Senators to forego the pleasure and necessity of partaking of the delectable lunches in the Senate restaurant in order to hear me speak upon this very dry subject.

Mr. President, we are called upon to vote on a solemn declaration that the hair of a goat is wool; that the hair of a camel is wool; that the hair of an alpaca is wool; that the hair of a llama is wool; and that the hair of a vicuna is wool. In the Sahara Desert, if he could discover a water hole, he might find around the water hole the remains of a camel. No rain falls at that spot. The sun shines brightly the year around. He might scrape the sand and pick up the hair of the camel. The camel might have been dead for a thousand years, yet the bill makes that camel's hair virgin wool. That is the proposal on which we are to vote. We do not even know what is in the bill.

Mr. President, I was about to show some samples. I have before me samples of various kinds of cloth. While I am not an expert on cloth, I think they are very good samples. These pieces of cloth are made from various kinds of wool. They are colored differently. If these pieces of cloth should be sent back to the mill and torn apart, separated into separate fibers, respun into yarn, recolored, and rewoven into cloth, under the terms of the bill that cloth would have to be labeled "reprocessed wool."

Mr. WALSH. One hundred percent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. "One-hundred-percent reprocessed wool." Yet, under the terms of the bill, one might go to the Sahara Desert, pick up the hair of a camel which has been lying there for a thousand years, bring it to America, spin it, weave it, and sell it as a 100-percent wool product.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Under the terms of the bill the cloth made from the hair of that camel, labeled as wool, might be sold to the consumers of America as virgin wool. That is true, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is true under the terms of the Senate bill; but under the terms of the House bill it would be be simply wool.

Mr. WHITE. It might be sold as wool, even though it were made from the hair of the camel. That is correct, it is not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct according to the terms of the House bill.

Mr. WHITE. Yet the bill is called a truth-in-fabric bill, designed to make known to the consumers of America what they are buying.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. When we speak of wool, I apprehend that the consumers of America have in mind precisely what the Senator from Oklahoma has in mind; that is, fiber from the sheep or lamb. The consumers would never think of a vicuna, a llama, or any of the other animals the hair of which may be called wool under the terms of the bill. It seems to me that the terms of the bill are a contradiction of the alleged purpose of the bill, and that the bill carries to the consumer of America not the knowledge which the consumer must have, but a fraud in and of itself.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Take the case of camel's hair. It may be labeled as wool. Nevertheless, when one is buying a camel's-hair coat, he knows the difference between real wool and camel's hair. This bill seeks to protect the consumer. At the present time if one buys a suit of clothes it may be sold to him as 100-percent wool but really be made of material from old suits of clothes or from old rags and junk chopped up and reprocessed and sold again as wool. The person who is buying it does not realize that he is buying chopped-up wool when it is marked "all wool." There is no Member of the Senate who can tell the difference between chopped-up wool or shoddy—and that is all it is—and real wool when it is made into a suit until he comes to wear it. I have seen samples showing the difference between real wool and chopped-up wool. Chopped-up wool wears out very quickly; it can almost be picked to pieces by the fingers after a short period of use. When it is made into clothing which hangs in the store it looks all right, but when the purchaser wears it a short time he finds that there is a vast difference between it and real wool.

The passage of this bill will protect the high-class manufacturer of woolen clothes; it will protect the manufacturer who produces real woolen clothes against the man who buys up old junk and then chops it up and converts it into cloth. The use of such cloth is not a good thing from a health standpoint and it is not desirable from any other standpoint.

I agree when the Senator says that this bill will affect all the consumers of the United States. If they want shoddy, if they want chopped-up wool, very well, but the purchaser ought to know what he is buying and whether he is buying shoddy or real wool. If a man desires to purchase a garment made of virgin wool he ought to know that he is getting cloth made from virgin wool. There is a vast difference, as everyone is aware who knows anything about the manufacture of woolen goods—and I know something about it, for I happened to live in a community at one time, in my early life, where woolen goods were manufactured—between shoddy or chopped-up wool and virgin wool.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, how about the goat whiskers? Will they not know when they are buying goat whiskers, because the goat whiskers will stick out?

Mr. WHEELER. They can tell if they are buying goat whiskers, because the goat whiskers will stick out, but they cannot tell when they are buying the chopped-up wool and shoddy.

Mr. WALSH. If I may interrupt the Senator, let me inquire how many all-wool suits are worn by Members of the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER. I imagine comparatively few.

Mr. WALSH. None. Practically all men's clothing, and women's clothing also, is made partly from wool and partly from reworked wool.

Mr. WHEELER. I think there is quite a good deal of that, and the Senator knows that when one goes into a store to buy woolen clothes he cannot know exactly what he is getting. The bill will not affect, as a matter of fact, those who buy the better class of clothes; the people whom this bill seeks to protect are those of the lower-income class, who want to buy woolen clothes, but instead of woolen clothes get chopped-up stuff and shoddy that may be gathered out of the slums—that may come out of disease-ridden places, chopped up, reprocessed, and then manufactured into clothing for children and for men and women.

In my opinion, the bill is desirable from a health standpoint. The Senator knows that because no one knows anything more about shoddy than the people who are raised and brought up in Massachusetts and in other sections of New England where shoddy is manufactured, and where, I think, also, high-grade woolen cloth is manufactured.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest that the labels be put on the cloth that is chopped up, as well as on rewoven wool.

I may say to the Senator, in my opinion, there is not a Member of this body who wears a suit at the present time or at any time made of all-wool. It is necessary, in order to have comfortable clothing, to have some rewoven wool in the cloths so as to make it comfortable, and not subject the wearer to the itch and other disadvantages that come from all-wool.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I exhibit to the Senate a piece of cardboard to which is attached about a dozen samples of cloth. These samples came from a tailoring establishment which, no doubt, buys the cloth by the bolt and takes measures and makes clothing. These samples come from Decherd, Tenn. I do not know of that city, but, no doubt, it is a very substantial city in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, Decherd adjoins the town of Winchester, where my colleague the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] lives.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am sure these cloths are not misbranded. I saw on each piece of the cloth a tag which sets forth that it is all wool. I will hand this package of samples to any Senator and ask him to tell the Senate whether any of the samples contain virgin wool or reprocessed wool or reworked wool or whether it is made of shoddy. Who wants to examine the package of samples and testify to the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I say that that is the very thing this bill seeks to protect against. Unless chopped up wool is examined carefully——

Mr. WALSH. Chopped up and insanitary wool.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, that is what it is. Unless it is examined carefully it is impossible to tell what kind of wool it is made of. The average person cannot by looking at a piece of cloth tell the difference, but he can tell the difference if he wears it a little while. I have seen some samples which I could pull apart with my fingers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am interested in this definition but cannot find a printed copy of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is one objection I have to considering the bill in this manner. We have no printed copy of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know that. I sent to the desk for a copy but could not get it, but I find in the bill this under paragraph (b):

> The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat (and may include the so-called specialty fibers from the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, and vicuna) which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wood product.

From that definition, would it not be possible to substitute for shoddy, if it may be called that, or whatever other product is used, the hair of whatever quality of the Angora or the Cashmere goat and the alpaca, the llama, and the vicuna? Then would it not be just as hard as before to determine what was virgin wool? If I understand the definition which is used in the proposed act and which will govern—it does not assure that the wool used shall be pure. The customer will not know how much of a piece of cloth is hair of the alpaca or the llama or the vicuna or the camel or of the Angora or Cashmere goat. Under this definition it will be just as difficult for him to determine in the future what is virgin wool and what is not as it is now.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree that under this bill camel's hair could be used, and it could be said that it was wool, but what it is sought to do is to protect the consumer from chopped up wool and shoddy of which I have spoken. Shoddy is a well-known term, at least, it used to be in my early days in New England. Wool clothing and rags and other things are chopped up and processed into cloth. And one cannot tell the shoddy from the real, but a garment made of llama or virgin camel's hair is a fine wearing article, and that is the thing that the consumer when he buys clothing is interested in. He wants to know, "Am I getting clothes that will wear and stand up, or am I getting an article made from something that comes out of the slums, made of rags, for instance, and then chopped up and processed into cloth?"

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the terms of this bill, that is not the case. One may take the tags—the fur around the ankles of the sheep or goat or camel—the rakings of camel's hair around a water hole in the Sahara Desert, the hair from the poorest goat in America or Mexico, and blend them all together, and, under the terms of this bill, that would be the highest-class wool. There is no distinction between the fine Merino wool that is grown in the East, where the sheep have alfalfa and bluegrass and timothy and clover to feed on, and wool from the sheep that is grown in the desert, where is has to subsist on sagebrush and shinnery and cactus and wire grass.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, the bill would define wool as the growth of fiber on a sheep or a lamb.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is the definition of the Senate bill; but the House bill modifies that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be a proper definition, of course, and it would be a proper means of distinguishing good woolen cloth. Then the purchaser would know what he was buying; but under the definition of the House bill a piece of cloth might be three-fourths or even seven-eighths of the hair of an Angora or Cashmere goat, the hair of a camel or an alpaca or a llama or a vicuna, and still be wool. The bill would not afford notice to anybody.

Mr. HATCH. It would be better material.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether it would be better material or not. I have my doubts as to whether certain kinds of hair of a goat would be better material than that made of wool.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, some of the different hairs the Senator has mentioned would give the purchaser a better grade than if he got pure wool; but the object of this bill is to protect the consumer as well as the producer of wool. It is to protect the producer of wool, the sheepman, and the producers of these other things, from the fraud that is perpetrated upon the consumer when he buys something that is marked "all wool" or "wool," when in effect it is not wool, because it has been chopped up into what, in common parlance among manufacturers, is called shoddy.

The Senator from Oklahoma talks about going into the Sahara Desert and digging up the hair of camels which has been there for a thousand years. The fact is that it would be impossible to go there and dig up enough camel's hair to make a coat, and it would be entirely too expensive to attempt to do it; and if the goat whiskers of all the goats in the country were put together it would be impossible to make one good coat of them.

The Senator talks about sagebrush. Just as good wool can be obtained from sheep raised in New Mexico on sagebrush, as from sheep raised in Ohio or in Montana or some other place, and fed on alfalfa.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, sheep raising on the desert has been one of the principal industries of my State for almost 400 years, and it has been rather successful; and the wool thus produced is far better than any second-hand wool.

Let me ask, What would Senators think if a dealer in Washington were selling as new cars, second-hand motor cars that had been run until they were worn out, and were then taken in and reconditioned and painted? There is not a Member of the Senate who would not rise in opposition to such a practice and demand that it be discontinued, but that is exactly what is happening in the wool trade. Second-hand wool, worn-out wool, is reconditioned and made into nice-looking suits and sold as a new product; and nobody can tell from looking at it that it is not new, any more than they could tell that a reconditioned car, nicely painted up, was not a new one. That sort of thing is a fraud on the consumer and a fraud on the producer of wool, and we are trying to stop such fraud.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, replying to the suggestion just made that a dealer in Washington might paint up some old second-hand cars and sell them for new ones, let me say that anyone who would buy that kind of a car would be a fit subject for St. Elizabeths. It might be said that one who would buy a shoddy suit would also be a fit subject for St. Elizabeths; but when it is impossible to tell the difference, when experts cannot tell the difference, when nobody can tell the difference, how can a purchaser tell whether he is getting a suit made out of virgin wool or a suit made out of reprocessed wool?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish to say that he has been quite facetious throughout his entire remarks on this subject. It is not a facetious matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. With me it is not.

Mr. HATCH. It is a serious matter to the wool producers of my State and to the consumers of the country. The very fact that the nature of the product cannot be told by looking at it requires the honest labeling of the product, and that is all we are asking.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will yield in a moment. Then, to do that, it will be necessary to have an army of inspectors. At the place where the suit is made from the cloth there must be an inspector to see that it is properly labeled. At the place where the cloth is made an inspector must see that it is properly made from virgin wool. At the spinner's an inspector must be stationed to see that the yarn is spun from virgin wool. There will have to be a flock of inspectors at every mill, at every store, at every tailor shop, at every factory that makes clothes in America.

We do not have access to the mills in foreign countries. A large part of the goods we buy in America is made abroad. Much of the yarn comes from abroad, or formerly did. We cannot go to the mills in England, or in Scotland, or in France, or in other countries and inspect their cloth, inspect their suits, or inspect their wool. We must take their statements on faith. If they send us cloth, as they do by the millions of yards, branded as pure wool, and we cannot tell the difference, and have no system by which we can do so, how will this bill protect the poor consumer? How will he be protected if no one on the face of the earth can tell whether a suit made of cloth shipped from England is made of virgin wood, or reprocessed wool, or even reused wool?

This bill gives the foreign manufacturer, the foreign spinner, the foreign wool grower, the foreign weaver, the foreign suit maker an advantage over American manufacturers; and I am opposed to it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I desire to take a little of the smell out of the billygoat that has been referred to, and explain to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] some of the difficulties that seem to bother him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to hear the explanation. I did not know before that goat's hair was wool, and I am bothered about it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It is a lone goat the Senator from Oklahoma is talking about, because the Cashmere goat and the Angora goat are not billygoats; so we are talking about two different kinds of goats.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This bill makes no distinction.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I want to explain to the Senator the particular point I have in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to hear the explanation.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Under the head of wool products and wool—that is, of course, a generic term—I include the stuff that we are going to require to be labeled. If I had been fortunate enough to have the attention of the Senator from Tennessee yesterday, when he was away on more important business on one of our committees—I know what took him away—he would have heard, and if he will read the RECORD he will find in it a complete explanation of the term "wool," and why it is used. With due respect to anybody else's idea about definitions, although this bill says "hair," he will also find that Webster's Dictionary and the Standard Dictionary define the hair of the Angora goat and of the Cashmere goat as wool, and I put those definitions in the RECORD.

Now I want to explain the particular thing the Senator from Tennessee has in mind.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I cannot yield for that purpose. I will yield for a question, but I cannot yield for a statement.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If the Senator will yield for a moment, I will explain the particular thing the Senator from Tennessee has in mind about labeling.

In addition to the ability to label these things, as I explained yesterday, I call the Senator's attention simply to a section of this bill, the Senate bill and the House bill. It reads:

The Commission—

That is, the Federal Trade Commission—is authorized and directed to make rules and regulations for the manner and form of disclosing information required by this act, and for segregation of such information for different portions of a wool product as may be necessary to avoid deception or confusion, and to make such further rules and regulations under and in pursuance of the terms of this act as may be necessary and proper for administration and enforcement.

I will say further that in my time I shall endeavor to explain what the facts are in regard to practically all of what we have heard today.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill is as broad as the universe. It is not a bill limited to the United States Senate, or to the District of Columbia, or to the United States; it is as broad as the universe.

Mr. President, about 2½ pounds of raw wool are required to make 1 pound of what is called scoured wool. Wool fibers are hollow. I suppose not many Members of the Senate knew that to be a fact. Every wool fiber is a hollow tube. As the wool fiber comes from the sheep, the hollow tube is dirty on the inside and on the outside, and the dirt is called grease. The grease on a pound of wool is heavier than the wool itself; so, in order to make the wool a salable and usable product, some process must be used to extract the so-called grease from the wool. When the dirt or grease is taken from the wool, about 2½ pounds of wool as it comes from the back of the sheep is required to make 1 pound of wool ready for the carding machine.

Mr. President, I was about to ask a question a while ago. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] states that this bill is to protect the poor consumer. I exhibit here some samples of wool coming from Tennessee. There is no man in this Chamber, below or above, who can tell whether that is virgin wool or wool, or reprocessed wool, or used wool, or shoddy.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I am in the Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield. The label says "all wool."

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I desire to state to the Senator that I can take that very garment to the Department of Agriculture or to textile chemists, and they will tell me exactly how much virgin wool is in it and how much reworked wool is in it, and then I can tell the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I challenge that statement, and I am ready to produce the proof.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I will make it good with the proof before we get through.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I exhibit to the Senate a pamphlet, and I will first read from the testimony of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. For years he fathered this character of legislation. Finding that he could not draw a bill, and that a bill of any benefit could not be drawn, he gave up the ghost, so to speak. This is what the Senator from Kansas said on June 9, 1937:

It is yet impractical to determine with sufficient accuracy for law enforcement in border-line cases the amount of recovered wool fiber that may be present in any particular fabric or garment. Chemical analysis will not suffice, because the chemical content of wool remains substantially the same regardless of how many times it may have passed through processes of manufacture. Physical and microscopic analysis are helpful, but, as before stated, our scientists cannot yet determine, even by these means, with sufficient accuracy for law enforcement, the extent to which such adulterants have been used in the manufacture of wool fabrics.

This question has been before every Congress for many years, and every time a bill of this kind has been introduced, the question has been raised: Is it possible to tell the difference between virgin wool and reprocessed wool and used wool? No one has yet been able to determine that, and I shall produce further evidence.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Oklahoma says that it is not possible to tell the difference between virgin wool and other grades. The Senator from Wyoming says that if certain chemical and agricultural analyses are made, the difference can be told. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether there is any provision in the bill which will provide for some kind of examination such as I assume the Senator from Wyoming would make to ascertain the grade of the wool? If there is any particular process to which a piece of cloth may be put to ascertain whether or not it is wool or not wool, is such a process provided for in the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is absolutely none, and the author of the bill admits, as I shall show in a few moments, that it is not possible by any analysis or any test to tell whether wool is virgin wool, reprocessed wool, used wool, or shoddy. Reliance is not to be upon a test but upon inspectors to see what goes into the mill and what comes out of the mill, and to follow it all the way through.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not an expert in these matters, and am very green about them, as a matter of fact; but my question was prompted by this thought: If it were possible by a chemical analysis, or some other kind of examination, to determine whether wool was of one or another class, it seems to me such a test should be provided for in the bill as a requirement to all persons dealing in wool, whether they make cloth or sell it, to show whether, when they label it, it meets the particular acid test provided, assuming there is some means of ascertaining what the quality of the wool is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator will listen to me for a few moments, I shall answer his question in detail.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. For a question.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. A question? I want to answer the Senator. He attributed something to me.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There will be time to answer later. I did not bother the Senator yesterday, but if he makes a speech now, I will have to make another speech, and he will make another speech.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I beg the Senator's pardon; I do not wish to make a speech. The Senator has made the same speech three times.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think I have heard the Senator's speech four times. The Senator from Maryland asked whether there was any provision in the bill for making tests to ascertain whether or not wool is virgin wool, or reused wool, or reprocessed wool, or shoddy. There is no such provision in the bill, and I shall give the Senator the reason why there is no such provision.

On April 4, 1938, the National Association of Wool Manufacturers sent the author of this bill, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, a letter, and in that letter they made this proposition:

Our suggestions are as follows:

1. We to submit to you some 15 or 20 wool fabrics containing varying percentages of new and reworked wool fiber.

2. You to submit these samples to not less than four suitably equipped laboratories (maintained by the Government, textile schools, or commercial firms) for analysis as to their new and reworked wool fiber content, sealed reports from these laboratories in affidavit form to be submitted to your committee in a month's time or sooner if practicable.

3. At the time when these reports are publicly opened in the presence of interested parties, we will furnish you with the manufacturers' sworn statements of the fibers used in the manufacture of each fabric.

4. We will agree to drop our opposition to making a distinction between new and reworked wool in blends if there is a reasonable degree of agreement between the sworn statements of the manufacturers and the reports of the laboratories.

To that letter the Senator made no reply, I am advised.

On the 20th of April the president of the National Wool Growers' Association submitted the same form of letter, the identical letter, in effect, if not in words, to Mr. Henry Miller, of the Federal Trade Commission. To this letter Mr. Otis B. Johnson, secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, made reply. They submitted certain samples, and there were to be sealed statements as to what they contained, and when the fibers had been examined they were to be opened, and if they compared substantially the wool growers would cease their objections to the bill. This is what Mr. Otis B. Johnson, secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, said in reply to that communication:

It does not appear to the Commission that the proposal you present, if carried out, would serve any useful purpose in the public interest. It is therefore rejected.

The statement is noted that you will agree to drop your opposition—

And so forth. In other words, the Federal Trade Commission refused to cooperate or to participate in making the tests.

On May 6, 1938, the same association submitted the same sort of a letter to Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA, House of Representatives, and to that letter Mr. LEA made no reply.

On May 4, 1938, Mr. Edwin Wilkinson wrote a letter to Dr. J. I. Hardy. Mr. Wilkinson represented the National Wool Growers Association, and he submitted the letter to Mr. Hardy, who claimed to be an expert in this line. He claimed that he could tell the difference between virgin wool, reprocessed wool, and reused wool. This is the letter sent by the association to this so-called expert:

DEAR DR. HARDY: There is a so-called truth-in-fabric bill now before the Senate. It is S. 3502. It calls for the labeling of textile products and a distinction between virgin and reclaimed wool, which are defined.

Then he defines virgin wool as wool "that has never been spun or woven or knitted or felted nor used for any other purpose."

The term "reclaimed wool" means wool which has been reconverted into a loose, fibrous state after having been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise made into a wool product.

They submit samples. I shall read what Dr. J. R. Mohler, representing the United States Department of Agriculture, said about the matter. He answered for Dr. Hardy apparently, because Dr. Hardy was with the Bureau. This is what the United States Department of Agriculture had to say. The letter is dated May 13, 1938, is addressed to Mr. Edwin Wilkinson, National Association of Manufacturers, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.:

Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 4, directed to Dr. J. I. Hardy, of this Bureau, in which you state you are sending 24 samples of fabric and request that he analyze these fabrics and report on the percentage content of each type in accordance with the terms as defined in your letter, as being either virgin or reclaimed wool.

These samples have also been received. Dr. Hardy is traveling in the far West and he will be away from Washington about a month. We are therefore replying in his absence to advise you that the regulations of the Department of Agriculture prohibit such analyses as you request, as there is no law which provides for these tests. The regulation which applies to this case reads as follows.

So the Senator will see they got nothing from that Department.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. There seems to be a dispute, some Senators claiming that it is possible by certain tests——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am coming to that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Some Senators claiming that it is possible by certain tests to differentiate, and other Senators feel that there is no test which can be successfully made. I hope that before the debate is concluded some Senator will put into the RECORD just what is prescribed as a test to ascertain whether wool is virgin or not.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not mean now. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Oklahoma, but I should like to see the test printed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield at any time so as to make progress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator from Wyoming be in a position to submit the test?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Since the date of what the Senator has been reading, Mr. Hardy and Dr. Mohler, of the Department of Agriculture, and other textile experts, say they have found a way of determining within 10 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to see the manner of determination inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I will put it in the RECORD before we get through.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On May 4, 1938, a letter similar to the one to which I have referred was sent to the United States Department of Commerce. The same letter, with the same samples, was sent to the Department of Commerce, and this is what the Department of Commerce said in a letter signed by L. J. Briggs, Director, Bureau of Standards:

In reply to your letter of May 4, methods for the analysis of wool fabrics for the percentage content of virgin wool and of reclaimed wool, as defined, are not available here and so far as we are aware accepted methods have not been developed elsewhere. Therefore, we are unable to refer you to another laboratory for this test.

We regret that we cannot be of service in this instance.

On April 29, 1938, the same association sent a letter to Hatch Textile Research, Inc., located in New York. I will not read the letter, but it is the same kind of letter that was sent to all the so-called experts and research laboratories.

Here is a letter in reply to the letter just referred to, signed by Herman Harriman Hatch, president of Hatch Textile Research, Inc., fabric technicians and consultants, 355 Fifth Avenue, New York. The letter is dated May 4, 1938, and follows:

GENTLEMEN: In regard to your letter of April 29 asking us to give you the various percentages of different types of wool contained in the 24 samples sent to be tested, we regret to advise that this test, in our opinion, cannot be made accurately enough to be of any value in establishing the true percentages which went into the cloth originally.

Mr. President, if research laboratories, especially equipped for this class of business and for conducting these tests, are unable to determine whether a fabric is of virgin-wool fiber, or a reprocessed fiber, or a reused fiber, then who can tell? The manufacturer cannot tell. The spinner cannot tell. The weaver cannot tell. The cutter of the cloth for the suit cannot tell. The man who sews the suit cannot tell, and the man who wears the suit cannot tell. Yet the bill is predicated upon the premise that certain classes of wool are so inferior that they are not fit to be used in cloth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am informed by what I consider to be very reliable authority that a representative of the Bureau of Standards has testified on this subject in regard to the pending bill. Is that true? And if so, what is the testimony?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will look through the document I have in my hand and see. I have some other letters to which I shall refer.

On May 2 the same association, desiring to ascertain whether or not there was a test which could be made, sent a similar letter to the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau, Inc., in New York City, and on May 4, 2 days thereafter, the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau, Inc., New York City, replied as follows:

DEAR MR. WILKINSON: Under date of May 2 an order was issued by your association to this bureau to analyze 24 pieces of fabric for fiber identification under the classification of virgin wool and reclaimed wool.

This bureau does not have anyone on its staff qualified to classify microscopically wool fibers for commercial grading as virgin wool and reclaimed wool.

The test samples are being returned to you.

On May 5 the same association sent a similar letter to Mr. Frank Stutz, president of the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau, Inc., and on May 6 the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau replied to Mr. Wilkinson. I quote a portion of the letter. The first line simply refers to receipt of the communication:

I am sorry to state that we know of no person in the industry or testing business who has qualified to perform this service.

The national association sent a letter to this expert organization and asked them to recommend someone who could make the test and perform this service for the National Wool Manufacturers' Association, and the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau wrote back that they did not have anyone, and they knew of no person in the industry or testing business who has qualified to perform this service.

I would like to employ anyone having this unusual ability, as we have more difficulty in identifying the origin of animal fibers than all other problems in the testing business. It is our policy to insert the paragraph below on every report of fiber identification of mixed fibers in a fabric and composed of several animal fibers:

Here is the clause they insert in their report:

Due to the controversial nature of technical reportings on fiber contents of fabrics, this Bureau does not assume legal responsibility for any use of the information reported herein.

In other words, they simply say they cannot make the test, they know of no one who can make the test, and they know of no one who would assume or represent himself to be able to make the test.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if the tensile strength of yarn of uniform weight is any test at all in the purchase of wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the question really answers itself. I exhibit to the Senate samples of what is obviously very expensive cloth. It is obvious to me, and I think to anyone, that if these samples were torn apart and separated into the original fibers—the cloth has not been used, as can be seen—it would not be possible to tell the fiber from this piece of cloth from the fiber of the yarn from which the cloth was made originally, because it has not been worn, it has not been tested, it has not been stretched, it has not been used. So, the wool in this piece of cloth would be identical with the wool in the yarn from which the cloth was made, neither having been heretofore used.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder what buyers of wool use as a guide? That is what has been going through my mind. I am not taking issue with the Senator. I am merely trying to educate myself. Let us assume that a manufacturer wishes to buy wool to manufacture into cloth. There are different grades of wool for sale. We will assume 10 or 12 different lots of wool are lying on the floor, all different. I wonder what tests or standards the buyers of wool employ to ascertain the value of the wool in purchasing it from the person who may have it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am not in the wool business, and I am not qualified to answer the question with any expert knowledge, or practically any knowledge, but it is obvious that the wool spinners have been in their employ who are experts in wool, that is, in scoured wool. These experts know what good wool is, and what second-grade wool is, and what third-grade wool is, and so on down. So the spinners of yarn have such men in their employ in whom they have confidence, and they must do a good job or else they would not hold their positions. Wool is spun into yarn. Then the weavers——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Was the Senator talking about the purchaser of the wool in the first instance?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The raw wool; yes.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest that the Senator obtain a copy of the hearings and the investigation conducted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and myself. From the hearings he could read perhaps some of the most interesting information he ever read in his life, about the marketing of wool, and what the purchaser is up against in that end of the industry.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was going to submit this question a little while ago. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said that the bill was to protect the consumers from lack of information in buying suits and overcoats and articles made out of cloth. It is obvious from this bill that there may be taken the poorest grade of wool from a poor sheep, even though the sheep has been lying dead on the plains of the West all winter—and when spring comes the wool can be taken from such a sheep——

Mr. HATCH. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to say that we in the West have a habit of clipping wool from a sheep which has lain dead on the range all winter?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. To my certain knowledge wool growers, when they find that a sheep has died during the winter, will cut the wool from the sheep.

Mr. HATCH. They remove the pelt and sell the pelt.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They cut the wool from the sheep which has died either from starvation, from overeating, from eating too much cactus or shinnery, or from not eating enough, and which has lain dead in the open all winter. If the farmer can find that wool, it is saved. It is not worth much, but under this bill it is wool, just the same as fine, long-staple wool from the finest Merino sheep on the finest bluegrass farm in Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. What the Senator has said of the wool from the dead sheep in New Mexico, if he wants to say that, also applies——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. And the dead sheep in Oklahoma.

Mr. HATCH. That also applies to all the reclaimed wool, or second-hand wool, or ashcan wool that is today reworked, labeled, and sold, as I can show the Senator from the testimony, as virgin wool. Is that not correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator realizes, does he not, that that is the thing we are fighting?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Here are some samples of cloth. They are marked "all wool." So far as I know, the man does not live, who can by any known scientific test, determine with assurance that any one of these pieces of cloth is not from a dead sheep. By a dead sheep I mean one which has died from starvation, or for some other reason, and has lain dead in the open for a considerable period of time.

Mr. HATCH. Is it the Senator's argument that, because the consumer, when he comes to buy a suit of clothes, cannot tell that he is getting shoddy, he should have no protection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If we could do it, I would be for it.

Mr. HATCH. The objection of the Senator is based on the assumption that it is an impossible situation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This bill is not effective. It has no semblance of being effective. It cannot be enforced. It has no provision which can be enforced, save at the expense of untold millions of dollars.

Mr. HATCH. Might it not be worth one small effort to try it and see if it can be enforced?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at this time, when obviously the bill would raise the price of wool 5 cents a pound, because of the shortage of wool, it would raise the price of an outfit for a soldier $10 a year.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have served with the Senator from Oklahoma on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for so long, and have heard him argue so much for higher commodity prices, that I cannot understand why he is arguing today for lower prices on wool.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to answer questions as they come up. If wool were on the same percentage of parity as other farm commodities, the situation would be different; but wool heads the list. On the basis of a 100 percent parity price, wool stands at about 118 to 120; wheat stands at about 50; and corn at about 74. The prices of other products are in proportion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Because the prices of wheat and corn are down, the Senator would not also drag down the price of wool; would he?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am opposed to the enactment of legislation still further raising the price of wool when wool is above the parity price and when we must have wool at public expense to clothe some 2,000,000 of our soldiers. The bill is against national defense to that extent.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a statement showing the parity price of wool in relation to other farm products.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If we should take the samples of cloth which I hold in my hand and tear them apart, respin them into yarn, reweave the yarn into cloth, and cut from that cloth a suit of clothes, I contend that it would be an infinitely better suit of clothes from the standpoint of looks and wear than a virgin wool suit made from tags, flanks, and rear ends from poor sheep which have died from starvation. Under the terms of the bill such sheep would produce a class of wool which would rate with the highest, and the cloth made from that class of wool would be of the highest class.

The bill is called a truth-in-fabric bill. Mr. President, it is anything but a truth-in-fabric bill. If we could distinguish the hundreds of different classes of wool and tell from the suit of clothes what class of wool we were getting, I should be for such legislation, but no one is presuming to suggest that kind of legislation.

The bill divides wool into three classes. Everything which has not been used is "wool," and it is all on a par. Wool from the backs of the finest sheep is in the same category as wool from the backs of the poorest sheep. Under the terms of the bill wool from the poorest sheep would be the finest wool in the world. Yet if the finest wool in the world, after it has been spun into yarn and woven into cloth which is not used, is then respun and rewoven, it is second-class wool.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that it would be possible to make a test—I do not say it would be possible—and that an importer in good faith had bought a quantity of foreign woolens which were labeled "pure wool," and was making suits of clothes from that cloth, what would happen if by some test it could be shown that the wool was not up to standard?

I am assuming, for the sake of argument, that there might be such a test. I am wondering what the penalties would be, and what the procedure would be.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the first place, that fact could not be proved, because there is no test by which it could be proved, but if it could be proved, under the terms of the bill the goods which were complained of would be libeled, condemned, or requisitioned, and the owner of the goods would be taken into court. If convicted—and he could not be convicted as the result of any tests I know of—his goods could be condemned and sold or destroyed. The person who sold them could be notified, and I suppose he could obtain the goods by paying the costs and the fine.

Mr. TYDINGS. My question was predicated upon the assumption that the man had acted in good faith. In order to keep out of the clutches of the law, he would be required to have tests made of the goods before he turned them into suits. Otherwise, I do not know how in the world he would know whether or not he was selling pure wool goods, except by the statement of a foreign producer.

My question is based on the assumption I have stated. How would the importer of foreign goods be able to know whether or not he was buying what he thought he was buying, and selling what he thought he was selling, unless he could, in advance, submit the goods imported to some tests to make sure that they contained the requisite amount of wool?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is obvious that certain countries can produce sheep more cheaply than we can produce them in America. It is obvious that wool from such sheep can be sold on the world market more cheaply than we can produce wool and sell it on the world market. It is obvious that wool from the cheap sheep in foreign countries can be scoured more cheaply than we can scour it. It can be carded, spun, and woven more cheaply than we can perform those processes. After the war is over other nations of the world, such as Germany, Japan, France, and Great Britain, will go after what they can get. They will have no high labor standards. They will be lucky if they can get enough money for their labor to keep body and soul together. So if the bill should become a law the foreigner would have an unending advantage over the United States in the production of cloth. Producing it more cheaply than we can sell it, the foreigner can still make an ample profit; and in this country we shall have a flood of imported cloth, fabrics, and merchandise labeled "all wool," "wool product," or "100-percent wool." There is no test in America by which we can disprove such a label. We cannot prove that the goods are being mislabeled. We cannot put inspectors in foreign plants. No American inspectors will be standing guard to see that the wool which comes into the plants is virgin wool. We cannot send inspectors to see that the wool which is spun is not spun from odds and ends such as the samples which I have before me.

I exhibit to the Senate some wastes, taken from a tailor shop, I presume. I understand that in a tailor shop various kinds of cloth are used for trimming purposes, for lining purposes, and so forth. I hold a handful of waste cloth. I do not know what it is called. I understand that a tailor has a basket of odds and ends such as these samples. When a garment has been cut, the odds and ends go into the basket. When the basket is full, it is put into a bale. The bale of odds and ends of waste is sold and finally reaches some wool-manufacturing concern. There the wastes are sorted. The silks are thrown into one pile, the cotton goods into another pile, and the woolen cloth—if there be any—is thrown into another pile. Then the various piles are reworked or reprocessed. They are torn apart, down to the original fiber. Then they are dyed and the wool, fiber, or whatever it be, is spun into yarn. The yarn is rewoven into cloth, and we then have a new cloth, made from odds and ends such as these.

Under the terms of the bill, that cloth would have to be labeled "reprocessed cloth." It could not be called wool under the terms of the bill. If it be cotton, the bill does not apply to cotton. The bill does not apply to silk or to rayon. It applies only to wool. Again the bill is unfair. It is a wool bill. It does not protect the consumer from faulty silk, rayon, or cotton. It is only a wool bill. Yet it is so drawn that the highest quality of cloth made from reprocessed woolen yarn from the finest sheep, and which has never been worn, is classed as second-hand. The poor, worn-out cloth which is torn apart, respun, rewoven, and resold, is shoddy. Even the shoddy is all wool. It is a wool product. Under the terms of the bill one might go into a store, and the merchant might hand him a suit. The label on the suit would not state that it was a wool suit, but it would be a wool product. It would be a 100-percent reprocessed wool suit, or a 100-percent reused wool suit. But it would be all wool. In my judgment, the consumer—I care not who he might be—would prefer the lowest grade of an all-wool product to the finest grade of an all-cotton product. In that particular I contend that this is an anticotton bill, and I am opposed to it for that reason.

We now have on hand approximately 20,000,000 bales of cotton which we cannot sell. There is practically no market for cotton. The South depends upon cotton. Eleven or twelve States depend upon the production of cotton for their existence. We have 20,000,000 bales which we cannot sell. We are raising this year 13,000,000 bales which we cannot sell. Yet the Congress is now proposing to pass a bill still further raising the price of wool, when it is already above parity. If the bill should cause more wool to be used, it would cause less cotton to be used. To the extent that it is a wool-helping bill, to the same extent it is a cotton-harming bill. There is no argument against that statement. It is unanswerable.

All I am asking is that the bill be considered by some committee. It has not been considered by any committee. It has not been considered by the Senate, except for such consideration as was given to it yesterday and is being given to it today. We are called upon to vote on a bill covering the whole subject of wool, affecting all the sheep-raisers, all the cotton-raisers, all the cotton mills, all the woolen mills, all the labor in all the mills, and all the consumers, without knowing very much about what is in the bill.

Some very fine garments may be made from virgin wool. Also, some very poor garments may be made from virgin wool. Virgin wool is not fit for some garments.

Let me give an illustration. Three or 4 years ago I was going to Alaska in the summertime. I knew that it was colder in Alaska than it was in my own State or in Washington, and I was advised to take some rather heavy clothing, even in the summer. I thought I would need some heavy clothes. So I went to a store in Washington and asked for some heavy woolen hose. I wanted them all wool; I wanted warm wool. The merchant brought out some hose and asked what size I wore. I told him about No. 11. He showed me a pair of hose. They were ribbed; the creases of the ribs were half an inch wide; the hose were very fluffy and very thick. The hose proper were about that long [indicating] and the feet about that long [indicating]; in other words, about 18 inches high and 15 inches long for the foot. I said, "I cannot wear a pair of hose of that size; I could get both feet in either hose." The clerk said, "When they are laundered they will be smaller." I wanted the hose; I expected to wear them in rather heavy shoes; so I purchased a pair. When I put them on my shoes were too small, and I had to get a larger pair of shoes to wear wtih this bunch of fluffy woolen called hose. But I got by, for in Alaska I wore gum boots most of the time. I sent these hose to the laundry, and I am going to show the Senate what I mean. The hose I purchased were larger than these [exhibiting]. The hose I exhibit to the Senate are presumed to be made of virgin wool. These are not the ones I purchased but they are similar in size, although they are smaller. The ones I purchased had ribs down the side and were much larger than these. After I had worn these hose a time or two, and had them sent to the laundry, the first time they came back; they fit pretty well; the second time they came back they were this size [exhibiting]. [Laughter.] That is what two launderings did for my wool hose.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma does not mind my interjecting the remark, it looks as if he visited the Eskimos while he was in Alaska.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot wear these any more. [Laughter.] I am going to have them laundered again, and when my grandson is old enough to wear shoes I will send them to him. I hope they will not be too small for him to wear.

Mr. President, that is an illustration why a certain class of goods cannot be made out of virgin wool.

I might say that I bought some underclothes for the same trip. [Laughter.] I got them at the Raleigh Haberdasher; they were all wool and were amply large, but after they had been sent to the laundry I tried my best to get into them and failed. I notified the laundry and they promptly paid for the underclothes. They would fit a boy about 6 or 7 years old after one laundering; after the second laundering, they would fit a boy about 3 years old, and after the third laundering a midget youngster.

Mr. President, I shall not go further into the particular matter, except to say that pure wool for underwear is not good. If anyone wants good woolen underwear, let him get some 50-percent silk and 50-percent wool. The wool will give warmth, the silk strength and keep the garment from stretching or shrinking.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. While the Senator is reminiscing, I should like to make one contribution to his collection. I do not know what is the matter with the wool business, but during the debate on the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, when we were told that the chief necessity for wool was a higher tariff—and I subscribed to that theory—the then distinguished Senator from Alabama, Mr. Heflin, suggested that the tariff did not have anything to do with the wool business, that when women wore the clothes God intended them to wear it took two sheep working 1 year to clothe a woman, but that now one silk worm can do it working on Sunday afternoons. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am as much in favor of a truth-in-fabrics bill as any other Member of the Senate can be, but we do not have such a bill before us. Nobody knows what we do have before us. Yet we are called upon to vote upon it.

I have one more letter which I should like to place in the RECORD to show that there is no method by which wool can be tested to determine whether it is virgin wool or reclaimed wool. I do not know whether this article [exhibiting] is made of virgin wool or not. The man who wove this pair of hose does not know whether they are made of virgin wool or not; the man who spun the yarn from which they were made does not know whether they are made of virgin wool or not; the only person who could possibly know whether the wool in the hose is virgin wool or reused wool or reprocessed wool is the man who bought the wool and actually took it from the bin, if that is the proper term, and started it through the machine that spun it into yarn. He would know, perhaps, what kind of wool is in the pair of hose which I exhibit to the Senate.

The United States Testing Co. has general offices at 1415 Park Avenue, Hoboken, N. J. The National Association of Wool Manufacturers submitted samples to this testing company and asked them if they could tell whether or not the wool in certain samples was virgin wool or reused wool or reprocessed wool. Omitting the first part of the letter, which does not bear on the point I wish to bring before the Senate, I read from the paragraph which does:

> From all of the tests we have made showing the varying lengths of fibers, the amount and kind of foreign fibers along with the microscopic determination of frayed fiber ends, we are unable to state definitely whether the wool is virgin or reworked. Not being able to definitely distinguish between the fibers, we, of course, can give no figures as to the amount of virgin or reworked wool present in the various samples.
> (Signed) C. J. HUBER,
> Director of Laboratory.

Mr. President, it cannot be denied that there is no known test which can determine definitely whether a fiber has ever been used, whether a fiber is a virgin fiber, which means that it has never been used or placed into a thread and then woven, or whether it has been spun, then woven into cloth and perhaps cut into a garment and then sent back and reprocessed.

Take the suits worn by Senators. If they could be sent to a testing laboratory, after having first been processed, there is no known test so far as I am aware—and I have made search—that could determine whether or not the wool in the suits which Senators wear at present, if reduced back to a raw state, had been used or whether it had not been used. So I contend that this bill affords no protection whatever to the consumer; and the consumer whom the author has in mind, obviously, is the man who cannot afford to buy very many wool suits. If something could be done to protect him, I would only be too glad to vote for such a bill; but this bill is going to raise the price of wool; it will raise the price of raw wool; and, inferentially, I think, will raise the price of all wool, because it places the poorest grade of wool above the highest grade of cotton—that will be the psychology—and if this bill should pass, a piece of cloth containing cotton would be laid aside; and yet some cloth made partly of cotton and partly of wool is much better than cloth made out of all wool. I exhibit to the Senate some heavy overcoat material. Any Senator on examining the material will notice, I think, that the warp, as it is called, is made of a white thread which is cotton. That gives it strength; it will not stretch and will not expand. The parts in front and back are made of wool. It is contended that cloth of that character is much better and much stronger and much more durable and will wear longer and hold its shape better and look better than if made of pure wool.

I am told that cloth made of pure wool, when it gets wet and then dries, shrinks, and I think that is correct as I have shown here by the illustrations that came under my observation.

The cloth which is made into the uniforms of our soldiers is made according to special specifications. The War Department and the Navy Department have experimented for years, and they know the kind of cloth and the weight of cloth and the kind of wool that will make the best uniforms from the standpoint of wear and serviceability and warmth to protect the soldiers; so they have their cloth made under special specifications, and they have men standing at all the machines to see to it that they get what they purchase. Otherwise, they would not know.

So the only way in which the Army can protect itself in its plans and specifications, to see that it gets what it orders, is to have men inspect the product at every stage of the proceeding, just as the Board of Army Engineers, when they start to build a structure—I do not care what it is—have men present to inspect everything. The gravel is inspected before it goes into the concrete. The cement is inspected before it is wet and placed in the gravel. It has to be up to a certain specification and a certain standard. The gravel is inspected, the cement is inspected, the quarries are inspected; everything that goes into the concrete, or whatever it may be, is inspected from beginning to end from the inception to the finished product; and, if this bill becomes effective, the same procedure must be followed.

Unless we are willing to provide inspectors at every point along the process of wool from the sheep's back to the finished product, we should not now pass this bill. If we desire at this time, still further to raise the price of wool, of course, we may pass the bill; but, Mr. President, wool is going up in price all the time.

I exhibit to the Senate a copy of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial of date September 11, Wednesday, yesterday. I read from page 11, under the title "Worsted Yarn Moving Upward." I read a portion of the article:

> Wool tops are an average 2 cents per pound higher than in the previous week.

So wool tops went up 2 cents last week. Wool tops are the best grade of wool. They are the highest-class wool from the sheep.

I read another line from this article. It is, as I say, on page 11 of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial of date September 11. It says:

> Fine domestic tops are now quoted $1.10 to $1.12; blended fine, $1.04 to $1.06.

Then it goes on down the grades to lower grades, and finally gets down to 90 cents. That is the finished wool. That is wool which has been processed, has been scoured, as it is called, and has been sent through the process, and is now ready for the factory for weaving purposes. So wool is going up.

I read in another place on the same page:

> Wool top futures closed very steady at 3 to 15 points advance yesterday.

So, Mr. President, wool is advancing daily, because of the fact that the Army and the Navy are in the market for the purchase of millions of dollars' worth of cloth. We have to equip 2,000,000 soldiers. If 3 suits a year are required by a soldier, as is estimated to be the case if they are in service, and 4 yards of cloth are required to make a uniform, 4 times 3 is 12; that is, 12 yards of the best grade of wool cloth to equip 1 of our soldiers for a year. From 3½ to 4 yards are required to make an overcoat for a soldier, and about 3½ yards are required to make a blanket for a soldier. A great deal of wool is required to make the cloth to equip a soldier, and it is estimated that this bill, if it raises the price of wool 5 cents a pound, will raise the cost to the Government of outfitting a soldier for 1 year from seven and a half to eight dollars. Two million times seven and a half dollars is $15,000,000. So if this bill passes and does what its proponents say it will do, it will cost the United States Government some $15,000,000 a year more to equip and uniform our soldiers than it would cost if the bill were not enacted.

Mr. President, I say again that this bill should go to conference; but it cannot now be sent to conference. There are some motions in the way. I cannot make a motion to send it to conference. The only way in which the bill can go to conference is by unanimous consent or by rejecting the motion which was made yesterday by the author of the bill.

I think the RECORD should show at some place the differences between the Senate bill and the House bill. The Senate bill as it passed this body is not printed. The House bill as it passed the other body is not printed, save in the amendment that came here. It has not been printed since it came here. We have two or three engrossed copies; that is all; so no one knows what the bill contains.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am obliged to leave the Senate tonight, and within a very few moments. Before going I desire to go on record as favoring the amendments offered by the senior Senator from Oklahoma and to state that I am opposed to the pending bill, which I understand to be the House substitute for the Senate bill.

I discussed this subject quite at large when it was previously under consideration, and I think I need not now discuss it further; but I want Senators to know that I have not changed my position; that the improvements made in the bill by the House are not sufficient to move me to support the bill. If I were able to be here and vote, I should vote for the amendments of the Senator from Oklahoma and against the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may show that there are differences between the House amendment as it is now before this body and the Senate bill as it passed this body and went to the House, I present for the RECORD and ask that the clerk read each amendment, stating what the Senate bill provided, and then, following that, what the House has provided in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN S. 162 AND H. R. 944

1. Page 1, subdivision (b), Senate 162, defines wool as follows:
"(b) The term 'wool' means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb."

Under the provisions of the House amendment, the term wool is defined as follows:

"(b) The term 'wool' means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat (and may include the so-called specialty fibers from the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, and vicuna) which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product."

2. Subdivision (c) of Section 2 of S. 162 defines virgin wool as follows:

"(c) The term 'virgin wool' means wool which has never been reclaimed from any spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured product."

While the House amendment modifies said subdivision (c) so that same reads as follows:

"(c) The term 'reprocessed wool' means the resulting fiber when wool has been woven or felted into a wool product which, without ever having been utilized in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state."

3. Subdivision (d), Section 2, of S. 162, defines reclaimed wool as follows:

"(d) The term 'reclaimed wool' means wool which has been made into a fibrous state after having been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured."

While subdivision (d) of the House amendment amends subdivision (d) to read as follows:

"(d) The term 'reused wool' means the resulting fiber when wool or reprocessed wool has been spun, woven, knitted, or felted into a wool product which, after having been used in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state."

4. Subdivision (e) of section 2 of S. 162 defines "wool product", as follows:

"(e) The term 'wool product' means any product made from the fiber of the fleece of the sheep or lamb and containing the percentage of wool as provided in subsection (A) of paragraph (2) of section 4 of this act."

While the House amendment amends said subdivision (e) to read as follows:

"(e) The term 'wool product' means any product, or any portion of a product, which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool."

5. Lines 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 of section 3 of S. 162 read as follows: "or ship or sell or offer for sale in commerce, or who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver to any other person, any such wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

The House has amended such lines to read as follows: "or ship or sell or offer for sale in commerce, any such wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

6. In line 3 of paragraph (a) on page 4 of S. 162, we find the word "nor" and the House has amended said word "nor" to read "or."

7. The first six lines of paragraph (A) of Section 4 on page 4 of S. 162, read as follows:

"(A) The percentage of the total fiber weight of the wool product, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight, of (1) virgin wool; (2) reclaimed wool; (3) each fiber other than wool if said percentage by weight of such fiber is 5 percent or more; and (4) the aggregate of all other fibers: * * *."

While the House has amended said lines to read as follows:

"(A) The percentage of the total fiber weight of the wool product, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight, of (1) wool; (2) reprocessed wool; (3) reused wool; (4) each fiber other than wool if said percentage by weight of such fiber is 5 percent or more; and (5) the aggregate of all other fibers: * * *."

8. Paragraph (C) on page 5 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"(C) Either the name of the manufacturer of the wool product, or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product, or the name of said manufacturers, and the names of one or more of such other persons."

While the House amendment to said paragraph (C) reads as follows:

"(C) The name of the manufacturer of the wool product and/or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product."

9. Subdivision 3 of said section 4 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"(3) In the case of a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool contents thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying the presence of wool, used in connection with such wool product."

While the House amendment to said subdivision (3) reads as follows:

"(3) In the case of a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool contents thereof are not shown in words and figures plainly legible."

10. Subdivision 4 of section 4 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"(4) In the case of a wool product represented as virgin wool, if the percentages by weight of the virgin wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying such wool product is virgin wool, or if the total fiber weight of such wool product is not 100 percent virgin wool exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight."

While the House amendment to said subdivision 4 of section 4 reads as follows:

"(4) In the case of a wool product represented as wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures plainly legible, or if the total fiber weight of such wool product is not 100 percent wool exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of such total fiber weight."

11. Lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 of section 5 of S. 162, read as follows:

"Content of the wool product, and other information required under section 4, shall be and remain affixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state or is contained in garments or other articles made in whole or in part therefrom, until sold to the consumer."

The House amendment strikes such lines and inserts the following:

"Content of the wool product or any other products contained therein in an amount of 5 percent or more by weight and other information required under section 4, shall be and remain affixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state or is contained in garments or other articles made in whole or in part therefrom, until sold to the consumer: Provided, That the name of the manufacturer of the wool product need not appear on the substitute stamp, tag, or label if the name of the person who affixes the substitute appears thereon."

12. In line 21 on page 7 of S. 162, the Senate bill refers to "wool products" while the House amendment strikes the word "wool" and inserts the word "wood." (The word "wood" is obviously a misprint and should be changed to the word "wool.")

13. The first paragraph of subdivision (b) of section 6 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"(b) Every manufacturer of wool products shall maintain complete and accurate records showing the fiber content as required by this act of all wool products made by him, and shall preserve such records for at least 5 years."

While the House amendment changes said subdivision (b) of said section 6 to read as follows:

"(b) Every manufacturer of wool products shall maintain proper records showing the fiber content as required by this act of all wool products made by him, and shall preserve such records for at least 3 years."

14. Paragraph (a) of section 9 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"(a) No person shall be guilty under section 3 if he establishes a guaranty received in good faith, signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured for introduction into commerce and/or from whom it was received in commerce, that said wool product is not misbranded under the provisions of this act."

While the House amendment to said paragraph (a) of said section changes such paragraph to read as follows:

"(a) No person shall be guilty under section 3 if he establishes a guaranty received in good faith signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured and/or from whom it was received, that said wool product is not misbranded under the provisions of this act."

15. Paragraph (b) of section 9 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"(b) Any person who furnishes a false guaranty, except a person relying upon a guaranty to the same effect received in good faith, signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured for introduction into commerce and/or from whom it was received in commerce, with reason to believe the wool product falsely guaranteed may be introduced, sold, transported, or distributed in commerce, is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

While the House amended said section (b) of section 9 to read as follows:

"(b) Any person who furnishes a false guaranty, except a person relying upon a guaranty to the same effect received in good faith, signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured and/or from whom it was received, with reason to believe the wool product falsely guaranteed may be introduced, sold, transported, or distributed in commerce, is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

16. Section 12 of S. 162 reads as follows:

"SEC. 12. This act shall take effect 6 months after the date of its passage."

While the House amended said section 12 to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. This act shall take effect 9 months after the date of its passage."

17. S. 162 contains but 13 sections, while the House amendment contains 14 sections, and said new section 14, added by the House, reads as follows:

"SEC. 14. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to apply to the manufacture, delivery for shipment, shipment, sale, or offering for sale any carpets, rugs, mats, or upholsteries, nor to any person manufacturing, delivering for shipment, shipping, selling, or offering for sale any carpets, rugs, mats, or upholsteries."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am prefectly willing to have a vote on my motion to send the bill to the committee to consider these amendments. The Clerk has just taken about 15 minutes to read the changes made by the House in the Senate text, and these are the things upon which we are called to vote. They are not printed, and no one knows what they are. I have studied them for days in an effort to ascertain what they mean, and I have given my interpretation of the changes in the statement just read. The bill has not been printed, and no one knows what is in it save one or two Senators on the floor, and it occurs to me it is a bad practice to take any measure half baked, sight unseen. No one knows what the provisions are, and if the motion presented by the Senator from Wyoming shall be agreed to, the bill will go to the President without a change. It is a pig in a poke. No one in either body knows what it provides. So I think it is better that it should go back to the committee for consideration of the amendments. If the committee brings back recommendations, I shall be satisfied. I know there is a majority in the Senate in favor of this class of legislation, and I, myself, am in favor of some kind of legislation along this line, if it can be so framed as to protect the interests which I represent.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, while I do not like to take the time of the Senate, because I know there are other important matters pressing, I feel that, in justice to the bill, I should make some reference to it in addition to what I stated yesterday. I had thought yesterday that, so far as these amendments were concerned, I had explained them all in detail one after the other. My statement went into the RECORD, and I believe the Senators who were present understood what the amendments were.

The Senator from Oklahoma has been speaking for 3 hours and a half, and in all probability he has confused the issue to some extent. I thought at first that the Senator from Oklahoma probably had a blind spot on this bill, but as he has proceeded and has spoken in great detail, I think he is acting in good faith, but I cannot help recalling a story I heard about a happening which took place in Oklahoma once upon a time.

A colored man had a fine big mule, which he sold to a planter. The planter said, "What kind of a mule is this?" The colored man replied, "He is a fine mule. There is nothing the matter with him. He has good eyesight, and all that." So the planter bought the mule and turned him out. Pretty soon the mule began running around. The first thing it did was to run over a flock of lambs and kill two or three of them. Then he ran over a chicken coop and upset that. Finally he ran "kerplunk" against a cotton gin, and it sort of knocked him out. The planter said to the colored man, "I thought you told me that mule was not blind." The darkey replied, "No, boss; that mule ain't blind. He just don't give a damn." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I wish to refer to some of the things which have been said here today. First, I believe I shall discuss the question whether the bill is an anticotton bill or not. I recall when we had the bill before the Senate for consideration, that just before the Senate, by a vote of 2 to 1, passed the measure, the distinguished senior Senator from that great cotton-producing State of Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] [laughter]——

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield for that purpose?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. WALCOTT, and Mr. GIFFORD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9980) to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS—TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma to refer to the Committee on Interstate Commerce the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Before the quorum call was had, I stated that I considered the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], which is next to be voted upon, to send the bill to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce for further consideration, to be simply a motion to kill the bill. In my judgment, if that motion prevails that will be its effect.

The Senator has said here time and time again in the course of his remarks that he thinks the bill should be sent to conference, but that he cannot make a motion to that effect and have it voted upon until after my motion to approve the House amendment shall have been acted upon. Yet while he thinks the bill should go to conference, he purposes to offer his motion to kill it, and then he has three dilatory motions which he expects to present, and have them voted upon in the hope of killing the bill.

Mr. President, I think a motion of this kind, which will directly kill the bill, and evidently is intended for that purpose, should be voted down. Ultimately the Senate will vote on my motion, and if that does not prevail, the Senate will vote on the motion to send the bill to conference.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago, before the quorum call, that the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] in the closing debate on the bill in the Senate suddenly presented to the Senate the argument that the wool bill, as he called it, would injure the cotton industry, and he played upon that theme for quite a while. I was surprised, of course, to see that a Senator from a State which produces so much reworked wool and puts it on the market, should be so much interested in the fortunes of the cotton growers and not in the fortunes of his own manufacturers.

The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma called to mind that the argument thus suddenly made by the Senator from Vermont did frighten several of the southern Senators out of the Chamber, or at least sufficiently to change their minds, so that they voted contrary to the way they had previously indicated they would vote, and trading on experience, the Senator from Oklahoma has now endeavored to repeat and elaborate upon the suggestion that this is an anticotton bill.

Mr. President, I shall refer to a few statements made by persons who know something about the cotton business. In the first place I shall read a letter from Ezra T. Benson, who is the secretary-treasurer of the National Cooperative Council. It is dated July 24, 1939, and is addressed to Hon. ELMER THOMAS, United States Senate.

It was written the day after we had voted on the bill here. Mr. Benson says:

NATIONAL COOPERATIVE COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1939.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 21 indicated that you had moved to reconsider the vote on the truth-in-fabrics bill which had passed the Senate by a vote of 48 to 23.

We know of your long service to agriculture and your cooperation in matters of vital interest to the farmers of the United States. It is because of this fact that we appeal to you on behalf of the 1,700,000 farmers that are members of the National Cooperative Council that you do not request a reconsideration of this matter.

The council is made up of some 4,000 farmers' cooperative marketing and purchasing organizations with membership in every State in the Union. For a number of years our organization has been interested in truth-in-fabrics legislation and at the 1939 annual meeting held in January reaffirmed its position by passing the following resolution:

"The National Cooperative Council at its meeting in January 1938 endorsed the fabric-labeling bill, and the bill, though passed by the Senate, failed to be reported in time to get on the House Calendar. The council, therefore, reaffirms its position and urges the passage of new fabric-labeling bills, S. 162 and H. R. 944."

You raised the question whether the Schwartz bill, S. 162, would injure the cotton farmers. We are unable to see how this type of legislation would injure the producers of cotton. We feel that truth-in-fabrics legislation would tend to benefit the entire cotton industry. As a matter of fact, one of the strong federations that make up the membership of this council is the American Cotton Cooperative Association, with headquarters at New Orleans. This organization is made up of some 12 State cooperative associations of cotton growers. The American Cotton Cooperative Association is supporting this truth-in-fabrics legislation and were represented at our annual meetings when resolutions favoring this legislation were adopted.

Our council operates on a unanimous-consent basis, and for that reason never passes any resolutions that are not approved by all of its member associations.

We respectfully urge that you lend your support to the passage of this important measure and assure you that we will greatly appreciate your efforts.

With every good wish,
Sincerely yours,

EZRA T. BENSON,
Secretary-Treasurer, National Cooperative Council.

Mr. President, I read that letter on the theory that probably all the cotton growers in the South—the men who actually grow cotton—know something about cotton, and that these cooperatives, which have been in existence for many years, and have had this question before them all these years, probably know what they want, and probably have a very intelligent idea as to whether or not this proposed legislation will adversely affect cotton.

I have a letter addressed to me by W. R. Ogg, director of research of the American Farm Bureau Federation. It reads as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., July 22, 1939.

Hon. H. H. SCHWARTZ,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I note in the debate on the truth-in-fabric bill in the Senate a question was raised as to whether this bill would result in decreasing the consumption of cotton.

Such a fear is entirely unwarranted. From my investigation of this matter I am convinced that it will probably result in increasing the consumption of cotton, rather than decreasing it, if it has any effect at all in this respect.

Without this legislation manufacturers of woolen goods can purchase rags and other second-hand materials, tear apart these fabrics, and use them in the manufacture of clothing which is sold to the public as all-wool. Thus the public gets an inferior article under the false impression that this is made of new wool. This bill merely requires the manufacturers of woolen goods to tell the truth as to the content of such goods. They can no longer sell goods made of second-hand wool as virgin-wool articles. The manufacturers can still use shoddy, or cotton, or silk, or rayon, or any other materials in mixture with wool, provided they tell the consumer the truth about what the article contains.

While no one can predict with certainty changes in consumer demand, it seems reasonable to conclude that if the manufacturers have to tell the truth about mixtures with wool the consumer will be more likely to prefer a garment composed of all new materials, such as wool and cotton, to a garment made out of wool rags and other second-hand materials whose fibers have been damaged by pulling and tearing a part of the fabric in the process of remanufacture.

The American Farm Bureau Federation has supported such legislation since 1920. Its policies are determined by voting delegates from State farm bureaus in 40 States, representing approximately one and one-half million individual farm people. We are just as vitally interested in the welfare of the cotton farmer as the welfare of the wool grower. We see nothing in this legislation to injure in any way the welfare of the cotton grower, but, on the contrary, it may have some indirect benefit to the cotton industry.

Again may I emphasize that all the bill does is to require manufacturers of woolen goods to tell the truth concerning the content of their goods. They are at perfect liberty to use any kind of materials they desire, but they can no longer deceive the public concerning such goods. This is a fundamental principle of common honesty comparable to what has already been accomplished in other fields through the Pure Food and Drugs Act.

It carries out the fundamental principle of fair competition as stated by the late Justice Cardozo in the case of the Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co. (291 U. S. 67): "Fair competition is not obtained by balancing a gain in money against a misrepresentation of the thing supplied. The courts must set their faces against a conception of business standards so corrupting in its tendency. The consumer is prejudiced if upon giving an order for one thing he is supplied with something else * * *. In such matters the public is entitled to get what it chooses, though the choice may be dictated by caprice or by fashion or perhaps by ignorance. Nor is the prejudice only to the consumer. Dealers and manufacturers are prejudiced when orders that would have come to them if (they) had been rightly named are diverted to others whose methods are less scrupulous."

The Senate is to be commended for its decisive vote in approving this bill yesterday. We sincerely hope that this action will not be reconsidered. It is too bad such legislation was not passed long ago to end the flagrant abuses in the sale of woolen goods.

Sincerely yours,

W. R. OGG, Director.

I have a letter addressed to me from R. E. Freer, Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, which reads as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, July 28, 1939.

Hon. H. H. SCHWARTZ,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWARTZ: I have received and presented to the Commission your letter of July 27, 1939, referring to the wool-products labeling bill, S. 162, and propounding two questions: First, as to whether the bill adversely affects cotton; and, second, whether the provisions of the bill will be effective with respect to imports from foreign countries.

The Commission has considered the matter in the light of its many years of experience respecting commercial practices in the sale and distribution in commerce of fabrics and fabric merchandise; and, responding to your first question, it is the opinion of the Commission that the legislation under consideration will have no adverse effect upon the sale or use of cotton.

As a textile fiber, cotton has distinctive qualities and intrinsic merits, and the bill, requiring truthful disclosure, would undoubtedly tend toward having these meritorious qualities of cotton brought to the attention of the buying public. Moreover, in mixed fabrics, those not composed wholly of virgin wool, cotton may reasonably be expected to be employed in place of cheap shoddy or low-grade second-hand wool fibers which are at present used in such mixed products without disclosure of such fact to the consuming public. Under all the circumstances, it appears quite possible that as a result of the legislation the trend will be toward a greater use of cotton in mixed goods in lieu of certain types of shoddy.

The bill does not prohibit the use of any fiber, but is aimed at having the respective products marketed under nondeceptive conditions of truthful disclosure in the interest of maintaining fair competition and consumer protection. Experience has demonstrated that honest disclosure of a meritorious fiber does not hurt, but on the contrary helps its sale. Cotton with its many distinctive and desirable properties could not, in our opinion, be adversely affected in such situation.

Respecting your second question as to whether the bill will be effective in the matter of imports from foreign countries, the measure is applicable to such foreign imports as well as to domestic wool products. In addition, the bill provides means for excluding from the country foreign merchandise misbranded under its terms. It also provides for sworn declaration of contents on so-called consular invoices as required in the act of June 17, 1930; also the falsification of or the failure to set forth such information in such invoices is made an unfair method of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act. If done with willful intent, it is also punishable as a misdemeanor. Moreover, the guilty party may be prohibited from importing or participating in importations of wool products into the United States except upon filing bond with the Secretary of the Treasury in the sum double the value of the wool products and the duty thereof, conditioned upon compliance with the provisions of the act. Upon general administrative procedures through treaty arrangements, information may be obtained from the original sources in the country of origin of the goods. Likewise, through scientific tests, the presence of the most objectionable types of shoddy in the fabric can be sufficiently detected for purposes of enforcement.

Upon consideration of the matter as a whole and in answering your question specifically, it is the opinion of the Commission that the provisions of the bill will be effective with respect to imports from foreign countries.

By direction of the Commission.

Yours very sincerely,

R. E. FREER, Chairman.

I have a letter dated August 28, 1940, from Grover P. Hill, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, addressed to Mr. W. R. Ogg, director of research of the American Farm Bureau Federation. The letter reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, August 28, 1940.

MR. W. R. OGG,
Director of Research, American Farm Bureau Federation,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. OGG: This is in further reply to your letter of August 5 in which you called attention to the letter of July 27, 1939, from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to Senator THOMAS, with respect to the possible effects of S. 162, the truth-in-fabrics bill, on the consumption of cotton in the woolen and worsted industry, and asked if the Department had been able to give the problem further study since that time.

Information has not been readily available to show the extent to which information, such as consumers would obtain as a result of such legislation, might cause a shift from the use of cotton to the use of wool in the woolen and worsted industry. The data published by the Bureau of the Census in the past year, however, showing the materials used by this industry in 1937, when considered along with the prices of the raw materials, throw considerable light on the problem. In 1937 the woolen and worsted industry used a total of 780,000,000 pounds of raw fiber materials. Of this, 494,000,000 pounds consisted of raw wool and hair; 72,000,000 pounds consisted of cotton; 157,000,000 pounds consisted of wool and hair wastes, rags, and clippings; and 57,000,000 pounds consisted of rayon and other fibers and wastes thereof. Since the price of raw wool on a clean-content basis is usually several times as high as the price of cotton, it is apparent that they meet quite different technical requirements and consumer preferences. Some of the other materials used by the woolen and worsted industry sell at prices between those of wool and cotton. These facts suggest that the information resulting from the enactment of the truth-in-fabrics bill would probably affect the use of wool substitute materials rather than cotton.

The blanket industry probably provides the most pertinent information available in answer to your question. In January 1933 blanket manufacturers began labeling their articles as to wool and cotton content. They divided these blankets into four classes—those having less than 5 percent wool content, those having 5 to 25 percent wool content, those having 25 to 98 percent wool content, and those having more than 98 percent wool content by weight. The enclosed table shows the production in pounds of blankets, exclusive of horse and crib blankets and motor and steamer robes, as compiled from census data for the years 1927 to 1937, inclusive. These data show that the production of "all wool" blankets has been relatively constant, whereas the production of "all cotton" blankets and "cotton and wool" blankets has increased greatly since 1931. It is clear that the consumption of cotton has not declined as a result of the labeling program adopted by the blanket industry.

From the information the Department has been able to assemble it does not appear that the enactment of the truth-in-fabrics bill would adversely affect the consumption of cotton.

Very truly yours,

GROVER B. HILL,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. President, I wish to take the liberty of reading a few words from the colloquy between Representative SOUTH, of Texas, and one or two other Members of Congress. Let me say, in the first place, that Representative SOUTH comes not only from the State which produces more cotton than any other State in the United States but from a district which is the largest cotton-producing district in that State.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. It has been stated by some that this might have an injurious effect upon the cotton industry. Will the gentleman discuss that feature of the bill?

Mr. SOUTH. I am glad to have that matter called to my attention. I may say to the gentleman that the Department of Agriculture, in a letter which I received today, signed by Grover Hill, Acting Secretary, states that the Department has studied this bill and is of the opinion that it will in no manner reduce the consumption of cotton. I may say also that Mr. Ogg, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, states that, in his opinion, it will stimulate the use of cotton.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With reference to the injurious effects this bill might have on the use of cotton, the gentleman comes from a State which is the largest cotton-producing State in the Union, does he not?

Mr. SOUTH. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As a matter of fact, the largest in the world so far as a single government unit is concerned.

Mr. SOUTH. And much of it is in my district.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And the gentleman is thoroughly satisfied that the bill will not cut down the use of cotton?

Mr. SOUTH. I believe it will increase the use of cotton slightly, because, as I have said, a purchaser would rather buy the new cotton at the same price than old rags; and let me say, as the Chairman has so ably pointed out, there are now coming into this country millions of pounds of rags. In January 1939 there were more than 1,000,000 pounds of rags imported. What are we doing with them? These rags are being torn apart and made into fibers and sold to the American consumer as woolen goods, and often a price is charged that ought to be charged for new wool, and I believe that the purchaser, if he knows what he is buying, will demand new fiber rather than the old rags or shoddy; and, by the way, that does not stop at one operation. They can tear the same garment down two or three times and continue to reuse the worn fiber. It is no wonder that women purchasers are demanding the passage of this legislation.

Mr. SOUTH has given this bill probably more study than has any other member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the House, and has been very active in considering the bill, what should be in it, and what should not be in it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. With reference to the statement just made, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] made the statement that we should need a great many agents all over the country for the purpose of checking up on everybody to see that the spinner, the manufacturer, and everybody else uses wool. Is it not a fact that a man who is experienced in wool can immediately determine by an examination whether or not a particular article is shoddy or chopped-up rags, or whether it is real wool?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; in my judgment a man cannot tell.

Mr. WHEELER. I mean an expert.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. An expert could tell by certain physical tests. He could test the material for abrasion and for tensile strength. As I stated a while ago, the accurate tests would be made by a chemist, either in the Department of Agriculture or elsewhere. I shall refer to such tests later. I do not wish to take the time to do so in discussing the motion.

In 1938 representatives of the Department of Agriculture testified that they had not addressed themselves to this question. The matter of fiber identification in the bill had not come up. However, in 1939 they testified that by tests they could determine within 10 percent the amount of new wool and the amount of shoddy in a product.

One of the great reasons why this objection is always made is that many persons are engaged in a racket. They put before the public a sort of perfect crime, and they think there is no way of catching them. However, I shall show how we intend to catch them, and will catch them. The Federal Trade Commission says it will have no trouble in enforcing the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator just spoke about the importation of rags. Rags are imported into the United States from Europe, the Orient, and many other parts of the world. They may be disease-breeding rags. They are chopped up and made into clothes for the so-called lower-income group to purchase. Is not that true?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It is certainly true that rags are chopped up and utilized. In order to disinfect them, the first thing done is to boil them in sulphuric acid. Everything in the rags is burned out except the wool. The theory is that by sulphuric acid the rayon can be burned up, the cotton can be burned up, and even the noils can be burned up, but, for some mysterious reason, the quality of the wool is never affected. The residue is then put in a separator and run around until the sulphuric acid is removed; and it is next put into what is called a chopper, cut into little pieces, and dried out. It is then as dead as a doornail.

What do they do then? They go to the common sheep and get some sheep grease, lanolin, and rub it over the material to bring it back to life. That is reworked wool.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what they call reworked wool, but, in fact, it is shoddy; and when you come to put it on and wear it it does not stand up but immediately falls to pieces after a short time.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Undoubtedly it falls to pieces after a short time.

Mr. President, since that question has come up, I want to take just a moment to refer to a letter from Rear Admiral Ray Spear, Supply Corps, United States Navy, Paymaster General of the Navy. The letter is dated June 15, 1940, and is addressed to Hon. Frank C. Morton, House of Representatives. In the letter the admiral states that the Navy was about to give an order for items requiring a million pounds of wool. Of course, being an admiral in the Navy he is not interested in the wool growers; he is not interested in the shoddy producers or in the cotton producers; he is interested in the Navy. In his closing paragraph he says:

> For your information, there are enclosed herewith copies of specifications covering the foregoing items.
> Reworked wool is not allowed in the manufacture of woolen fabrics and blankets for naval use, due to the fact that strength, durability, and color are primary requirements of these items. Reworked wool not only lowers the tensile strength and elasticity but also reduces the durability and affects the affinity for dyestuffs.

That is his opinion.

Here is another opinion that might be of some service, although some, probably, think that the author of this statement is rather old fashioned. I refer to General Pershing. Mr. President, a great deal is being said these days about national defense. Probably it will be remembered that there was a shoddy scandal during the World War, and in his Memoirs, volume 1, page 316, General Pershing writes:

> Much of the clothing that we received for our troops was reported to be shoddy. I saw numbers of our men wearing uniforms which were light and thin and which, of course, offered insufficient protection. The lack of clothing had been met in part by purchases from the British. Our troops did not take kindly to the idea of wearing the uniform of another nation, and it was with considerable protest and chagrin that they did so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Do not the Navy and Army in their specifications for cloth specify the amount of wool and reworked wool which may be put in the various garments?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Not the Navy; but the Army permits a certain percentage of noils or a certain percentage of reworked wool and shoddy. I do not know that that is the technical definition; and it is of the best grade; but a certain percentage is permissible.

Mr. WALSH. In the letter from the admiral the Senator read, did he not give the specifications? He objected to certain kinds of wool, because they do not give the strength desired or the warmth required; but he specified, did he not, what kind of wool and reworked wool should go into the garments?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator mean to say that the Navy and the Army provide no such specifications?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Let us except the Army. I am talking about the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. If the Navy has no specifications as to the amount of wool and shoddy that may go into blankets and into clothing and have no inspectors at the factories where the cloth is being made to find out what is the quality of the goods, it is news to me.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not know what the Navy has in the way of inspection, but I know what the Navy requires. The Navy requires new wool, virgin wool, and does not permit the use of reworked wool, so the admiral says.

Mr. WALSH. Even then is it not necessary to have inspectors in the factories? They have inspectors in shoe factories where shoes are made for the Navy.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Oh, yes; and when I get the time I will discuss that. I cannot answer an argument of 3½ hours in a few minutes, but I intend to do so later on.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, who has just spoken, would be glad to have the Senator take as much time as he desires.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I will, but this is not the proper occasion. I will take the time when a motion is before us which I think has some merit and which will probably be adopted.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. May I say to the Senator that because of what the Senator from Oklahoma has said, because of his able presentation of the matter, there seems to be a good deal of confusion in the minds of some Senators with whom I have talked with reference to the merits of the bill. I think the Senator should make it plain to the Senate just what is involved in the bill, and should answer the arguments which have been presented by the able Senator from Oklahoma, because of the confusion in the minds of some Senators.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That is what I am trying to do. I have just endeavored to show that the suggestion that this bill is anticotton does not accord with the idea of anybody who knows anything about cotton.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Referring to what the Senator from Montana has said, I think the Senator from Wyoming should fully explain each one of the points and arguments made against the bill, and be very thorough in his explanation. I know there are Senators from cotton-producing States who, perhaps, with all due respect for the Senator from Oklahoma, were misled by his statement that this was an anticotton bill. Some of them have not been present and probably did not hear the Senator from Wyoming read a letter from the Farm Bureau Federation, which he put in the RECORD a few moments ago, with reference to the point that it is an anticotton bill. I am as much concerned in cotton as I am in wool, and I think the Senator should discuss that point fully.

The reason I say that is I thought he was going to defer that part of his argument until a later time.

[At this point, Mr. SCHWARTZ yielded to Mr. WALSH for the consideration of two bills and also to Mr. SHEPPARD to present the conference report on Senate bill 4164. The matters referred to appear in today's RECORD following action on Senate bill 162.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Will the Senator from Kentucky first permit me to read a letter of two paragraphs? Then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. This letter is from the American Farm Bureau Federation, and is dated Washington, D. C., September 12, 1940—today. It is a very short letter from Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and is as follows:

Hon. H. H. SCHWARTZ,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to convey to you our earnest hope that there will be no further delay in the final enactment of the wool-labeling legislation. Farmers have been waiting for 30 years on this legislation, which should have been enacted into law long ago in order to safeguard both farmers and consumers, honest manufacturers, and honest retailers. We sincerely hope the Senate will not jeopardize this legislation by attempting to amend it any further or to refer it to a committee. This is one piece of legislation that organized farmers, organized labor, and the consumers, as well as a large number of constructive manufacturers and distributors, are united upon.

Inasmuch as the Senate has previously approved this legislation by a 2 to 1 vote, and it was recently approved by the House by a vote of 288 to 18, it seems inconceivable that the State would permit this legislation to be jeopardized or destroyed by delaying final action on it.

Sincerely yours,

EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the parliamentary situation, to see if we cannot expedite the consideration of the pending motion.

As the Senator knows, I supported this bill when it was before the Senate heretofore, and I have supported legislation of this kind for many years; and I am for it now.

The Senator from Wyoming has made a motion that the Senate concur in the House amendment. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has made another motion to concur in the House amendment with amendments. The present motion is to refer the House amendment and the whole bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which considered the matter before.

Personally, I think the Senate ought to adopt one or the other of the motions—to concur in the House amendment, or to concur in it with amendments, or to send the bill to conference. When a bill has passed one House and gone to the other, and an amendment of any importance has been injected, or an amendment of a controversial nature, the ordinary procedure is to send the bill to conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment.

Of course the motion to accept the House amendment is always the motion which brings the two Houses together more rapidly, and facilitates legislation. I myself am prepared to support the Senator's motion to concur in the House amendment; but in view of the three motions which are pending here in a sense, it seems to me we ought to vote on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, so that we may determine whether it is to be so referred; and, if not, then the other motions, to concur with or without amendments or to send the bill to the conference, will be in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky has just covered what I was about to suggest; that is, that from a parliamentary standpoint, concurrence in a House amendment brings the two Houses more quickly into agreement, and has a preferential status.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has a preferential status, but under the rules of the Senate it is not voted on first. The motion to send the bill to the committee must be voted on first.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. So I think we could clarify the situation if we could vote on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma without getting into a discussion of the merits of the whole bill and decide whether or not we are going to send the bill to the committee. If the Senate should send the bill to the committee, and the committee should amend it further, and it should come back here and go to the House, it would still probably have to go to conference, or the House would have to move to concur in the Senate amendments to the House amendment, and that would prolong the consideration of the legislation.

I hope we may have a vote on the motion to send the bill to the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have previously said that I hope the motion to send back the bill to the Interstate Commerce Committee will not prevail.

Ordinarily I do not object to bills going to the Interstate Commerce Committee, but this bill, or similar bills, have been before the Interstate Commerce Committee on several different occasions. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has introduced several bills on the subject which have come to the Interstate Commerce Committee, and I have appointed different subcommittees to hear and determine them, and the subcommittees have reported them. Then the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] introduced the pending bill, and hearings were held on it. Hearings have been held on this question several times, and the bills have been reported. Nothing except delay can be gained by sending back the bill to the Interstate Commerce Committee; and in what I hope are the closing hours of the session, if the bill goes back to the Interstate Commerce Committee, it will probably mean that it will not be passed. Consequently, I hope this motion will be rejected.

I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that we ought to do one of two things: We either ought to agree to the House amendment or we ought to appoint a conference committee. Because the disagreement between the House and the Senate, as I understand, is largely with reference to the definitions. I can see no reason why a conference committee should be appointed, and I think the Senate ought to adopt the House amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me make a statement which is not new.

This sort of legislation has been pending before Congress for 25 or 30 years. Nearly a quarter of a century ago—I do not like to admit that because it makes me appear to be a great deal older than I really am or look, but it is the truth and the records will show it—nearly a quarter of a century ago I was chairman of a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House appointed to hold hearings on this sort of legislation. We held hearings for months, and we developed what we then thought were all the facts that could be brought forward on the subject. From that time until this, various Congresses have investigated and appointed subcommittees, and they have reported bills, and they have had hearings. There is not much that is new on the subject that can be brought out now. For that reason it seems to me we ought to try to bring this long-pending question to a final solution.

Mr. WHEELER. All of us who know the distinguished Senator from Kentucky know that he not only looks young but he acts young.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is all I wanted to say. I am anxious to have a vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there are many of us who have had no opportunity to acquaint ourselves with the House amendment. I have listened to the debate for many hours, and, so far as I am concerned, I would not know how to vote; I would not have any conviction so that I could vote on approving all the House amendment. The usual procedure is, when legislation has reached the parliamentary stage this has reached, to send the bill to conference, and I was sorry the Senator from Wyoming would not agree to that in this case. If that were done, the conferees on the part of the Senate would come from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has considered the bill, and they would be competent to take up the various amendments and reach a conclusion which to me would go far toward controlling my vote, because I confess I do not understand all the amendments and have had no opportunity, as the Senator from Michigan indicated this afternoon he had not, to get information about the bill. It has seemed to me that in the House the bill should have been referred to a committee, but it remained on the Speaker's desk until the day the bill was passed in the House. While they have a right to do that, it does not result in our getting very much information, such as would come from a committee.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I desire to make merely one observation—that such argument as I desire to make on the various questions raised by the Senator from Oklahoma I am perfectly willing to make further along in the consideration of the bill, and at this time I am prepared to have a vote on the motion made by the Senator from Oklahoma, and on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	McCarran	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers

Bilbo	Gillette	Mead	Taft
Bridges	Green	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gurney	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hale	Neely	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Truman
Byrnes	Hatch	Nye	Tydings
Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Caraway	Herring	Overton	Van Nuys
Chandler	Hill	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pittman	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	White
Danaher	King	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Does the Senator from Wyoming temporarily withdraw his request for the yeas and nays?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, notwithstanding all pending motions, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGE LIMITS OF APPOINTEES TO NAVAL ACADEMY

During the delivery of Mr. SCHWARTZ's speech,

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, would the Senator from Wyoming be willing to yield while I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of another matter which will take but a moment or two while he is getting ready to continue his argument? I would appreciate it very much.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably two bills.

First, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10438) to extend the age limits for applicants for appointment as midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, and I submit a report (No. 2120) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be not less than 17 years of age nor more than 21 years of age on April 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the academy: Provided, That for entrance in the year 1941 the minimum age shall be not less than 16 years.

SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, under the present law the age limits for applicants for admission to the Naval Academy are 16 to 20. As is well known, the age limits for admission to the Military Academy are 18 to 22.

The matter of the age requirement has received a good deal of discussion and has been given much thought at different times. Finally, the House has passed a bill increasing the minimum age limit from 16 to 17, and increasing the maximum age limit from 20 to 21 years. So, hereafter, if the bill shall be enacted, the age limits for admission to the Naval Academy will be from 17 to 21.

There is a proviso in the bill which does not permit the minimum age limit of 17 years to become operative next year, but it will become operative thereafter. So, Senators will take note that if this bill shall be enacted, next year the age limits will be 16 to 21, but after next year the age limits will be 17 to 21. I ask for action on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTGRADUATE INSTRUCTION FOR CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE NAVY

Mr. WALSH. I now report from the Committee on Naval Affairs the bill (S. 4254) authorizing post-graduate instruction for civilian employees of the Naval Establishment, and I submit a report (No. 2119) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may detail annually not to exceed 15 civilian employees of the Naval Establishment for engineering, technical, or other scientific education and training at Government expense at institutions for scientific education and research, to enable such persons to acquire advanced and specialized knowledge or training of particular advantage to the Navy in carrying out its functions: Provided, That the expense to the Federal Government hereby authorized to be incurred shall be limited to the salaries, transportation expenses, and tuition (including laboratory fees, materials, necessary textbooks, and other usual expenses of such instruction) of the employees so detailed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in brief the bill gives authority to the Navy to send 15 civilian employees each year to post-graduate schools for special instruction in order that they may obtain expert knowledge in matters relating to the work which they have undertaken. There is ample law now for doing this in the case of naval officers, but there is no provision for giving such extra courses of instruction to civilian employees. I may say that similar legislation has been enacted affecting those coming under the Maritime Commission.

The bill limits the number to 15 each year, and is confined strictly to those in the Navy who have developed proficiency and skill in scientific subjects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That (a) the Congress hereby declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

"(b) The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service.

"(c) The Congress further declares, in accordance with our traditional military policy as expressed in the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended, that it is essential that the strength and organization of the National Guard, as an integral part of the first-line defenses of this Nation, be at all times maintained and assured. To this end, it is the intent of the Congress that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed for the national security in excess of those of the Regular Army and those in active training and service under section 3 (b), the National Guard of the United States, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall be ordered to active Federal service and continued therein so long as such necessity exists.

"SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States, and of every male alien residing in the United States, who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six, to present himself for and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places, and in such manner and in such age group or groups, as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"SEC. 3. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, every male citizen of the United States, and every male alien residing in the United States who has declared his intention to become such a citizen, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six at the time fixed for his registration, shall be liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized from time to time, whether or not a state of war exists, to select and induct into the land and naval forces of the United States for training and service, in the manner provided in this Act, such number of men as in his judgment is required for such forces in the national interest: Provided, That within the limits of the quota determined under section 4 (b) for the subdivision in which he resides, any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of eighteen and thirty-six, shall be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction into the land or naval forces of the United States for the training and service prescribed in subsection (b), but no person who so volunteers shall be inducted for such training and service so long as he is deferred after classification: Provided further, That no man shall be inducted for training and service under this Act unless and until he is acceptable to the land or naval forces for such training and service and his physical and mental fitness for such training and service has been satisfactorily determined: Provided further, That no men shall be inducted for such training and service until adequate provision shall have been made for such shelter, sanitary facilities, water supplies, heating and lighting arrangements, medical care, and hospital accommodations, for such men, as may be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, to be essential to public and personal health: Provided further, That except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time under subsection (b) more than nine hundred thousand men inducted under the provisions of this Act. The men inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall be assigned to camps or units of such forces.

"(b) Each man inducted under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a training and service period of twelve consecutive months, unless sooner discharged, except that whenever the Congress has declared that the national interest is imperiled, such twelve-month period may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interests of national defense.

"(c) Each such man, after the completion of his period of training and service under subsection (b), shall be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States; and until he attains the age of forty-five, or until the expiration of a period of ten years after such transfer, or until he is discharged from such reserve component, whichever occurs first, he shall be deemed to be a member of such reserve component and shall be subject to such additional training and service as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law: Provided, That any man who completes at least twelve months' training and service in the land forces under subsection (b), and who thereafter serves satisfactorily in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard for a period of at least two years, shall, in time of peace, be relieved from any liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States and from further liability for the training and service under subsection (b), but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent any such man, while in a reserve component of such forces, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(d) With respect to the men inducted for training and service under this Act there shall be paid, allowed, and extended the same pay, allowances, pensions, disability and death compensation, and other benefits as are provided by law in the case of other enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land or naval forces to which they are assigned, and after transfer to a reserve component of the land or naval forces as provided in subsection (c) there shall be paid, allowed, and extended with respect to them the same benefits as are provided by law in like cases with respect to other members of such reserve component. Men in such training and service and men who have been so transferred to reserve components shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

"(e) Persons inducted into the land forces of the United States under this Act shall not be employed beyond the limits of the Western Hemisphere except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands.

"(f) Nothing contained in this or any other Act shall be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States for training and service under this Act, or to members of the reserve components of such forces now or hereafter on any type of active duty, who, prior to their induction or commencement of active duty, were receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation.

"SEC. 4. (a) The selection of men for training and service under section 3 (other than those who are voluntarily inducted pursuant to this Act) shall be made in an impartial manner, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, from the men who are liable for such training and service and who at the time of selection are registered and classified but not deferred or exempted: Provided, That in the selection and training of men under this Act, and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this Act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.

"(b) Quotas of men to be inducted for training and service under this Act shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification, except that credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas. After such quotas are fixed, credits shall be given in filling such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who subsequently become members of such forces. Until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known, the quotas may be based on estimates, and subsequent adjustments therein shall be made when such actual numbers are known. All computations under this subsection shall be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Public Health Service, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United States Naval Academy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; men who have been accepted for admittance (commencing with the academic year next succeeding such acceptance) to the United States Military Academy as cadets, to the United States Naval Academy as midshipmen, or to the United States Coast Guard Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; cadets of the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of foreign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 2 and shall be relieved from liability for training and service under section 3 (b).

"(b) In time of peace, the following persons shall be relieved from liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States and from liability for training and service under section 3 (b)—

"(1) Any man who shall have satisfactorily served for at least three consecutive years in the Regular Army before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(2) Any man who as a member of the active National Guard shall have satisfactorily served for at least one year in active Federal service in the Army of the United States, and subsequent thereto for at least two consecutive years in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(3) Any man who is in the active National Guard at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration.

"(4) Any man who is in the Officers' Reserve Corps on the eligible list at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein on the eligible list for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the persons enumerated in this subsection, while in reserve components of the land or naval forces of the United States, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(c) (1) The Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States.

"(2) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States, of any person holding an office (other than an office described in paragraph (1) of this subsection) under the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest.

"(d) Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion, and students who are preparing for the ministry in the theological or divinity schools recognized as such for more than one year prior to the date of enactment of this Act, shall be exempt from training and service (but not from registration) under this Act.

"(e) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States of those men whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations or employment, or whose activity in other endeavors, is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest. The President is also authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States (1) of those men in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their deferment advisable, and (2) of those men found to be physically, mentally, or morally deficient or defective. No deferment from such training and service shall be made in the case of any individual except upon the basis of the status of such individual, and no such deferment shall be made of individuals by occupational groups or of groups of individuals in any plant or institution.

"(f) Any person who, during the year 1940, entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–1941—

"(1) at any college or university which grants a degree in arts or science, to pursue a course of instruction satisfactory completion of which is prescribed by such college or university as a prerequisite to either of such degree; or

"(2) at any university described in paragraph (1), to pursue a course of instruction to the pursuit of which a degree in arts or science is prescribed by such university as a prerequisite:

and who, while pursuing such course of instruction at such college or university, is selected for training and service under this Act prior to the end of such academic year, or prior to July 1, 1941, whichever occurs first, shall, upon his request, be deferred from induction into the land or naval forces for such training and service until the end of such academic year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

"(g) Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction, be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal to the appropriate appeal board provided for in section 10 (a) (2). Upon the filing of such appeal with the appeal board, the appeal board shall forthwith refer the matter to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing by the Department or the proper agency thereof. After appropriate inquiry by such agency, a hearing shall be held by the Department of Justice with respect to the character and good faith of the objections of the person concerned, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The Department shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend to the appeal board (1) that if the objector is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, he shall be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) that if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, he shall in lieu of such induction be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after such hearing the Department finds that his objections are not sustained, it shall recommend to the appeal board that such objections be not sustained. The appeal board shall give consideration to but shall not be bound to follow the recommendation of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board in making its decision. Each person whose claim for exemption from combatant training and service because of conscientious objections is sustained shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors.

"(h) No exception from registration, or exemption or deferment from training and service, under this Act, shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

"SEC. 6. The President shall have authority to induct into the land and naval forces of the United States under this Act no greater number of men than the Congress shall hereafter make specific appropriation for from time to time.

"SEC. 7. No person liable for service in such forces shall be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; no substitute as such shall be received, enlisted, enrolled, or inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States; and no person liable for training and service in such forces under section 3 shall be permitted to escape such training and service or be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his period of such training and service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from such training and service or liability therefor.

"SEC. 8. (a) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service, who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes his period of training and service under section 3 (b) shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such period of training and service, which shall include a record of any special proficiency or merit attained. In addition, each such person who is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service shall be given a physical examination at the beginning of such training and service and a medical statement showing any physical defects noted upon such examination; and upon the completion of his period of training and service under section 3 (b), each such person shall be given another physical examination and shall be given a medical statement showing any injuries, illnesses, or disabilities suffered by him during such period of training and service.

"(b) In the case of any such person who, in order to perform such training and service, has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within forty days after he is relieved from such training and service—

"(A) if such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such person shall be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

"(B) if such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

"(C) if such position was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

"(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of training and service in the land or naval forces, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was inducted into such forces, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.

"(d) Section 3 (c) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of active military service, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was ordered into such service, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.'

"(e) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (b) or subsection (c), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions, and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney or comparable official for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney or official, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

"(f) Section 3 (d) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: ', and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits offered by reason of such employer's unlawful action.'

"(g) The Director of Selective Service herein provided for shall establish a Personnel Division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for, members of the reserve components of the land and naval forces of the United States who have satisfactorily completed any period of active duty, and persons who have satisfactorily completed any period of their training and service under this Act.

"(h) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in person or by absentee ballot in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, whether he is within or outside of such State at the time of such election, if under the laws of such State he is entitled so to vote in such election; but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require granting to any such person a leave of absence for longer than one day in order to permit him to vote in person in any such election.

"(i) It is the expressed policy of the Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this Act such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

"SEC. 9. (a) The President is empowered, whenever he determines that it is necessary for the common defense, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any person for such products or materials as may be required, and which are of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such person.

"(b) Compliance with all such orders for products or materials shall be obligatory upon the person with whom such orders are placed, and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore or thereafter placed with such person.

"(c) If any person who owns or operates any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, or who owns or operates any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, is capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy—

"(1) refuses to give to the United States such preference in the execution of the orders so placed with such person, or

"(2) refuses to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or

"(3) refuses to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment, then, in either such case, if the public necessity is immediate, and the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply, and if such circumstances are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy and to require the exercise of the power hereby created in respect of the property to be taken over, or transformed, or operated, the President, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of such plant, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy, to manufacture therein such products or materials as may be required.

"(d) The compensation to be paid to any such person for its products or materials, or as rental for any manufacturing plant of which possession is so taken while it is used by the United States, shall be fair and just, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be. If the amount so determined is unsatisfactory in any case, such person shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, when added to the payment already received, will be just compensation for such products or materials, or as rental for the use by the United States of such manufacturing plant, as the case may be, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph (20), and section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended, or as otherwise provided by law.

"(e) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in any such plant.

"(f) For the purpose of this section, the term 'person' includes any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, and organized manufacturing industry.

"(g) The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the Act entitled 'An Act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act Numbered 671, Seventy-sixth Congress), are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. (a) The President is authorized——

"(1) to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act;

"(2) to create and establish a Selective Service System, and shall provide for the classification of registrants and of persons who volunteer for induction under this Act on the basis of availability for training and service, and shall establish within the Selective Service System civilian local boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivision corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials. No member of any such local board shall be a member of the land or naval forces of the United States, but each member of any such local board shall be a civilian who is a citizen of the United States residing in the county or political subdivision corresponding thereto in which such local board has jurisdiction under rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized, all questions or claims with respect to inclusion for, or exemption or deferment from, training and service under this Act of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Appeal boards and agencies of appeal within the Selective Service System shall be composed of civilians who are citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the Selective Service System, or of any such local or appeal board or other agency, shall be excepted from registration, or deferred from training and service, as provided for in this Act, by reason of his status as such officer, member, agent, or employee;

"(3) to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fix the compensation at a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum, of a Director of Selective Service who shall be directly responsible to him and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That any officer on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or of any reserve component thereof or any officer or employee of any department or agency of the United States who may be assigned or detailed to any office or position to carry out the provisions of this Act (except to offices or positions on local boards, appeal boards, or agencies of appeal established or created pursuant to section 10 (a) (2)) may serve in and perform the functions of such office or position without loss of or prejudice to his status as such officer in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard or reserve component thereof, or as such officer or employee in any department or agency of the United States: Provided further, That any person so appointed, assigned or detailed to a position the compensation in respect of which is at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed, assigned or detailed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided further, That the President may appoint necessary clerical and stenographic employees for local boards and fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and without regard to the provisions of civil-service laws.

"(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this Act; and

"(5) to purchase such printing, binding, and blankbook work from public, commercial, or private printing establishments or binderies upon orders placed by the Public Printer or upon waivers issued in accordance with section 12 of the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, as amended by the Act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475), and to obtain by purchase, loan, or gift such equipment and supplies for the Selective Service System as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, with or without advertising or formal contract; and

"(6) to prescribe eligibility, rules, and regulations governing the parole for service in the land or naval forces, or for any other special service established pursuant to this Act, of any person convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this Act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to delegate and provide for the delegation of any authority vested in him under this Act to such officers, agents, or persons as he may designate or appoint for such purpose or as may be designated or appointed for such purpose pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"(c) In the administration of this Act voluntary services may be accepted. Correspondence necessary in the execution of this Act may be carried in official penalty envelopes.

No person shall be tried by any military or naval court martial in any case arising under this Act unless such person has been actually inducted for the training and service prescribed under this Act or unless he is subject to trial by court martial under laws in force prior to the enactment of this Act. Precedence shall be given by courts to the trial of cases arising under this Act.

The pay for specialists' ratings, which shall be in addition to monthly base pay, shall be as follows: First class, $30; second class, $25; third class, $20; fourth class, $15; fifth class, $6; sixth class, $3. Enlisted men of the Army and the Marine Corps shall receive, as a permanent addition to their pay, an increase of 10 per centum of their base pay and pay for specialists' ratings upon completion of the first four years of service, and an additional increase of 5 per centum of such base pay and pay for specialists' ratings for each four years of service thereafter, but the total of such increases shall not exceed 25 per centum.

"Enlisted men of the Navy shall be entitled to receive at least the same pay and allowances as are provided for enlisted men in similar grades in the Army and Marine Corps.

"(b) The pay for specialists' rating received by an enlisted man of the Army or the Marine Corps at the time of his retirement shall be included in the computation of his retired pay.

"(c) The pay of enlisted men of the sixth grade of the National Guard for each armory drill period, and for each day of participation in exercises under sections 94, 97, and 99 of the National Defense Act, shall be $1.20.

"(e) Nothing in this Act shall operate to reduce the pay now being received by any retired enlisted man.

"(f) The provisions of this section shall be effective on and after October 1, 1940. Thereafter all laws and parts of laws insofar as the same are inconsistent herewith or in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 13. (a) The benefits of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, approved March 8, 1918, are hereby extended to all persons inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, and to all members of any reserve component of such forces now or hereafter on active duty for a period of more than one month; and, except as hereinafter provided, the provisions of such Act of March 8, 1918, shall be effective for such purposes.

"SEC. 14. (a) Every person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this Act upon publication by the President of a proclamation or other public notice fixing a time for any registration under section 2.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question of interpretation which comes to me from the International Missionary Council? I think perhaps the Senator can give me the desired information.

I read the question:

Has consideration been given to the question of the duty of American citizens who may be temporarily in service in other countries? Is it expected that such persons—persons who are abroad—will be required to register? I have in mind especially foreign missionaries; but the question would refer as well to employees of commercial and other organizations.

I assume that the question does apply especially to foreign missionaries. Is it the Senator's judgment that American citizens who are abroad as foreign missionaries will or will not have to register under this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They will have to register; but due consideration will be given to the situation and they will not summarily be called back to register.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They will be required to register, just as any other citizen is required to do so?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How will they be reached in their foreign fields for purposes of registration?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Probably the authorities will wait until they come home or they may reach them by mail.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Michigan that that matter was discussed in the hearings which were held when Major Hershey and others were present who were very familiar with the Selective Draft Act of 1917 when it was in force. Some members of the committee raised the identical point which is embodied in the question propounded by the Senator from Michigan. It was stated that there had been no difficulty in that matter in 1917; that it was not necessary to make any special provision in the bill covering the matter, because those who were temporarily residing abroad would be under no obligation to come back to this country to register; that they would not be subject to any penalty or criticism for failure to return to register; that if they were within the draft age upon their return from their temporary sojourn abroad they would, of course, be expected at the next registration, or if there was a permanent method of registration, to comply with the requirement; but that there need not be the slightest concern on the part of anyone temporarily residing abroad that he would be put to any undue inconvenience by this provision.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his statement, and I am sure it will be reassuring to the International Missionary Council. I assume that what the Senator says is a matter of interpretation rather than a matter of textual fact.

Mr. BURKE. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the Senator thinks these persons may rely upon what he says?

Mr. BURKE. I think they would be entirely safe in relying upon the statements made by those who will be charged with the enforcement of the Selective Service Act, which I have attempted to give here.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I confess that what confused me was that the act seems to require every citizen within a certain age range to register at a given time, with a penalty for not doing so; and I could find no theory upon which a citizen who is out of the jurisdiction of the country is absolved of his responsibility.

Mr. BURKE. He is not specifically absolved by any provision in the act; but that is a matter which, by all dictates of common sense, would have to be governed by regulation, and I am sure all of the parties concerned may rely upon the statements which have been made. Only upon their return to this country in their own due time will they be obliged to comply with the registration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. I would rely upon his common sense at any time.

IMPORTATION OF ZINC UNDER RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, on June 12 I inserted in the RECORD some figures showing the increase in the importation of farm products under the reciprocal trade agreement policy of this administration. I now present the following figures on the importation of zinc under this policy:

Zinc imports

	1938	1939	Increase
			Percent
Ore (zinc content)	$392,591	$1,304,433	232
Blocks, pigs, etc., and old zinc	510,089	1,904,302	273

The increase in imports of zinc in 1939 was directly attributable to the Trade Agreement Act, since the tariff on zinc was reduced in the Canadian agreement which went into effect January 1, 1939.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably House Joint Resolution 445, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 445) to establish a commission for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN PHOTOGRAPHED GOVERNMENT RECORDS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report favorably Houe bill 10026, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10026) to provide for the disposition of certain photographed records of the United States Government, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCLUSION OF FATS, OILS, COTTON PRODUCTS, AND PEANUTS ON COMMODITY EXCHANGE LIST

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4088, Calendar No. 1731. I have a letter from the Department of Agriculture, signed by the new Secretary, urging the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the bill?

Mr. BILBO. It is a bill which would place cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and other articles on the commodity exchange list. It is a House bill, to which I am sure no one will have objection, and it is claimed by the Department that it will advance the price of lard 1½ to 2 cents a pound and cottonseed from $3 to $5 a ton. The present prices are almost disastrous to the cotton farmers of the South. It will take but a moment to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the present consideration of House bill 4088?

Mr. TAFT. Reserving the right to object, I wish to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, this is a House bill. An amendment has been offered by the Senator from Illinois, who asks that soybeans be added along with cottonseed oil.

Mr. TAFT. I do not find any report on the bill. Did the committee file a report?

Mr. BILBO. There is a report from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TAFT. But has the committee filed a report?

Mr. BILBO. There is no report from the committee, but it has been endorsed by the Department of Agriculture, and I have a letter dated September 5 from the new Secretary.

Mr. TAFT. I object to the consideration of the bill. The committee has made no report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BILBO subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has very graciously withdrawn his objection to the present consideration of House bill 4088, Calendar No. 1731. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "effect" to strike out "sixty days after", and to insert "on", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the date of its enactment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BILBO. On behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I offer certain amendments.

The amendments submitted by Mr. BILBO on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry were, on page 1, line 8, after the words "wool tops", to insert "hides,"; in the same line, after the word "lard", to insert "tallow,"; in the same line, after the words "peanut oil", to insert a comma and "soybean oil and all other fats and oils"; in line 9, before the word "peanuts", to strike out "and", and in the same line, after the word "peanuts", to insert a comma and "soybeans and soybean meal".

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third sentence of section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The word 'commodity' shall mean wheat, cotton, rice, corn, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed, grain sorghums, mill feeds, butter, eggs, Solanum tuberosum (Irish potatoes), wool tops, hides, fats and oils (including lard, tallow, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, soybean oil, and all other fats and oils), cottonseed meal, cottonseed, peanuts, soybeans, and soybean meal."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 60 days after the date of its enactment.

COMMANDER HOWARD L. VICKERY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the House on September 10 passed House Joint Resolution 596 providing that, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, Commander Howard L. Vickery, being a commissioned officer on the active list, United States Navy, is authorized to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] desired to secure consideration of the House joint resolution today, but he was compelled to leave the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The Senate Commerce Committee has reported a similar joint resolution, which is now on the Senate calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 292, calendar No. 2187.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 596) to authorize Commander Howard L. Vickery to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of law contrary hereto or inconsistent herewith, Commander Howard L. Vickery, being a commissioned officer on the active list, United States Navy, is authorized to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission without loss of or prejudice to his status as a commissioned officer on the active list of the United States Navy, and if appointed to such civil office he shall receive, in addition to his pay and allowances as such commissioned officer, an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances as such commissioned officer and the salary prescribed by law for such civil office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 292 will be indefinitely postponed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CERTAIN NAVAL HOSPITALS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 4245, calendar No. 2127, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish certain naval hospitals.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4245) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish certain naval hospitals, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That pursuant to the provisions of section 4810 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to establish naval hospitals at the Naval Air Stations at Jacksonville, Fla., and San Juan, P. R.; the submarine base, Coco Solo, C. Z.; the naval station, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; and the Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va. He is further authorized to utilize, for the purposes of such naval hospitals, the buildings now assigned, under construction, or projected for activities of the Medical Department of the Navy at such stations, together with the utilities, accessories, and appurtenances pertaining thereto.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD in connection with this bill the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs on the bill.

There being no objection, the report (No. 2021) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4245) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish certain naval hospitals, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish naval hospitals at the naval air stations at Jacksonville, Fla., and San Juan, P. R.; the submarine base, Coco Solo, C. Z.; the naval station, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; and the Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to utilize for the purposes of such hospitals the buildings now assigned, under construction, or projected for activities of the Medical Department of the Navy at such stations, together with the utilities, accessories, and appurtenances pertaining thereto.

Naval developments at the places named in the bill have rendered imperative corresponding adequate medical facilities. The necessary facilities cannot be provided by naval dispensaries, for a variety of reasons. Dispensaries do not afford the many facilities for diagnosis and treatment to be found in the smallest naval hospitals; do not provide adequately for administration, subsistence, and nursing, and do not permit the use of the naval hospital fund.

THE NAVAL HOSPITAL FUND

The naval hospital fund is a trust fund which derives its revenues from within the naval service and is administered by the Secretary of the Navy, who is its sole trustee. These revenues are:

(a) By the deduction of 20 cents per month from the pay of each officer, seaman, and marine.

(b) By fines imposed on officers, seamen, and marines.

(c) By the value of one ration per day, allowed for each officer, seaman, and marine during continuance in a hospital.

(d) By the relinquishment of disability pensions due officers, seamen, and marines during continuance in hospital.

(e) By forfeitures on account of desertion.

(f) By proceeds of sale of naval hospital fund property when so authorized.

Expenditures from the naval hospital fund are made for the operation and maintenance of naval hospitals, including purchase of hospital equipment, provisions and other supplies, furniture, fuel, light, and major and minor repairs. Every expense for the establishment and maintenance of a naval hospital may be paid from the naval hospital fund, except as Congress may assume to provide for certain expenses by specific appropriation.

The estimated additional cost is $265,900.

The bill was introduced at the request of the Navy Department. The committee has been advised that the bill meets with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER PUBLIC CONTRACTS—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on September 10 I introduced Senate bill 4340, to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts. By mistake that bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask unanimous consent that that committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4311, Calendar No. 2172, to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall ask at this time to have a very short letter from the Department of Agriculture read at the desk, and then I shall explain the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., September 6, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: I am writing you concerning the manner in which S. 4311 would affect the administration of the farm program.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, provides that the average normal yield for a county shall be determined by using the 5 years preceding the year in which the determination is made. Therefore, if cotton yields are determined this fall, the years 1935–39 will be used in determining the yields for all counties for 1941, and the sum of the yields established for individual producers cannot exceed the yield for the county. S. 4311 would simplify and speed up to some degree the administration of the marketing quota provisions of the act but would not in any way change the yield for a county or the payments for a county from what they otherwise would be if the bill did not pass.

If this bill is passed the farmers can be notified of their normal cotton yields this fall at the same time that they receive the notice of their cotton-acreage allotments. If it does not pass, farmers cannot be notified of their yields until sometime next spring.

I hope this gives you the information you desire.

Sincerely yours,

R. M. EVANS, Administrator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wish to say a word or two in explanation of the bill. At the present time counties receive their allotments based on a 5-year average, from 1935 to 1939. The individual farmer receives his allotment on a 5-year average, but his average is based on the 1940 crop. So unless the same figure is provided for the allotments to the county and the farmer, the county will receive its notice this year and the farmer will receive his next year. If the amendment shall be agreed to, the same basis will apply to both the county and to the farmer. It makes no change in the yield for a county or the payments for a county, as set forth in the letter just read.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4311) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subparagraph (E) of paragraph (13) of subsection (b) of section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended so as to provide for the determination of farm normal yields for corn, wheat, and cotton on the basis of the same period of years used in the determination of county normal yields for those commodities, by striking out in the first sentence thereof the words "with respect to which such normal yield is used in any computation authorized under this title" and by substituting in lieu thereof the words "in which such normal yield is determined."

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—APPLICABILITY TO SEAMEN

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 299, Calendar No. 2161.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be reported by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 299) authorizing certain governmental agencies to make a study of workmen's compensation with a view to its adaptability to seamen, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERTON. A subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, of which I am chairman, considered a measure to extend the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as contained in the harbor workers and longshoremen's act, to seamen. After conducting hearings for a period of 3 or 4 days, the subcommittee, and the Commerce Committee as a whole, came to the conclusion that the subject matter ought to undergo interdepartmental investigation. Therefore the whole purpose of the Senate resolution is to authorize and request certain departments of the Government, for instance, the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, and the Maritime Commission, to make a study of workmen's compensation, with a view to its applicability to seamen, and to report on a certain date at the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 299), submitted by Mr. OVERTON on August 22, 1940, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce, the Department of Labor, the United States Maritime Commission, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and the Maritime Labor Board are authorized and directed jointly to make a thorough study of workmen's compensation with a view to determining whether the same, by act of Congress, should be made applicable to seamen; to supply the Senate with statistical information and other data that may be helpful in considering such legislation; to confer in respect thereto with representatives of the seamen and shipowners, and to report to the Senate, on or before February 15, 1941, the findings and specific recommendations of the aforesaid agencies.

CLAIM OR CLAIMS OF THE RECORDING AND COMPUTING MACHINES CO., OF DAYTON, OHIO

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement with the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4031) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim or claims of the Recording & Computing Machines Co., of Dayton, Ohio, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I will state the situation with regard to this bill which is a private claims bill, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims. The bill passed the House and was sent to the Senate, and was amended by the Senate by adding to it another claim which had no connection whatsoever with it. The bill in that form was sent back to the House and was passed by the House, but was vetoed by the President because of the inclusion of the claims bill in the Senate. Because of that situation we felt we ought to revive the original bill and pass it. Therefore, I now move that the Senate recede from its amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan that the Senate recede from its amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PATENTS FOR CERTAIN LAND HELD UNDER COLOR OF TITLE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 10176, Calendar No. 2205, which is simply a measure to issue patents for lands held under color of title in one county in Michigan. It is reported favorably by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10176) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF DENTAL DISEASES

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 3607, Calendar No. 1583.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3607), to authorize research by the Public Health Service relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is authorized and directed to conduct researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases; to assist and foster similar research activities by other agencies, public and private; and to promote the coordination of all such researches and activities and the useful application of their results, with a view to the development and prompt widespread use of the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such diseases.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, the sum of $75,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for the five succeeding fiscal years such sum shall be increased $10,000 each year.

LOANS FROM STATES FOR FLOOD-CONTROL WORK

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 3612, Calendar No. 2124.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3612) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept, as loans, from States and political subdivisions thereof, funds to be immediately used in the prosecution of authorized flood-control work, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, to strike out lines 3 to 8, down to and including the words "Provided further,"; on page 2, line 1, before the word "flood" to insert "a"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "control" to strike out "work" and insert in lieu thereof "project"; in line 10, after the word "Congress", to strike out "nor" and insert in lieu thereof "or"; and in line 10, after the word "authority" to strike out "of the first proviso of this paragraph shall be made", and insert "of section 5 of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, as amended, shall be made", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any State or political subdivision thereof shall offer to advance funds for a flood-control project duly adopted and authorized by law the Secretary of War may in his discretion, receive such funds and expend the same in the immediate prosecution of such work. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to repay without interest, from appropriations which may be provided by Congress for flood-control work, the moneys so contributed and expended: Provided, however, That no repayment of funds which may be contributed for the purpose of meeting any conditions of local cooperation imposed by Congress, or under the authority of section 5 of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, as amended, shall be made.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

XENOPHON GEORGE PANOS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8551, Calendar No. 2118.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8551) for the relief of Xenophon George Panos.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to cancel forthwith the outstanding warrant of arrest, order of deportation, warrant of deportation, and bond, if any, in the case of the alien, Xenophon George Panos, and is directed not to issue any further such warrants or orders in the case of such alien, insofar as such future warrants of orders are based on the unlawful entry of such alien into the United States prior to the enactment of this act. Hereafter, for the purpose of the immigration and naturalization laws, such alien shall be considered to have been, at New York, N. Y., on February 22, 1926, lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the Greek quota for the first year that the said Greek quota is available.

STUDY OF PROBLEMS OF AMERICAN SMALL-BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 298, Calendar 2171.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 298) to appoint a special committee to study and survey problems of American small-business enterprises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, what is the resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the resolution ought to go over, because a study has already been made and is being made by the so-called monopoly committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. I do not understand that the committee to which the Senator refers is conducting an investigation such as is proposed by this particular resolution. The matter was taken up by our committee and unanimously reported, and has also been unanimously reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The resolution is in accordance with a plank of the platform of the Democratic Party and, as I understand, is also in accordance with resolutions adopted by the Republican Party. It seems to me that a matter of such importance to the small-business men of the country is entitled to consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me add to what the Senator from Utah has said that the subject matter of this resolution has been thoroughly examined by the Temporary National Economic Committee. The Securities and Exchange Commission was directed by our committee to make a Nation-wide survey of the needs of small business. Hearings were held in several regions of the country, including New England, the Rocky Mountain States, and the Pacific coast by agents of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The Temporary National Economic Committee held hearings in this city. Material has been secured from representatives of small business all over the country, and a report of the studies of that committee is now in the process of printing in the Government Printing Office. On Monday last I made a statement to the Senate of the scope of this study, and embodied in the statement a summary of the report which has been presented. I feel, as the Senator from Utah has just expressed it, that to adopt the resolution would be threshing old straw.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I wish to say that this resolution does not contemplate any investigation or hearings, but merely a research into the problems. Of course, it is intended to take into consideration the investigations already carried on by the Senator's committee. Am I to understand that the Senator's committee has fully and completely exhausted the various problems affecting small business in this country?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should not say so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask the Senator not to press for consideration of the resolution this afternoon, because only a few Senators are present. I think it ought to be taken up at a time when there is a better attendance. I hope the Senator will not press for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

CLAIMS FOR INCREASED COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3841, Calendar No. 2228.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3841) to allow an additional period of 6 months in which to file claims for increased compensation to certain Government employees for the period July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1924.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, this bill was referred first to the Naval Affairs Committee and then to the Claims Committee. It simply extends for 6 months the time within which certain employees of navy yards who were not aware of the enactment of the law giving them the right to time and a half for overtime may file claims. The bill does not involve very much, but it does give to employees who were entitled to the compensation, and who were not aware of their rights, the opportunity to file their claims which were not filed in time. The bill affects a relatively small number of men at the various navy yards throughout the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend the acts granting increased compensation to civilian employees for the period July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1924," approved August 10, 1939 (53 Stat. 1343), is amended by striking out the words "six months" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one year."

MONEYS RECOVERED FROM STANDARD OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA AND OTHERS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3501, Calendar 2197. I have just spoken to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] with reference to the matter. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3501) to provide for the disposition of certain moneys received by the United States in connection with proceedings against the Standard Oil Co. of California, and others, pursuant to the joint resolution of February 21, 1924 (43 Stat. 15).

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me say briefly, Mr. President, that when the General Leasing Act was passed it provided that 52½ percent of all rents and royalties derived from the operation of the oil and gas lands on the public domain should be paid into the reclamation fund. An exception was the royalties to be derived from naval oil reserves. At that time it was believed that the reserves would be held as reserves and would not be operated; but in 1921 leases were granted upon the Teapot Dome in Wyoming and upon the naval reserve in California. A year or so ago the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and I introduced a bill, which was enacted into law, providing that 52½ percent of the naval-reserve royalties should also go to the reclamation fund.

This bill deals only with a judgment which has recently been recovered by the Government of the United States in a suit against the Standard Oil Co. of California and others. The amount of the judgment is in excess of $7,000,000. In the absence of legislation, the amount recovered by the judgment would be covered into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. The Public Lands Committee, which was responsible for bringing the suit, is asking in its endorsement of the bill that 52½ percent of that sum, like the rents and royalties, shall be paid into the reclamation fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I do not think this is the proper way to take up measures on the Calendar for consideration; and I give notice that after this bill shall have been disposed of I shall object to further requests for unanimous consent in this way. I think we ought to take up bills on the calendar and consider them in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the $7,000,000 go into the reclamation fund?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; only 52½ percent of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there had been no lawsuit——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If there had been no lawsuit there would have been no $7,000,000 because the land was operated by the Standard Oil Co. of California, and the Government recovered the land.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there any more reason for putting that $7,000,000 in the reclamation fund than any other $7,000,000 the Government has?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes; it was recovered from oil lands.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was recovered from naval oil lands, was it not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; and under the law 52½ percent of all rents and royalties from naval lands goes into the reclamation fund.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand, if this amount had been paid without any lawsuit, 52½ percent of it would have gone into the reclamation fund.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Had it been recovered as royalties on naval lands; exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The mere fact that it had to be recovered by a lawsuit does not in any way vitiate the principle involved in the law, that 52½ percent of the amount received should go into that fund.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transfer to the credit of the reclamation fund, created by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), a sum equal to 52½ percent of any moneys heretofore or hereafter received by the United States, as a result of the suit instituted by the United States against the Standard Oil Co. of California and others, pursuant to the joint resolution of February 21, 1924 (43 Stat. 15), or as a result of any other proceeding or proceedings heretofore or hereafter instituted pursuant to such joint resolution or related to or growing out of the proceedings so instituted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee report be printed in full in the Record at this point. The Department of the Interior has approved the legislation; but the Navy Department in this instance, as in the case of the previous bill which was enacted, filed an adverse report.

There being no objection, the report (No. 2085) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, submitted the following report to accompany S. 3501:

The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3501) to provide for the disposition of certain moneys received by the United States in connection with proceedings against the Standard Oil Co. of California, and others, pursuant to the joint resolution of February 21, 1924 (43 Stat. 15), having considered the same, report with a recommendation that the bill pass.

In 1924 the Congress of the United States, by joint resolution, directed the Secretary of the Interior to institute proceedings to recover for the United States title to sections 16 and 36, T. 30 S., R. 27 E., M. D. M., in Naval Reserve No. 1, State of California. The resolution was passed in the belief that lands were held by the Standard Oil Co. of California, without proper authority of law. The litigation was successful and after the payment of costs the amount recovered for the United States was approximately $7,137,575.72.

When the General Leasing Act was passed in February 1920, it was provided that 52½ percent of all rents and royalties received by the United States on future development should be paid into the reclamation fund for the development of reclamation projects in the arid-land States which are incidentally the States in which the public oil lands are located. Royalties on naval reserves were not included in the original provision primarily because at that time naval reserves were not being developed, but were being held as naval reserves.

After the leasing of the naval reserves in 1921 the receipts were covered into the Treasury of the United States. In the belief, however, that these royalties should be treated in the same manner as oil royalties on the public domain, Congress enacted the act of May 10, 1938 (52 Stat. 291), which provided for the transfer to the reclamation fund of 52½ percent of all of these naval royalties. The present bill carries out this same policy.

The measure is recommended by the Department of the Interior, but an adverse report has been filed by the Department of the Navy. Both of these reports are attached hereto.

The committee is of the opinion that since the settled policy of Congress has been to divert 52½ percent of all oil rents and royalties to the permanent development of the States in which the deposits lie, and since this recovery would not have been made if it had not been for the initiative of the Congress, and particularly of the Committee on Public Lands, there should be no distinction whatever between the manner of handling the sum recovered from the Standard Oil Co. of California and other rents and royalties on the naval reserves.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 28, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The introduction is noted of the bill (S. 3501) to provide for the disposition of certain moneys received by the United States in connection with proceedings against the Standard Oil Co. of California and others, pursuant to the joint resolution of February 21, 1924 (43 Stat. 15).

The purpose of the bill (S. 3501) is to provide for the transfer to the credit of the reclamation fund of 52½ percent of such sum as may be paid into the United States Treasury as a result of the suit instituted by the United States against the Standard Oil Co. of California, or in any other proceeding heretofore or hereafter instituted.

There have been similar legislative proposals in the past to effect a credit to the reclamation fund of moneys paid into the Treasury from litigation, receiverships, rents, and royalties, incident to the Government's ownership of the naval petroleum reserves.

The Navy Department has always opposed proposed legislation affecting these moneys for the reason that it believes, first, the naval petroleum reserves were set aside in the interest of national defense and of all the people; second, that the litigation, receiverships, and oil operations involving these lands were and are carried on in the interests of the United States and not for the benefit of those States interested in reclamation; and, third, that the interests of the Navy should be considered paramount, in view of the provisions of the act of June 30, 1938 (Public, No. 786, 75th Cong., 3d sess.; 52 Stat. 1252).

The act provides in part, as follows:

"In order to consolidate and protect the oil lands owned by the Government the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract with owners and lessees of land within or adjoining such reserves for conservation in the ground of oil and gas and for compensation for estimated drainage in lieu of drilling or operating offset wells, and to exchange Government land in naval petroleum reserve No. 1, the right to royalty production from any of the naval petroleum reserves, and the right to any moneys due to the Government as a result of the wrongful extraction of petroleum products from lands within naval petroleum reserve No. 1, for privately owned lands or leases with naval petroleum reserve No. 1: Provided, That no lease of any portion of the naval petroleum reserves, no contract to alienate the use, control, or possession thereof from the United States, no contract to sell the oil and gas products thereof, other than royalty oil and gas products, no contract for conservation or for compensation for estimated drainage and no exchange of any land, any right to royalty production or any right to any moneys as hereinabove authorized shall become effective until approved by the President: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report annually to the Congress all agreements entered into under the authority herein granted."

To investigate further the nature of the legislative intent of the above portion of the act of June 30, 1938, reference is made to the reports on this act (S. 1131, 75th Cong., 3d sess.) contained in House Report 2672, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, and to Senate Report No. 317, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

Page 4 of the Senate Report No. 317 states:

"The bill as reported by the committee reenacts the authority giving the Secretary of the Navy jurisdiction over all Government lands and leases within the naval petroleum reserves and authority to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil from lands in the naval reserves for the benefit of the United States.

"The bill grants additional authority, as follows:

"(1) Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President—

"(a) To enter into agreements with operators on adjoining private lands, which agreements have for the purpose the conservation of oil and gas on the Government's lands.

"(b) To exchange Government lands on naval petroleum reserve No. 1, for private lands in naval petroleum reserve No. 1 in order to consolidate both Government and privately-owned lands into solid blocks.

"(c) To acquire privately owned lands on naval petroleum reserve No. 1 by purchase or condemnation.

"(d) To use moneys due the Government as royalties from any of the naval petroleum reserves and moneys due the Government because of the illegal extraction of oil and gas from lands in naval petroleum reserve No. 1 in connection with (b) and (c) above."

Identical language appears in page 3 of House Report No. 2672.

It is submitted that the provisions of the bill S. 3501 would unquestionably interfere with the provisions of the act of June 30, 1938, with the intent of the Congress as shown above, and with negotiations now being carried out under the authority of that act for the consolidation and protection of the Government's lands in naval petroleum reserve No. 1.

The Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending July 1939 contained the following provision (52 Stat. 322):

"Increase in the reclamation fund: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transfer to the credit of the reclamation fund created by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), a sum equal to the difference between (1) 52½ percent of the moneys which the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine to have accrued to the United States from lands within the naval petroleum reserves, except those in Alaska, from February 25, 1920, to June 30, 1938, inclusive, and (2) the total of all sums advanced to the reclamation fund under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to authorize advances to the reclamation fund, and for the issue and disposal of certificates of indebtedness in reimbursement therefor, and for other purposes,' approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 835), as amended, and under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to authorize advances to the reclamation fund, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1507), as amended, and not reimbursed by transfer from the reclamation fund to the general funds in the Treasury. The transaction provided for in this section shall be deemed to have effected a complete reimbursement to the general funds in the Treasury of all sums advanced to the reclamation fund under the provisions of such acts of June 25, 1910, and March 3, 1931, as amended."

The language was not repeated in the Appropriation Act for the next fiscal year. It is noted that this language affected 52½ percent of "the moneys which the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine to have accrued." The proposed bill, S. 3501, broadens this language to "any moneys heretofore or hereafter received by the United States" * * * "or as a result of any other proceeding heretofore or hereafter instituted."

Any proposal with respect to the transfer of future receipts is considered inimical to the interests of the Navy and the national defense, as it can only serve to increase the incentive for the development rather than the conservation of these reserves; such a situation will tend to handicap the Secretary of the Navy in carrying out the provisions of the act of June 30, 1938.

It is true that the act of June 30, 1938, requires that, except as otherwise provided, all moneys accruing from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Under ordinary circumstances the disposition of funds that have been or will be deposited as miscellaneous receipts is not a matter with which the Navy Department should concern itself, but there is a vast difference between a miscellaneous receipt and a receipt which is to be earmarked for a special purpose, in this case, the reclamation fund. The interests involved will inevitably conflict, regardless of the sincerity of motives of the parties.

The conservation of the naval petroleum reserves is a matter of grave concern to the entire Naval Establishment and of paramount importance to the national defense.

For the reasons above, the Navy Department strongly recommends against enactment of the bill S. 3501.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that enactment of the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS COMPTON, Acting.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1940.

Hon. ALVA B. ADAMS,
Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ADAMS: Reference is made to your letter of March 7, requesting a report on S. 3501, entitled "A bill to provide for the disposition of certain moneys received by the United States in connection with proceedings against the Standard Oil Co. of California and others, pursuant to the joint resolution of February 21, 1924 (43 Stat. 15)."

I favor the enactment of this bill.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to secure additional money for the reclamation fund created by the act of June 17, 1902, by transferring to it a sum equal to 52½ percent of all moneys received from the Standard Oil Co. and other claimants of sections 36 and 16, township 30 south, range 27 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, in the Elk Hills oil field, and within the exterior boundaries of naval petroleum reserve No. 1. The lands in section 36 have been determined to be public lands of the United States and a part of the naval petroleum reserve by proceedings instituted pursuant to the joint resolution mentioned in the bill and judgment has been obtained requiring the claimants under the State of California to surrender the land and to pay the United States a sum amounting to the net value of all oil and gas produced from the land with interest. I am informed that after costs were deducted the amount paid in full settlement of the judgment and accumulated interest is $7,137,574.72, and under the bill the reclamation fund would gain $3,747,226.72. The money recovered by this suit does not fall in any class of receipts covered by a law providing for its specific use or disposal and will be deposited in the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts." Adverse proceedings involving section 16 has not been concluded, but if that section is determined to belong to the United States, there is little likelihood of a money judgment because no oil has been produced from that section.

The reclamation fund is decreasing, and additional moneys will be required to complete the projects now under construction as well as to build other contemplated projects. A provision of the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1939, approved May 9, 1938 (52 Stat. 291, 322), authorized and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer to the credit of the reclamation fund a sum equal to 52½ percent of the moneys accrued to the United States from lands within the naval petroleum reserves outside of Alaska, from February 25, 1920, to June 30, 1938, inclusive. S. 3501 would supplement that appropriation by the transfer of the moneys received by reason of litigation for oil taken from the naval petroleum reserves.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised me that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if it is proposed to go on in this way, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am about to move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow.

PROPOSED REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator moves to adjourn or recess, I desire to say that about a year and a half ago a special committee was appointed to look into the subject of taxation of Government bonds. That committee is practically ready to report. Because of the fact that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was called out of the city today, it was not possible for me to file the report.

The committee has made a careful study of the general subject, and has divided its proposed report into two parts: One, a discussion of the merits of the proposal to tax the bond issues of States, municipalities, and local subdivisions; the other, a discussion of the constitutional or legal questions involved. We have tried to present fairly in our report the arguments on this proposition which have been made by both sides.

The majority of the committee has come to a definite conclusion. That conclusion is, first, that hereafter there should be issued no more tax-exempt bonds of the Government of the United States or any of its subdivisions or corporations or agencies; second, that from this time on future issues of bonds by State governments and by the various municipalities of the States should be taxable. I may say that those views are concurred in by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and myself. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] dissents, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] will dissent, but desires to submit his own views.

On the constitutional question involved—that is, as to whether or not the Government may legally tax future issues of State and municipal bonds—the committee divides 3 and 2, with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and the chairman—myself—believing that such taxation may constitutionally be levied, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] dissenting; and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] I think will dissent, and desires to file his reasons therefor.

I have today presented an amendment to the tax bill which is presented on behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and myself, and possibly there may be one or two other Senators who will desire to join us in that amendment which will, I think, effectively tax future issues of State bonds, subject all future issues of Federal bonds to the income tax, and subject those bonds to taxation by the State authorities.

I have here the final report, signed by five members of the committee; but in view of the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] that I withhold the final report until he has an opportunity to go over it more fully, he having been engaged in the conference on the military-conscription bill, I do not feel that I should yet file the report. In view, however, of the fact that the tax bill will be taken up tomorrow, and that this amendment is germane to it and will be offered, I ask unanimous consent that the report, without stating the final conclusions and recommendations, which I will present to the Senate, be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The proposed report is as follows:

TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

[Proposed report of the Special Committee on the Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, pursuant to Senate Resolution 303, 75th Cong., 3d sess. Sept. —, 1940]

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

PRENTISS M. BROWN, Michigan, chairman.
HARRY FLOOD BYRD, Virginia.
JOHN E. MILLER, Arkansas.
EDWARD R. BURKE, Nebraska.
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr., Delaware.
WARREN R. AUSTIN, Vermont.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

SEPTEMBER 1940.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Pursuant to the provisions of Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, I have the honor to submit the report of the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries with respect to the taxation, and the exemption from taxation, of (1) securities issued by or under the authority of the United States or the several States or political subdivisions thereof; (2) income derived from such securities; (3) income received as compensation from the United States or from any State or political subdivision thereof.

Very respectfully,

PRENTISS M. BROWN, Chairman.

Your committee was created by the following resolution (S. Res. 303, 75th Cong., 3d sess.):

"Resolved, That there is hereby established a special committee on the taxation of governmental securities and salaries, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, which shall be composed of three Senators who are members of the Committee on Finance and three Senators who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The committee shall select a chairman from among its members. A vacancy in the committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute its functions, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the committee to make a thorough study and investigation with respect to the taxation, and the exemption from taxation, of (1) securities issued by or under the authority of the United States or the several States or political subdivisions thereof; (2) income derived from such securities; (3) income received as compensation from the United States or from any State or political subdivision thereof. The committee shall report to the Senate the result of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable, not later than March 1, 1939, at which time all authority conferred by this resolution shall expire.

"SEC. 3. The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such times and places, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

"The expenses of the said investigation, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

"Sec. 4. The committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government and of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation."

Subsequently, the time for making its report was extended to the close of the present session by the following resolution adopted:

"Resolved, That Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, establishing a Special Committee on the Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, agreed to June 16, 1938, is hereby continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and the time for making the report required by such resolution is hereby extended to such date of expiration."

Pursuant to this authority, your committee held public hearings on January 18 and again on February 7 through 16, 1939, at which time those who so desired were allowed to appear and give testimony. The scope of the inquiry was divided into two major parts: First, Should the Federal Government tax the interest on State and local bonds and the compensation of State and local employees? and, second, Should the Federal Government permit the States to tax the interest on Federal securities and the compensation of Federal officers and employees?

In all, there was presented to your committee over 700 pages of testimony. Representatives of the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice, and a number of economists and experts appeared and strongly advocated the enactment of legislation designed to effectuate these policies. The conference on State defense, through a number of spokesmen who were representative of State attorneys general, State revenue officers, local finance officers, and the like, appeared in opposition to this proposal. A number of excellent memoranda and studies dealing both with the legal and economic aspects of the proposal were filed and still others were made available for study by your committee.

With respect to the portion of the inquiry relating to taxation of the compensation of governmental officers and employees, action by the Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States since the close of the hearings has settled this question. In the case of Graves v. O'Keefe, decided March 27, 1939, the Supreme Court swept away the constitutional restrictions surrounding the problem, and the Congress, in the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939, approved April 12, 1939, made statutory provision for the future taxation by both the Federal and State Governments of the compensation of all governmental officers and employees.

In this connection the chairman of your committee made an oral report to the Committee on Finance, at the time the public salary tax bill of 1939 was before that body, setting out briefly the chief arguments advanced by both the proponents and opponents of that legislation. He gave also the conclusion reached by your committee, that, from an economic standpoint, salaries of Federal employees should be subjected to State income taxes and the compensation of State and local officers and employees should be subject to Federal taxation. To effectuate this policy, your committee recommended the enactment of the public salary tax bill.

Thus, from the original field of inquiry open to your committee, the problem of the taxation of the salaries of governmental employees has been eliminated by subsequent action. The scope of the present report is confined to the taxation of governmental bond interest. It is felt that a brief but rather thorough summary of the arguments presented on both sides of the question, from the fiscal, economic, and legal viewpoints, is desirable. In addition, your committee will present its conclusions reached after a full consideration of all of the evidence presented

I. THE FISCAL ASPECTS

With regard to the fiscal aspects of the proposal, it is well to keep in mind that the denial of the tax-exemption privilege to future issues of governmental securities would not immediately put an end to the loss of tax revenue. The supply of tax-exempt securities outstanding is so large that many years will be required to reduce it to a point where individuals wishing to avoid income taxes will not be able to obtain a sufficient amount of such securities to meet their requirements. The effect as to the cost of increased interest rates will likewise be gradual. As new borrowing takes place and the present tax-exempt bonds are replaced by securities, the interest on which will be fully taxable, the loss of revenue will steadily decrease and the cost of additional interest will steadily increase until all of such securities become fully taxable. This is a particularly important consideration for State and local governments, because in their case the volume of debt is not increasing. In 2 of the past 6 years, it has even declined.

Both the added-cost and increased-revenue estimates given by the Treasury as well as by the opponents of this proposal are based on a year in which this plan shall be in full operation, that is, the present situation has been projected into the future to a year when all tax-exempt bonds will have been replaced by bonds, the interest on which is fully subject to the income tax.

A. Arguments for the proposal

The Treasury Department estimates that the Federal Government would secure additional revenue ranging from $179,000,000 to $337,000,000 annually. This, however, will not constitute a net gain because the tax-exemption feature now produces substantial savings through reduced interest rates. The Treasury estimates that in the case of Federal securities the annual reduction in governmental cost because of the tax-exempt privilege, ranges from $19,000,000 to $50,000,000. The saving is relatively small because only one-third of the Federal obligations are now exempt from the surtax, and because the wholly exempt securities are almost entirely short-term obligations and therefore are little, if at all, affected by tax exemption. Making allowances for this interdependence of the two aspects, added interest cost and increased revenue, the Treasury estimates that the net gain to the Federal Government will range from $180,000,000 to $300,000,000 a year.

For State and local governments, the Treasury estimates that the removal of the tax exemption on their future issues will result in additional interest of from $40,000,000 to $105,000,000 annually. Because of the lack of adequate data, no estimates were given as to the increased revenue which the State and local governments could expect. The following table briefly summarizes these estimates.

The additional annual income-tax revenue and increases in interest cost for years following the complete retirement of tax-exempt securities are estimated as follows:

	Minimum	Maximum
Income-tax revenue: Annual increase to the Federal Government	$179,000,000	$337,000,000
Interest costs:
Annual increase to the Federal Government and Federal instrumentalities	19,000,000	50,000,000
Annual increase to the State and local governments	40,000,000	105,000,000

The Treasury points out that the added interest cost which will be required when the tax-exempt privilege is eliminated should be looked upon not so much as added cost but the price of the termination of a special benefit or bounty hitherto enjoyed by government. The Treasury estimates that this price will be an increase in interest cost of from one-fourth of 1 percent to one-half of 1 percent. The outstanding amount of tax-exempt securities is greatly in excess of the demand for such securities on the part of individuals who are subject to the higher income-tax rates. In consequence, substantial portions of them are sold to institutional investors and to individuals to whom the tax-exemption privilege has little or no value. It would follow, considering this feature alone, that there should be no appreciable differentiation between yields of taxable and tax-exempt securities. The interest differentiation is affected by another feature; the holding of governmental securities has many advantages apart from the privilege of tax exemption. These advantages cannot be duplicated in private securities, whatever the yield. The purchase of governmental securities is more or less mandatory upon seekers after absolute safety. Public securities, as a whole, have important legal and psychological advantages which make them extremely attractive to certain classes of holders, for example, banks and trustees, despite wide differentiation in yield as compared with taxable securities. These persons derive little benefit, if any, from the tax-exemption privilege and would pay little or nothing for it if it could be purchased separately.

B. Arguments against the proposals

It is obvious that the taxation of the interest from public securities would necessitate a higher interest rate to induce investors to purchase the securities at the same price at which they are now sold. The statements of witnesses vary considerably as to the exact amount of such added cost. The opponents of the proposal estimate it at 60 points, or six-tenths of 1 percent. Thus, where the Treasury estimated additional costs to State and local governments of from $40,000,000 to $105,000,000, the State and local finance officers predicted an ultimate increase in the cost of their government of about $113,000,000 a year. The Conference on State Defense asserted that in any case the additional cost to State and local governments would be in excess of $100,000,000 a year. Opponents of the proposal estimated that additional Federal revenue of $120,000,000 a year would be derived from the interest on State and local obligations. They estimated, too, that such States as have income taxes would secure only about $17,000,000 from taxing the interest on Federal securities with which to offset their more than $100,000,000 additional interest cost caused by the imposition of the Federal tax upon the interest from their bonds. The States and municipalities therefore concluded that the fiscal effects of the removal of intergovernmental immunity on public bond interest, as a whole, will result in a net effect of practically nothing. They point out, however, that the problem should not be viewed as if there were but a single government in the country to share gains and losses. They insist that if the problem is viewed in the light of each level of government, the following situation would result:

First, that the Federal Government would gain; second, that the State governments would lose in spite of the fact that some 34 States do have income taxes. This they say is true because State income taxes are levied at much lower rates than the Federal tax, and the income tax plays an insignificant part in most State fiscal systems; third, the local governments would suffer a complete loss because they levy no income tax and the increased interest which they would be required to pay on their own securities would have to be met from the property tax or other local levies having no relation to net income. It was shown that 83 percent of the State and local debt consists of municipal debt and that a similar percentage of increased interest cost would have to be borne by the city governments which do not levy income taxes and which could gain nothing from the taxation of Federal securities to offset this added cost.

The opponents of the proposal thus contend that, while the net over-all effect upon all governmental units may be counterbalanced, that the effect upon the local units of government will be inequitable because they lack a method of recouping their additional interest cost.

II. THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ASPECTS

A. Arguments for the proposal

The ratification of the sixteenth amendment and the subsequent enactment and development of the Federal income tax, as well as development of State income taxes, were prompted by the intent to distribute at least a part of the cost of government in accordance with individual ability to pay. The availability of securities wholly or partially exempt from income taxes defeats this purpose and results in serious tax inequities, because it provides a tax-free haven to persons in the higher income brackets. Such individuals may, by the purchase of tax-free securities, secure vastly more benefits in tax savings than they sacrifice through the lower interest rates they receive.

The inequity of tax-exempt securities may be demonstrated by a comparison of individuals differently situated. To a married individual with only $2,000 to $3,000 income, $1 of tax-exempt interest is worth no more than $1 of taxable income, because he would in no event pay income taxes. However, to an individual with $100,000 of income, a dollar of tax-exempt interest is the equivalent of $2.44 of taxable interest, and to an individual whose last bracket of income is subject to the 79 percent rate, a dollar of tax-exempt interest is the equivalent of $4.76 of taxable interest. These governmental securities, which afford such widely varied tax savings to individuals differently situated, can be purchased at the same price by all individuals. Only a small portion of this price is attributable to the tax-exemption privilege.

A number of widely varying statements were made before your committee relative to the portion of the income of persons in the upper income brackets arising from tax-exempt securities. In this connection, the income tax statistics are unreliable. This is true because the income from such securities is not required to be included in gross income and thus in numerous instances is unreported. However, the statistics relating to the composition of gross estates of decedents, for the purpose of the estate tax, are reliable. Such figures for 1937 show that wholly tax-exempt securities make up approximately 10 percent of gross estates in excess of $50,000. Of estates in excess of $1,000,000, more than 15 percent of the gross estate was composed of wholly tax-exempt securities. Of estates in excess of $5,000,000, wholly and partially tax-exempt securities made up more than 20 percent of the gross estate. These figures clearly indicate that the holdings of tax-exempt bonds in the hands of individuals in the high surtax brackets is considerably higher than is generally believed.

The inequity which has been brought about by the existence of tax-exempt interest and a progressive income tax has increased with the years. The income-tax rates have become more and more progressive, more States have enacted income taxes, and the volume of tax-exempt securities has increased. The tax savings which accrue to individuals from the ownership of tax-exempt securities result in corresponding reductions in income-tax collections. These losses have to be made up elsewhere, frequently from less desirable sources. This is an important consideration, for at present only 13 percent of Federal, State, and local general government revenues are derived from the progressive elements in the tax system; that is, the income, inheritance, and estate taxes.

While the fiscal effects of the proposed legislation would be realized only gradually, those pertaining to the general economy would be felt more quickly. The tax savings which Government securities afford to individuals in the higher income groups serve to discourage those individuals from assuming business risks. Industry finds it difficult to compete with tax-exempt securities in attracting the capital of individuals in the higher income brackets. This is an important general economic consideration, not only because industry is continually in need of new capital to provide employment for the constantly growing working population, but also because the growing institutionalization of savings has already depleted the supply of enterprise capital.

B. Arguments against the proposal

The opponents of the proposed legislation argue that the deficiency in yield of tax-exempt interest as compared with taxable interest is the equivalent of a tax at the source with respect to the nontaxable interest. Thus the apparent gain of investors in tax-exempt securities is not a net gain, but on the whole is almost exactly offset by the difference in yield available to him in the taxable and nontaxable field. It should be pointed out with respect to this contention that while the difference in yield is, to some extent, the equivalent of a tax on the source, at the same time it is the equivalent of a tax at a flat rate, thus defeating the progressive income-tax rates applicable to other income. That is to say that the tax-exempt security bears the same rate in the hands of a person in the high income-tax brackets that it yields in the hands of a person with a very low income.

However, the opponents of the proposal point out that a similar treatment is now accorded with respect to capital gains. That is, the present law provides a ceiling rate of 15 percent on the gains from capital assets which have been held for more than 2 years, regardless of the size of the taxpayer's net income.

Since the proposal is prospective only in nature and since it is obvious that it will be years before the amount of outstanding securities bearing the tax-exempt privilege is reduced to an amount insufficient to fill the wants of persons in the high surtax brackets, it is clear that the tax haven now enjoyed by wealthy individuals will not be eliminated for years to come. However, this step, whenever undertaken, will always result in the same delayed application so long as the policy of taxing only future interests is adhered to.

As has already been pointed out, the bulk of tax-exempt securities is not held by individuals in the higher surtax bracket. Thus, to tax the interest from all of such securities, while it may work out equitably with regard to wealthy taxpayers, can have no beneficial application to taxpayers in the lower brackets. The opponents of the proposal thus contend that they would be willing, and even anxious, to take action to eliminate the undoubted loophole that tax-exempt bonds now furnish to wealthy taxpayers if this alone could be done without subjecting all of the interest of such bonds to taxation and thus impose an undue burden on the States and, particularly, the local governments. They say that if the effect of the added cost which the tax will impose upon State and municipal governments is traced, it will appear that it will be laid upon small local taxpayers in the form of property taxes without any regard for their ability to pay. Thus they contend that the furtherance of the progressive Federal income tax by the elimination of the tax-exempt privilege will result in a regressive tax on State and local property and sales.

In addition, the States fear that the elimination of intergovernmental tax immunity in this regard will lead to a further general breaking down of the line of demarcation between Federal and State activities. They point out that the Federal Government is continually acquiring more and more property within the States which thereby removes such property from the coverage of the States' general property tax; that the Federal Government is drawing so heavily upon the income tax that this field is closed to further State exploitation; and, that no real source of revenue with which to meet their added interest cost is available except by additions to the already heavy property taxes, sales taxes, and the like.

With respect to the position of the Treasury, relative to the classification of the tax-exempt privilege as a bounty, the States answer by showing that they, too, are now granting a bounty to the Federal Government by refraining from imposing property taxes upon the ever-increasing Federal property located in the several States.

The States fear the lack of real mutuality in the proposal. They are reluctant to rely on a supposedly reciprocal plan that has no basis except a statutory declaration that might be withdrawn by a subsequent Congress. They contend that the Federal Government could protect itself by declaring the State tax to be a burden upon Federal operations and that under the doctrine of Federal supremacy such a declaration would be effective. The States would have no such protection.

Moreover the States insist that immediately after such a proposal became effective the units of government would have to increase the rate on their bond offerings by the present interest differential; that the interest saving would thus be lost at once; that, on the other hand, the injustice of tax-exemption discrimination and the loss in tax revenue would continue unabated for 20 or 30 years longer; and, that for an additional 20 years there would be a gradual decrease of this injustice and tax loss, during which time every sale of outstanding tax-exempt bonds would yield their prior holders an unearned premium through their rising prices.

III. CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECTS

A. Arguments for the proposal

(1) The immunity rule

There is no provision in the Federal Constitution expressly prohibiting the Federal Government from taxing the obligations or interest therefrom of a State or political subdivision. This prohibition had its origin in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 1819). In that case, in an opinion rendered by Chief Justice Marshall, the Court held that the State of Maryland had no authority to tax the notes of a national bank. The Maryland legislation was so designed as to make it applicable only to the Bank of the United States. While the Court did not rest its decision upon the discriminatory nature of the tax but adopted the broader ground that the States were powerless to hinder or obstruct the functions of the Federal Government, it has recently said in Helvering v. Gerhardt, (304 U. S. 405, 413) that "it was perhaps enough to have supported the conclusion" in the McCulloch case, "that it was aimed specifically at national banks."

In 1870, the Court, in Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113), held that this doctrine of implied immunity was reciprocal and that therefore the Federal Government had no power to subject to a nondiscriminatory income tax, the salary of a State judge.

This last decision has recently been overruled in the case of Graves v. O'Keefe (306 U. S. 466), so that there is now no question as to the right of the Federal Government to subject the salaries of State and local employees to the income tax.

In 1895, the Supreme Court held in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429, 138 U. S. 601) that the Federal income tax could not be applied to interest received upon municipal bonds. This case, unlike the Day case, has not been specifically overruled by the Supreme Court, but has been seriously impaired by subsequent decisions. Briefly, these are as follows:

In Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. (220 U. S. 107, 1911) it was held that the interest was used as the measure of a franchise tax, rather than the expressed subject of the tax; Justices Holmes, Brandeis, and Stone have subsequently declared that this ruling alone is sufficient to destroy the Pollock decision.[1] When the Pollock case was decided, it was supposed that the Government contractor was constitutionally exempt from taxation upon his income[2] but the Supreme Court has since held that he can be taxed either on his net income[3] or on his gross receipts.[4] Government officers and employees, when the Pollock case was decided, were exempt from taxation, but that immunity has since been abolished. Government lessees, originally granted immunity from income taxes on the authority of the Pollock case in Gillespie v. Oklahoma (257 U. S. 501, 1922), are now subject to taxation under Helvering v. Mountain Producers Corporation (303 U. S. 376, 1938).

If the Pollock ruling was based on the proposition that a tax on income of Government bonds is a tax on its source, then its ground of decision has unequivocally been rejected by the Supreme Court. In Graves v. O'Keefe (No. 478, October Term, 1938; March 27, 1939) the Court referred to seven cases which were inconsistent with that principle, and said (p. 5), "The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source, is no longer tenable."

Particularly in the field of tax immunity, constitutional doctrines are not eternally and immutably fixed merely because the Supreme Court has once examined the question. As Mr. Justice Frankfurter said, concurring in the O'Keefe case, "The ultimate touchstone of constitutionality is the Constitution itself, and not what we have said about it."

In the last two terms alone the Court has expressly overruled three important doctrines under which tax immunity was formerly granted, and has probably overruled a fourth. In Helvering v. Mountain Producers Corporation (303 U. S. 376; 1938) the Court sustained the Federal income tax as applied to the lessees of State school lands, and overruled Gillespie v. Oklahoma (287 U. S. 501; 1922) and Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co. (265 U. S. 393). On March 27, 1939, the Court in Graves v. O'Keefe (No. 478, October Term, 1938) overruled Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113; 1870) and Rogers v. Graves (299 U. S. 401; 1936) and held all officers and employees, of both the Federal and State Governments, taxable by the other Government. On May 22, 1939, the Court in O'Malley v. Woodrough (No. 810, October Term, 1938) held that Federal judges are not granted immunity from the general income tax by article III of the Constitution, expressly overruled Nilan v. Graham (268 U. S. 501; 1925) and by necessary implication overruled Evans v. Gore (283 U. S. 245; 1920). And in James v. Dravo Contracting Co. (302 U. S. 134; 1937) the Court upheld a gross receipts tax as applied to a Government contractor; while it did not expressly overrule the cases declaring invalid sales taxes on goods sold to the Government,[5] their authority was weakened to the point of extinction.

The recent opinions of the Supreme Court, removing established immunities from taxation, are said to be largely applicable to the case of the Government bondholder. Each opinion has emphasized that the challenged tax was nondiscriminatory, directed at all citizens alike, and have found in this a reason for its validity. In the O'Keefe opinion, Mr. Justice Stone relied upon the further fact that the tax "is laid upon income which becomes the property of the taxpayer when received * * * and the tax * * * is paid from his private funds." So, too, the interest paid upon Government bonds has become the private property of the bondholder, and the tax is paid wholly from his private funds. The recent opinions also have placed strong emphasis upon the duty of the private person to contribute to the costs of his Government, whatever may be the source of his income. The employees of the Port Authority, the Court, for example, said in Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405, 420; 1938), "enjoy the benefits and protection of the laws of the United States," and "are under a duty to support its government." Similarly, the great benefits of government—both national and local—are not withdrawn from the Government bondholder. With these benefits, the recent opinions demonstrate, go the burdens of paying a fair share of their cost.

The only reason advanced in those opinions which is not wholly applicable to the bondholder is the statement in the O'Keefe case that immunity should be denied the Government employees because there was no "basis for the assumption that any such tangible or certain economic burden is imposed on the Government concerned as would justify" a decision that the tax was invalid. It is recognized that some part, although by no means all, of the economic burden of an income tax on the Government bondholder will likely be passed on to the borrowing government. But the present exemption of interest on Government bonds, to the extent that it is reflected in lower-interest rates paid by the Government, is simply a bounty offered both the bondholders and the issuing government. And the Court in the Gerhardt case said that "it is not ordinarily necessary to confer on the State a competitive advantage over private persons in carrying on the operations of its government" (304 U. S. at 421). And both the O'Keefe and the Gerhardt opinions repeatedly point out that, to the extent tax burdens are shifted, this "is but the normal incident of organization within the same territory of two governments, each possessing the taxing power" (O'Keefe, p. 9). Indeed, in the Gerhardt opinion the Court lists a dozen cases where, in the Court's language, "taxpayers have been held subject to Federal income tax notwithstanding its possible economic burden on the State" (304 U. S. at 418–419). The most notable of these is James v. Dravo Contracting Co. (302 U. S. 134; 1937), where a gross receipts tax of 2 percent was sustained as applied to contractors with the Federal Government. The then Solicitor General, arguing as amicus curiae in support of the tax, admitted that the whole amount of the tax—paid by a contractor who carefully estimates every cost before submitting his bid, and must pay a percentage of every dollar received—would ordinarily be passed on to the Government. The Court was not convinced that this would necessarily be the case, but said that even if the tax were to increase the cost to the Government, "that fact would not invalidate the tax" (302 U. S. at 160). While the Court put the Pollock case aside, it may be noted that it is most difficult to find a substantial economic distinction between a contract to build a dam and one to loan money.

(2) The sixteenth amendment

There is considerable support for the belief that the Supreme Court may uphold the legislation under the plain language of the sixteenth amendment giving the Congress the power to tax "income from whatever source derived." The arguments in support of such a conclusion may be summarized briefly, as follows:

1. The sixteenth amendment provides as follows:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration."

The provisions of the original Constitution giving the Congress the right to lay an income tax are sections 8 and 9, which provide as follows:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

"No capitation, or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken."

It will be noted that in the original Constitution, Congress was merely given the power to lay and collect income taxes, but that under the sixteenth amendment the power was given to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived. If those last words are given their ordinary meaning, they confer upon the Congress the power to collect a tax on income whether derived by the taxpayer from interest on Government bonds or from any other source. It is argued that these words were inserted to eliminate the necessity of looking at the source of the income. This was not new language, but language which had been used in various taxing acts and which had been construed by the Supreme Court as being broad enough to cover income in the form of salaries received by State employees or of interest on State and municipal bonds. In the first income-tax act which was imposed during the Civil War period, a tax was levied upon gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States "* * * whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interests, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever."

This language was construed by the Supreme Court in Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113) as broad enough to embrace the salary of a State judge, which the Court held was immune from taxation under the Constitution. The Day case has subsequently been overruled by the Supreme Court in Graves v. O'Keefe, decided on March 27, 1939. But the Day case is still important in showing that the language of the statute was broad enough to embrace salaries of State and local officers as well as the interest from State bonds. Similar language was contained in the Income Tax Act of 1894. This language was construed by the Supreme Court in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. as including interest from municipal bonds which the Court, in that case, held was exempt under the Constitution from Federal taxation. In the Excise Tax Act of 1909, the Supreme Court also held that the phrase, "net income from all sources," included interest from State and local bonds in the case of Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. Therefore, when this language was used in the sixteenth amendment, it is reasonable to conclude that it was intended to embrace the income from State and local bonds.

2. In the Pollock cases (157 U. S. 429; 158 U. S. 601) the Supreme Court had before it for decision not only the question as to whether or not the income tax was a direct tax, but also the question as to whether or not the income tax could be applied to interest from municipal bonds. The sixteenth amendment was adopted to overcome the Pollock cases.

3. The present Chief Justice, who was then Governor of New York, stated in a message to the New York Legislature in 1910, submitting the sixteenth amendment for ratification or rejection, the following:

"The comprehensive words, 'from whatever source derived,' if taken in their natural sense, would include not only income from ordinary real or personal property, but also incomes derived from State and municipal securities.

"It is certainly significant that the words, 'from whatever source derived,' have been introduced into the proposed amendment as if it were the intention to make it impossible for the claim to be urged that the income from any property, even though it consists of the bonds of the State or of a municipality organized by it, will be removed from the reach of the taxing power of the Federal Government.

"The immunity from Federal taxation that the State and its instrumentalities of government now enjoy is derived not from any express provision of the Federal Constitution, but from what has been deemed to be necessary implication. Who can say that any such implication with respect to the proposed tax will survive the adoption of this explicit and comprehensive amendment?"

4. The attorneys who argued and won the Pollock cases appeared before the New York Legislature and in opposing ratification of the sixteenth amendment stated that its adoption would permit the taxation of State and local securities through a Federal income tax.

5. Senators Borah and Root disputed this interpretation of the amendment, but this was not done until after the amendment had passed the Congress and the question was presented in the message of Governor Hughes to the Legislature of New York. Almost one-quarter of the messages of the State Governors, recommending ratification or rejection of the sixteenth amendment, discussed the interpretation placed upon it by Governor Hughes. Most of the Governors either agreed with the interpretation of Governor Hughes or stated that they were not sure whether Governor Hughes or Senator Borah was correct, but that the amendment should nevertheless be ratified. From this evidence it cannot be said that the country ratified the amendment without the knowledge of the Hughes interpretation.

6. It is true that the Supreme Court in several cases, notably Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245), held that the sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing power of the Congress but merely removed the necessity for apportionment. But in that case the Government conceded that the sixteenth amendment did not justify the tax, so that the question of the sixteenth amendment was not before the Court. Moreover, the reasoning in Evans v. Gore was rejected by the Supreme Court in the case of O'Malley v. Woodrough, decided May 22, 1939, in which the Court in referring to the application of the Federal income tax to Federal judges said:

"To subject them to a general tax is merely to recognize that judges are also citizens, and that their particular function in Government does not generate an immunity from sharing with their fellow citizens the material burden of the Government whose Constitution and laws they are charged with administering."

B. Arguments against the proposal

(1) The immunity rule

The following are the principal arguments advanced by the opponents to the proposal:

1. The Supreme Court has held in the Pollock cases (157 U. S. 601) that the Congress does not have the power to subject the income from State or local securities to a general income tax. The reason for such a conclusion was that such a tax was "a tax on the power of the States and on their instrumentalities to borrow money, and consequently repugnant to the Constitution."

2. The Pollock cases, so far as the question of taxation of income from State and local bonds is concerned, have never been overruled by the Supreme Court. In fact, the Court has repeatedly affirmed this principle in subsequent decisions. In the National Life case, the Court held a provision restricting a deduction to life-insurance companies to be unconstitutional for the reason that this disallowance, in effect, amounted to the taxation of the income from State and local securities.

3. The Court has recognized a clear distinction between the taxation of the income from a State or local bond and the taxation of the salary of a State or local employee. In the Dravo Contracting case (302 U. S. 134), the Court upheld a 3-percent gross-receipts tax imposed by the State of West Virginia upon gross receipts received by an independent contractor for work performed for the Federal Government in West Virginia. This case was clearly distinguished from the bondholder case, Mr. Justice Hughes, in the majority opinion, stating:

"There is no ineluctable logic which makes the doctrine of immunity with respect to Government bonds applicable to the earnings of an independent contractor rendering services to the Government. That doctrine recognizes the direct effect of a tax which 'would operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised' (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co.) and which would directly affect the Government's obligation as a continuing security. Vital considerations are there involved respecting the permanent relations of the Government to investors in its securities and its ability to maintain its credit—considerations which are not found in connection with contracts made from time to time for the services of independent contractors."

In the case of Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405), decided May 16, 1938, the Court, in upholding the Federal income tax as applied to the salaries of employees of the port authority, distinguished this situation from that of taxing the income from State bonds, stating:

"* * * that the immunity doctrine was applied where the functions involved were thought to be essential to the maintenance of a State government, as where the intent was to tax income received by a private investor from State bonds, and thus threaten impairment of the borrowing power of the State (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429; cf. Weston v. Charleston, 465, 466."

In the O'Keefe case the Supreme Court overruled Collector v. Day, holding that the Federal Government could not tax the salary of a State officer, and New York ex rel. Rogers v. Graves, holding that a State could not tax the salary of a Federal officer. These decisions were overruled because the Court found that the burden upon the Government, State, or Nation was but the normal incident of the organization within the same territory of two governments each possessing the taxing power, and only affected the Government in an indirect or incidental way. This reasoning is not applicable to State bonds, for both the proponents and the opponents of the proposal admit that to subject the income from State bonds to a Federal income tax would impose a direct burden upon the State or municipality which is susceptible of measurement and ascertainment.

It is a fact that the tax on a State or a municipal bond is passed back to the issuer. For example, if an individual is willing to lend a municipality money at 4 percent and the Government puts a tax of one-half of 1 percent on the bond, the individual would demand a rate of interest of 4½ percent, so he could get a net profit of 4 percent. In the case of a salary, the burden of a tax thereon, if passed back to the State, would only burden the State in an indirect or incidental way, which the Constitution would presuppose as a normal incident of government.

(2) The sixteenth amendment

1. The language of the sixteenth amendment taxing income from whatever source derived, without apportionment, would not authorize the Congress to tax income from State or local securities.

2. The sixteenth amendment did not confer any new power of taxation but merely provided that Congress could tax incomes, a right which it had before the sixteenth amendment, without regard to the rule of apportionment.

3. The sixteenth amendment was adopted to overcome the decision in the Pollock cases that a tax on income from real or personal property was a direct tax and subject to the rule of apportionment and not to authorize the taxation of items of income which were not taxable before the adoption of the sixteenth amendment. That this is the correct construction of the sixteenth amendment is shown by the decisions of the Court in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (240 U. S. 1); Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co. (240 U. S. 103); Tyee Realty Co. v. Anderson (240 U. S. 115); and Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245) (modified on another point in O'Malley against Woodrough, decided May 22, 1939). The same point was expressed by the Court in Peck & Co. v. Lowe (347 U. S. 165); and Eisner v. Macomber (252 U. S. 189); and in Metcalf & Eddy v. Mitchell (269 U. S. 514); also Willcuts v. Bunn (282 U. S. 216). Mr. Justice Stone, in writing the majority opinion, referred with approval to the case holding that the sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing power to any new class of subjects. While some of these opinions may be regarded as dicta on this point, the proponents of the proposal have been unable to present a single case showing that the Court would favor their construction that the sixteenth amendment is a grant of power and of itself permits the taxation of the income from State and local securities. If the Court were to adopt this theory of the proponents, it can seriously be contended that Congress would be unable to classify income, for if the source of income was disregarded for all purposes, capital gains could not be taxed at one rate, earned income at another rate, and dividend income at another rate. This would cast serious doubt on the validity of many of our income-tax laws which have already been upheld by the Supreme Court.

4. The legislative history of the sixteenth amendment does not justify the construction put upon it by the proponents of the measure. It is clear from the statements of Senators Bailey, Brown, Borah, and Aldrich as well as that of Senator Root that there was no intention to include State-bond interest by the use of the words "from whatever source derived." Much reliance is placed upon the message of Governor Hughes stating that it was possible to interpret the amendment to embrace the income from State securities. But that interpretation was answered in the Senate by Senators Root and Borah and Governor Hughes has not adhered to that view in decisions rendered by the Supreme Court after he became a Justice of that Court. The point has been ably summed up by Mr. William Anderson in an article on tax-exempt securities in the Minneapolis Law Review for March 1934, as follows:

"Can it be assumed that Congress, without discussion of the question, by the clumsy use of four words in the middle of an amendment, intends to introduce a change of so tremendous significance? New and fundamental powers are not usually conferred by a single phrase found in a provision having a different purpose. If the broad construction would be applied to the amendment, it might be even construed broad enough to tax the incomes or revenues of the State or municipal government themselves. Furthermore, this broad construction, if taken literally, would authorize the impairment of the obligations of contracts.

"It is entirely improper to take out a single provision of the Constitution and construe it without reference to other parts of the document. It is equally unjustifiable to take the bare words and construe them with an uncompromising literality. When the letter is the law, the people become victims of unskilled draftsmen and the careless copyist. The official or strict construction of the Constitution is preferable, first, because it considers the Constitution as a whole; second, it is not misled into disregarding the form of the amendment for its substance; and third, it does not open the door to such results as impairment of obligations of contracts, it preserves the fundamental rule that the Federal Government may not tax the governmental instrumentalities of the State."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN].

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O thou Christ, the Saviour of men, come and walk with us in our human ways, filling each life with new meaning that we may understand that Thou art the genius and the inspiration of the highest good. Unto Thee we pray that every soul may confess that the enchanted pursuit of life is love, strong and deep; Christ-like love that is eternal. O, let it urge and surge in our breasts, pushing us far beyond the reach of things earthly and temporary. We rejoice in the mighty faith and chivalry of those who are giving their all in defense of their land and homes from the ruthless weapons of the self-appointed gods of death. We beseech Thee that every sun down and every sun dawn may bring the world nearer to a rebirth of freedom. Almighty God, contend with the foe; be the ally of justice, of brotherhood and humanity and let the dragon be cast out forever. Today let us pass quietly and clearly into a loyal service. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10361. An act to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WAGNER, Mr. GLASS, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that Mr. GURNEY be appointed as an additional conferee on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training."

ANNOUNCEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to make a statement at this time.

The other day, in reply to a question by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], the Chair stated that 24 hours notice would be given before the conference report on the selective service bill would come up for consideration by the House. The Chair desires to give notice now that in all probability the conference report will be brought up for consideration the first thing tomorrow morning.

AMENDMENT TO MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 9581, to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title V of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 511. (a) When used in this section the term 'new vessel' means any vessel (1) documented or to be documented under the laws of the United States; (2) constructed in the United States after December 31, 1939, or one the construction of which has been financed under titles V, VII, or XI of this act, as amended; and (3) of such type, size, and speed as the Commission shall determine to be suitable for use on the high seas or Great Lakes in carrying out the purposes of this act, but of not less than 2,000 gross tons or of less speed than 12 knots, unless the Commission shall determine and certify in each case that a vessel of a specified lesser tonnage or speed is desirable for use by the United States in case of war or national emergency.

"(b) For the purposes of promoting the construction of vessels necessary for carrying out the policy set forth in title I of this act and complying with the provisions of this section in respect of tax adjustments on gains and earnings used for new construction, any citizen of the United States who is operating a vessel or vessels in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States may establish a construction reserve fund to be composed of deposits of proceeds from sales of vessels, receipts, or indemnities on account of losses of vessels, and earnings from the operation of vessels, set aside for the construction or acquisition of new vessels. Such construction reserve fund shall be established, maintained, expended, and used by the operator in accordance with the provisions of this section and rules or regulations to be prescribed by the Commission, pursuant to this section, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(c) In the case of a sale or the loss of a vessel, no gain shall be recognized to the owner for the purpose of Federal income taxes, in respect of the proceeds of such sale or indemnities received on account of such loss which are deposited, pursuant to this subsection, by the owner in a construction reserve fund established under subsection (b). The basis upon the sale or exchange and for depreciation under the applicable Federal income-tax laws of any new vessel acquired with the aid of such construction reserve fund shall be reduced by the amount of the gain not recognized in respect of the amount of the deposits in the fund employed in the acquisition of the new vessel.

"(d) Earnings of the owner from vessel operations (and proceeds from the disposition of vessels if the owner shall elect to deposit such proceeds in the fund pursuant to this subsection) if deposited in the construction reserve fund shall be excluded from gross income for the purpose of all Federal taxes except normal income taxes, and shall be exempt from such taxes (except normal income taxes).

"(e) Sums deposited in any construction reserve fund shall be subject to the provisions of subsections (c) and (d) of this section only to the extent that such sums so deposited are expended or obligated for financing new construction or acquisition of new vessels within a period of 6 years from the date such sum was deposited, and any such deposit, to the extent it includes income otherwise taxable, not so expended or obligated before the expiration of such period of 6 years shall be taxable as of the taxable year in which such income accrued.

"(f) This section shall be applicable in respect of proceeds of sales or losses occurring after the beginning of the taxable year of the owner commencing after December 31, 1939, and to earnings derived after the beginning of the taxable year of the owner commencing after December 31, 1939."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That title V of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"'SEC. 511. (a) When used in this section the term "new vessel" means any vessel (1) documented or agreed with the Commission to be documented under the laws of the United States; (2) constructed in the United States after December 31, 1939, or the construction of which has been financed under title V or VII of this act, as amended, or the construction of which has been aided by a mortgage insured under title XI of this act as amended; and (3) either (A) of such type, size, and speed as the Commission shall determine to be suitable for use on the high seas or Great Lakes in carrying out the purposes of this act, but not of less than 2,000 gross tons or of less speed than 12 knots, unless the Commission shall determine and certify in each case that a vessel of a specified lesser tonnage or speed is desirable for use by the United States in case of war or national emergency, or (B) constructed to replace a vessel or vessels requisitioned or purchased by the United States.

"'(b) For the purposes of promoting the construction of vessels necessary to carrying out the policy set forth in title I of this act, any citizen of the United States who is operating a vessel or vessels in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States or in the fisheries or owns a vessel or vessels being so operated, or who, at the time of purchase or requisition of the vessel by the Government, was operating a vessel or vessels so engaged or owned a vessel or vessels being so operated, may establish a construction reserve fund, for the construction or acquisition of new vessels, to be composed of deposits of proceeds from sales of vessels, indemnities on account of losses of vessels, earnings from the operation of vessels, and receipts, in the form of interest or otherwise, with respect to amounts previously deposited. Such construction reserve fund shall be established, maintained, expended, and used in accordance with the provisions of this section and rules or regulations to be prescribed jointly by the Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'(c) In the case of the sale or actual or constructive total loss of a vessel, if the taxpayer deposits an amount equal to the net proceeds of the sale or to the net indemnity with respect to the loss in a construction reserve fund established under subsection (b), then, if the taxpayer so elects in his income-tax return for the taxable year in which the gain was realized, no gain shall be recognized to the taxpayer in respect of such sale or indemnification in the computation of net income for the purposes of Federal income or excess-profits taxes. For the purposes of this subsection no amount shall be considered as deposited in a construction reserve fund unless it is deposited within 60 days after it is received by the taxpayer except that in the case of amounts received on or before the date of enactment of this section or within 60 days after such date, the deposit may be made within 120 days after the date of enactment of this section. As used in this subsection the term "net proceeds" and the term "net indemnity" mean the sum of (1) the adjusted basis of the vessel and (2) the amount of gain which would be recognized to the taxpayer without regard to this subsection.

"'(d) The basis for determining gain or loss and for depreciation, for the purpose of Federal income or excess-profits taxes, of any new vessel constructed or acquired by the taxpayer in whole or in part out of the construction reserve fund shall be reduced by that portion of the deposits in the fund expended in the construction or acquisition of the new vessel which represents gain not recognized under subsection (c).

"'(e) For the purposes of this section, (1) if the net proceeds of a sale or the net indemnity in respect of a loss are deposited in more than one deposit, the amount consisting of the gain shall be considered as first deposited; (2) amounts expended, obligated, or otherwise withdrawn shall be applied against the amounts deposited in the fund in the order of deposit; and (3) if any deposit consists in part of gain not recognized under subsection (c), any expenditure, obligation, or withdrawal applied against such deposit shall be considered to consist of gain in the proportion that the part of the deposit consisting of gain bears to the total amount of the deposit.

"'(f) With respect to any taxable year, amounts on deposit on the last day of such year in a construction reserve fund in accordance with this section and with respect to which all the requirements of subsection (g) have been satisfied, to the extent that such requirements are applicable as of the last day of said taxable year, shall not constitute an accumulation of earnings or profits within the meaning of section 102 of the Internal Revenue Code.

"'(g) The provisions of subsections (c) and (f) shall apply to any deposit in the construction reserve fund only to the extent that such deposit is expended or obligated for expenditure, in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed jointly by the Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury, under a contract for the construction or acquisition of a new vessel or vessels entered into within 2 years from the date of such deposit, and only if under such rules and regulations—

"'(1) within such period of 2 years not less than 12½ percent of the construction or contract price of the vessel or vessels is paid or irrevocably committed on account thereof and the plans and specifications therefor are approved by the Commission to the extent by it deemed necessary; and

"'(2) in case of a vessel or vessels not constructed under the provisions of this title or not purchased from the Commission, (A) said construction is completed, within 6 months from the date of the construction contract, to the extent of not less than 5 percent thereof (or in case the contract covers more than one vessel, the construction of the first vessel so contracted for is so completed to the extent of not less than 5 percent) as estimated by the Commission and certified by it to the Secretary of the Treasury, and (B) all construction under such contract is completed with reasonable dispatch thereafter.

"'(h) The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized under rules and regulations to be prescribed jointly by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commission to grant extensions of the period within which the deposits shall be expended or obligated or within which construction shall have progressed to the extent of 5 percent of completion as provided herein, but such extension shall not be for an aggregate additional period in excess of 2 years with respect to the expenditure or obligation of such deposits or more than 1 year with respect to the progress of such construction.

"'(i). Any such deposited gain or portion thereof which is not so expended or obligated within the period provided, or which is otherwise withdrawn before the expiration of such period, or with respect to which the construction has not progressed to the extent of 5 percent of completion within the period provided, or with respect to which the Commission finds and certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury that, for causes within the control of the taxpayer, the entire construction is not completed with reasonable dispatch, if otherwise taxable income under the law applicable to the taxable year in which such gain was realized, shall be included in the gross income for such taxable year, except for the purpose of the declared value excess-profits tax and the capital stock tax. If any such deposited gain or portion thereof is so included in gross income for such taxable year, there shall (in addition to any other deficiency) be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as if it were a deficiency, an amount equal to 1.1 percent of the amount of gain so included, such amount being in lieu of any adjustment with respect to the declared value excess-profits tax for such taxable year.

"'(j) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any deficiency in tax for any taxable year resulting from the inclusion of any amount in gross income as provided by subsection (i), and the amount to be treated as a deficiency under such subsection in lieu of any adjustment with respect to the declared value excess-profits tax, may be assessed or a proceeding in court for the collection thereof may be begun without assessment, at any time: Provided, however, That interest on any such deficiency or amount to be treated as a deficiency shall not begin until the date the deposited gain or portion thereof in question is required under subsection (i) to be included in gross income.

"'(k) This section shall be applicable to a taxpayer only in respect of sales or indemnifications for losses occurring within a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, and only in respect of earnings derived during a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939.

"'(l) For the purposes of this section a vessel shall be considered as constructed or acquired by the taxpayer if constructed or acquired by a corporation at a time when the taxpayer owns at least 95 percent of the total number of shares of each class of stock of the corporation.

"'(m) The terms used in this section shall have the same meaning as in chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code'."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to provide a construction reserve fund out of which ships may be built to serve intercoastal, coastwise, and foreign, but does not include subsidized ships. I may say that the amendment has been worked out with the Treasury Department, with the industry and with the Maritime Commission so as to involve no clash or controversy between any of those interests and they have all concurred in the amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman, as the ranking member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, is advised that this carries the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BLAND. It does.

Mr. MICHENER. And there was no objection to the bill by anybody on the committee?

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed at this time for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, labor under the New Deal has watched its hopes and aspirations turn into gall and wormwood. I use that expression in order to say, in reply to the President's address of last evening, that the "forgotten man" is still forgotten.

The average wage of workmen in 1929 was $1,450 a year; in 1936 it was $1,244 a year.

In 1930 we had 637 strikes; in 1931, 810 strikes; in 1932, 841 strikes; in 1933, 1,695 strikes; in 1934, 1,856 strikes; in 1935, 2,014 strikes; in 1937, 4,470 strikes; in 1938, 2,772 strikes; and up to September 1939, the last record we have, we had 2,725 strikes.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, when a man goes wrong, it is news, and too frequently his shame is headlined. But when one makes good, it is but the expected, and rarely is there comment except in the "local boy makes good" column of his home paper.

Even in times like these which try men's souls, it cannot be amiss to pin a posy upon the official record of one who has served with distinction in the Post Office Department of our Government.

William O. Ward, formerly of Anniston, Ala., is now a clerk in the post office of New York City. For the year ending June 30, 1940, his total rating is 99 out of a possible 100. The component elements of this total rating are diligence and quality of work, rapidity, knowledge, cooperation, personal appearance, and seniority. In addition to this almost perfect rating, his record shows no demerits and 190 merits.

The people of Alabama, particularly of the Fourth Congressional District, are proud of Will Ward's record in the largest post office in the United States.

It is altogether wholesome to cite such distinguished records as a challenge to emulation. Thus may the remarkably efficient service of an indispensable branch of our Government be bettered. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an excerpt from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations beginning at page 104 and continuing through page 108, also an article appearing in the Star of Tuesday, by Mr. David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, if you will look at title XXXIV, section 181, of the United States Code, you will find a provision that gives the Joint Committee on Printing control over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There has been considerable criticism, justifiable in my opinion, in reference to what has been inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during this Congress. There is a resolution, House Joint Resolution 203, pending before the Committee on Printing. I suggest to the members of that committee that as this is rather a matter for the Members of the House to decide, as it directly affects them, the committee report the resolution without a recommendation and let the House determine just exactly what kind of extraneous matter we should be allowed to put in the RECORD. It costs $45 for an ordinary page of the RECORD and approximately $60 for a reprint when it is in 6½-point type. The cost of the insertions in the RECORD during this session of Congress is such that you will not have any RECORD next January unless you make an additional appropriation for that purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago the House passed the bill H. R. 9581, to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. The primary purpose of this bill as introduced is to stimulate the construction of new vessels not authorized or subsidized under the Merchant Marine Act. It was my intention to offer an amendment to that bill which would provide that the Maritime Commission could subsidize the building of fishing vessels where the equity would not be more than 12½ percent of the cost. At the present time they will not subsidize the construction of fishing vessels where the equity is less than 25 percent of the cost.

The reason I did not offer the amendment is that it might not have been held germane to the bill, but I expect to have it offered in the Senate or in the form of a new bill in the House. The reason we expect to offer this bill is that the Navy Department has recently taken over more than 30 trawlers and draggers in the Boston and Gloucester fishery industry and intend, I understand, to take more for minesweeping purposes. This has taken away the jobs of the fishermen on the boats, as well as the jobs of the fishery workers who process the fish. This situation is resulting in a very distressing condition in the communities along the waterfronts. I thought I would call this matter to the attention of the Members of the House in order that the Members of the House should be informed as to the situation and my intention in the matter. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow at the conclusion of the special order heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein several editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS BILL

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 578 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 578

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 7236, a bill to provide for the adjustment of certain claims against the United States and to confer jurisdiction in respect thereto on the Court of Claims and the district courts of the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I shall yield later on, 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, even new Members, to say nothing of the older Members, recognize the amount of time that is spent in each Congress in considering bills on small claims that should be adjudicated by the departments. It has been my attitude for many years that the departments should have jurisdiction to act on such claims. In an effort to limit the proceedings the House adopted a rule about 6 years ago providing for an omnibus bill in which to include these claims, the same as we formerly employed with respect to pension bills; but even with that procedure, a good deal of time is taken up on these small bills. Consequently, the Judiciary Committee, upon the recommendation of the Department of Justice, has finally agreed upon and reported unanimously this bill that will eliminate the waste of a great deal of time by giving the departments the right to adjust all small claims up to $1,000. Up to $500 the adjustment is to be final, and on the larger claims or the so-called tort claims jurisdiction is given to the Court of Claims. I believe this is legislation in the right direction.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I think through inadvertence the gentleman omitted to say that jurisdiction is granted, not only to the Court of Claims, but to the district courts as well, without a jury.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to the fact that jurisdiction goes also to the district courts.

As I have said, I believe this is legislation in the right direction. Many unfortunate men have been deprived of the opportunity or the right to obtain redress from the Government. This is manifestly unfair and unjust and under this procedure I think such injustices will be done away with and justice will be forthcoming to the men who, through no fault of their own, have suffered injury or have a justifiable claim against the Government.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] states that this legislation may create litigation against the Government. I say to him that even if it will permit the filing of a few additional suits the cost to the Government will not be as great as having the 435 Members of Congress, or even a committee of the House, sit to hear the evidence in these cases when they can be heard by a judge of a district court or the Court of Claims.

I do not desire to take up the time of the House except to say that the rule is an open rule and provides for 1 hour of general debate. After that, the bill can be taken up under the 5-minute rule for further discussion.

I have the utmost confidence that the Judiciary Committee, that has had this bill before it for a long while, acting upon the recommendation of the Department of Justice, has eliminated certain provisions and in other ways strengthened the bill as originally introduced. I consider it a meritorious measure and one that deserves the unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Judiciary Committee. It was given careful consideration and hearings were held before a subcommittee of that committee. For my part I am for the bill, but I am not for it solely for the reasons given by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. I do not think it is going to accomplish as much as the gentleman thinks it will. The bill is not going to do away with all claims in the Congress. It does not take away the right to introduce bills for private claims, but it does give the right to start actions in the Federal courts on the claims enumerated. There will be places like New York and Baltimore and the seacoast towns where the work will undoubtedly be increased in the Federal courts. The claims will be adjusted in the courts rather than in Congress.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. This bill as I read it—and I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee as is the gentleman from Michigan, and therefore am not familiar with the committee's action on the bill and the gentleman from Michigan, perhaps, has a greater amount of knowledge than I have, but as I have read the bill I have come to the conclusion that in view of the fact it gives the departments the right to adjust any of these claims up to $500; that, in itself, will relieve the House of many of the small bills that have been before us from time to time and have taken up a great deal of the time of the House. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, under existing law, there is provision whereby claims up to a given amount may be adjusted by the departments. The real milk in the coconut, so far as this bill is concerned, is the right of the claimant to go into court and sue the Government, where such a right does not now obtain.

Mr. SABATH. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. The American Bar Association favors this legislation. I am a member of the bar and also a member of the American Bar Association and believe thoroughly in the association, but we must remember that the American Bar Association is composed of lawyers and that lawyers are prosecuting claims and that lawyers want to get the law into the position where they can most readily and practicably represent their clients.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I fully appreciate that this bill has been recommended by the bar association, and I wish to assure the gentleman that that was not the reason which causes me to vote for the bill, because I know too much of the activities of the bar association. However, I will say I do not think this will help the bar association, because the bar association is composed mostly of corporation lawyers having very rich clients. This aims to aid the small fellow, the little fellow who is injured and has a small claim. Big claims have been taken care of heretofore and are taken care of without this legislation in splendid shape. It is the little fellow I feel should be aided to obtain justice from the Government.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, I regret that the gentleman has not more knowledge about the American Bar Association. He is an attorney.

Mr. SABATH. And a member of the bar association.

Mr. MICHENER. And I assumed he was a member of the association. If he is, he is certainly entirely unfamiliar with the membership when he says the American Bar Association is made up of rich corporation lawyers. I have been a member for many years, and I would not be accused of being either rich or any great corporation lawyer.

Mr. SABATH. There are exceptions.

Mr. MICHENER. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, is an outstanding member of the American Bar Association, and I do not think his worst enemies would accuse him of being extremely rich, and surely not a corporation lawyer.

In short, the membership of the American Bar Association on the whole is made up of honest, conscientious, everyday lawyers, living throughout the length and breadth of the land. The greater membership comes from the rural districts—men who want good legislation in behalf of the American people, men who prize their membership in the legal profession, and who want to do the things that will make the legal profession stand out, as it always has and as it always should, as a real adjunct to the Government as far as good legislation is concerned.

The American Bar Association does not need any defense from anybody, because everybody who knows anything at all about it knows the type of institution that it is.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What the gentleman says about the American Bar Association is true, and I am sure the members of the bar that I have known come under the description of the rank and file of conscientious lawyers whom the gentleman has mentioned.

At the same time, a discussion of this law raises a question in my mind with reference to the law that it repeals. Existing law confers upon the heads of departments and establishments the power to settle certain claims up to $1,000, without requiring the claimants to go into court.

Mr. MICHENER. That is existing law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is existing law. I am wondering if this law, in repealing that section, makes some provision to take care of that class of small claims, or does it compel those claimants all to go into court?

Mr. MICHENER. No. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] will explain all these matters in detail. However, the gentleman's question raises the very point I had in mind in answering the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who seemed to feel that this would eliminate those claims from consideration in Congress. As a matter of fact, this bill will in no way prevent the filing of the usual claims in Congress. However, it will permit certain adjustments, and already, as suggested by the gentleman from South Dakota, claims up to $1,000 are subject to adjustment by the departments, and a large percentage of those little claims coming before the Congress are here because the departments have refused to adjust them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But it still leaves it possible for the department to settle those small claims without requiring the claimant to employ a lawyer and go into court.

Mr. MICHENER. That is my understanding. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] will cover that question thoroughly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I want to obtain some information. The gentleman is an experienced legislator. If this bill is enacted into law, will war claims be able to be brought into court, such as the Barlow bill?

Mr. MICHENER. No. That is a contractual claim. There is a difference between a tort and a contract. This is a tort claim bill entirely. There is a difference between an action in tort and an action founded in contract. The gentleman possibly does not appreciate the difference.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; I understand the difference. I have studied law.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, I did not know that, but if a man is driving an automobile through the street and is run into by a Government truck and is injured, that is a tort action. If a man has a contract with the Government and the Government does not fulfill the contract, that is an action in assumpsit or a contract action, and would not be affected by this law. The gentleman from Wisconsin is a diligent and capable Member, and I feel when he hears this bill explained he will be one of its most enthusiastic supporters.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. One further question. Why, in section 8, appearing on page 7, are disabled World War veterans denied an opportunity of going into court while this bill will permit war profiteers to go into court? I would like to obtain some information about that.

Mr. MICHENER. I will not attempt to answer because I do not concede the gentleman's premise, I do not think he is correct in his interpretation of the bill. That will be explained thoroughly by the author of the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], I am sure.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman knows that in veterans' cases—and I have a dozen or more in mind—where veterans receive medical treatment, through negligence on the part of the medical officer they sometimes receive serious injuries which are permanent. Under section 8 of the bill, page 7, these veterans will be denied the opportunity of going to court, while the ambulance chasers on other fomented tort claims, if you please, can bring their cases into court.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin has a misapprehension of the purpose of section 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Permit the Chair to state that it would appear to the Chair to be in the interest of expediting business if this bill were debated after the rule is adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but it is hardly within the province of the Chair to say how we shall consider a bill. The rules chart the route.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not inclined to take the gentleman from Michigan off his feet, but debate on the bill logically would come after the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MICHENER. I was about to suggest what the Chair has suggested, but I do not want to concede it after the suggestion of the Chair, because I do not want to establish a precedent of that kind. I believe that if we get into the Committee and the Members in charge of the bill are permitted to debate the bill we can arrive at probably better results and do it quicker. I therefore reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman use the balance of his time?

Mr. MICHENER. I have no more requests for time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TORT CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7236) to provide for the adjustment of certain claims against the United States and to confer jurisdiction in respect thereto on the Court of Claims and the district courts of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7236) to provide for the adjustment of certain claims against the United States and to confer jurisdiction in respect thereto on the Court of Claims and the district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, with Mr. PACE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from New York is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I notice that section 204 of the bill provides that awards shall be made to the widow or widower to the exclusion of minor children. I can conceive of cases in which there might be a stepmother or stepfather where the minor children might be out on a limb and the limb sawed off. I am wondering what the gentleman thinks about that section.

Mr. CELLER. We took the exact verbiage of the Workmen's Compensation Acts.

Mr. TABER. That may be, but I am wondering what the gentleman thinks about that situation.

Mr. CELLER. The Workmen's Compensation Acts have been working rather well. The representative of the Attorney General, Mr. Alex Holtzoff, appearing before the committee made the suggestion that we adopt the general language of those acts, and it met with wholehearted approval on the part of members of the Judiciary Committee. For that reason we felt that rather than take a departure from the well-settled practice which obtains not only in the Federal Government but in most of the States we would continue existing practice. We therefore adopted identical language.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it well at the outset to read a communication sent to the chairman of our committee by Attorney General Jackson. He wrote as follows:

The subject of tort claims against the Government has long been a troublesome and vexatious matter. The present law under which the Government may not be sued in tort, and such claims can receive recognition only as a matter of grace by private acts of Congress, appears to be not only cumbersome but unfair to those persons who have meritorious claims. The United States has subjected itself to suits on contracts; to suits on admiralty and maritime torts; to suits for patent infringement; and in respect to certain other specified matters. The continued immunity of the Government to suit on common law torts does not seem to be warranted either as a matter of principle or as a matter of justice.

The above-mentioned bill represents an attempt to meet this problem and to permit the Government to be sued in respect to certain torts subject to specified safeguards. It was drafted by representatives of the Department of Justice in collaboration with representatives of other governmental agencies.

The legislation is worthy of consideration at the hands of the Congress.

I could not well improve upon the language of the Attorney General. The Government has been reaching out in all directions. It has its emissaries everywhere, its vehicles and instrumentalities are found in every nook and cranny of the Nation. If the Government is guilty of a tort through its many agencies, there is no reason why, like any citizen of the country, it should not be compelled to respond in property damages. When the Nation was young and governmental activities few, perhaps this bill would not be necessary.

There is an old adage: "The king can do no wrong," meaning also the sovereignty or government can do no wrong, but we know that the sovereignty or government can do wrong. This principle that the sovereign can do no wrong has been discarded in most of the nations of the world but ours. The idea that the Government could do no wrong gave rise originally to the theory of the immunity of the Government from suits in tort, but, as I say, almost all the nations of the earth but ours have discarded that immunity and a person injured, for example, by a mail truck, may sue the Government for damages; but in this country that person may not sue his Government for damages. This, to my mind, seems grievously wrong.

This bill, in almost identic language, passed both Houses in the Seventieth Congress. The then President, Mr. Coolidge, pocket-vetoed the bill because it had a certain clause therein which placed the Comptroller General in charge of all appeals to the Court of Claims from his own decisions. That clause never should have been in the bill. Otherwise the bill we have before us would long since have become the law. Attorneys General for decades have been recommending to Congress the passage of this bill.

I do not agree with my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] that there will be no diminution of the number of private claims bills that will be brought into this House or placed before the Claims Committee. I believe they will be materially reduced. The average number of private claims brought into the House during the last two Congresses has been around 2,300 per Congress and involve over $100,000,000 each Congress. In the Seventieth Congress, for example, in the House of Representatives 1,364 claim bills were presented; in the Senate, 904; all involving $106,685,748.67. Three hundred and thirty-six of these bills were enacted, 230 House bills and 106 Senate bills.

You can appreciate the immensity of the work involved in passing upon 2,300 claims, or thereabouts, which come to every Congress. It is utterly impossible for any of us to know all the details and important factors of each and every one of those bills; yet it is our duty to know those factors and to know all about those bills so that we can pass upon them intelligently, but we cannot under the circumstances carry on properly. We cannot do our duty in that regard. It is for these reasons that this bill has been offered to this Congress; and it has been offered, I may say, in many previous Congresses.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I take it this bill carries a unanimous report from the great Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. CELLER. There has been no objection, as far as I know, in the committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It seems to me that there is a great departure here from the usual procedure. Am I right in that? It kind of shocks me to think that every claim involving less than $500 is going to be adjudicated by the head of some bureau and that that must be final, nobody has any recourse from that decision; then the next step is, if the claim is between $500 and $1,000, it goes to the Attorney General. Let me see if I am right when I say I am shocked about this. You go back to a county; a county commissioner or county prosecuting attorney would have no such authority as this. The attorney general of a State would have no such authority. What is the philosophy or what is the fundamental reason for such a thing as this? It is a radically new practice to give this authority to the Attorney General or anybody else to decide finally any kind of a case against the Government involving less than $1,000.

Mr. CELLER. With all due respect to the gentleman's observation, he loses sight of the fact that at the present time all heads of bureaus and departments may make certain adjustments of claims for contract or property damage. All we do by the bill is to provide the same procedure for cases involving personal injuries. They can make an adjustment on any contract or on any property damage up to $1,000 at the present time, and I refer to the heads of bureaus and departments. Now we simply increase that jurisdiction to include personal injuries. Then we provide the safeguard that they cannot in any event, whether it be property or personal injuries, make the adjustment unless and until they have secured the approval of the Attorney General, where the amount is above $500, up to $1,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There is a difference between settlement on a contract and another action, because the contract itself is the basis. That is fixed. The contract either establishes liability or lack of liability. The question of computing the loss is largely just a matter of arithmetic. But here is a case where a man comes in and tells the Government, "You have invaded my rights. You have committed a tort against me and I want my right to a decision lodged in a court." The Constitution provides that a man must have the right of trial by jury. This takes that away from him.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is in error. This covers not only cases involving contracts, it covers property damage regardless of origin, whether it may arise from written contracts, oral undertakings, or just in the course of ordinary events of Government activity. It covers any property damage up to $1,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How does this differ from what the rule is now?

Mr. CELLER. We extend the right to include personal injuries.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. I suggest, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, that the authority given to the heads of departments and the Attorney General is not to try and decide cases, but to settle them. Of course, the settlement is binding then on the Government, but the citizen still has his right to sue in the courts.

Mr. CELLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is a very important observation. Are we to understand then that this law does not take away the right of an individual to go to court?

Mr. CELLER. No.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does it assume to do that any place in the bill?

Mr. CELLER. No. We confer upon him the right to go to court in these personal injuries. We confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court without a jury, and also concurrent jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to try these cases, but we set a limit of $7,500 on personal-injury claims. It is rather anomalous that there is no limitation in the present law on suits that may be brought in admiralty against the Government. There is no limitation on suits that may grow out of maritime torts. One private boat may collide with a Government boat or vice versa and the private individual can bring suit in the maritime jurisdiction for any amount. There are no limitations on the amount that the Government may be sued for with reference to patent infringements. Now, we should make a start and give those who suffer personal injury by virtue of the tort of the Government the right to bring an action for at least $7,500.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I was basing my observation on the theory that the citizen had no right to sue the Government at all. They did not have that right because of sovereignty for so long until we passed a law establishing the Court of Claims. Now he has a right to go into the Court of Claims. If he still has that right, I think probably this is a pretty good bill.

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman.

I just want to make this one further observation, that there are many exceptions in the bill. For example, by section 303 of the bill suits cannot be brought for assault, battery, false arrest, tort growing out of the Canal Zone operation, or claims growing out of taxation matters, customs matters, or involving the Trading with the Enemy Act. No suit can be brought for libel, slander, malicious prosecution, or abuse of process, and no suit can be brought growing out of the activities of the Coast Guard, the Securities Exchange Commission, or the Federal Trade Commission or for fiscal operations of the Treasury, and so forth.

Furthermore, there is a statute of limitations of 1 year.

Also, I may say that many States allow a person to sue the State Government in court. Among them are New York, California, Illinois, and Arizona. Lastly, all bar associations have approved the bill, including those from Arkansas, California, Colorado, District of Columbia, Connecticut, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Nebraska, New York, Nevada, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and West Virginia, as well as the American Bar Association.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. As a member of the Committee on Claims during the last 4 years, I appreciate the almost imperative necessity of legislation of this sort. The only thing is that we should have passed it years ago. There is one point, however, that I should like the gentleman to clarify a little. In section 303 the first exception is:

> Any claim arising out of the loss of, miscarriage, or negligent transmission of letters or postal matter.

It seems to me that this exemption might embrace a situation where a mail truck would cause damage to some individual or to his property, because the negligent transmission of the postal matter might occur while it was being transported by a mail truck.

Mr. CELLER. We did consider that point, but the members of the committee, upon the suggestion of representatives of the Post Office Department and the Attorney General's Office, thought we should go a little slowly on the situation. For that reason that clause was inserted. It was inserted primarily because of the insistent suggestion of the Post Office Department. I do not believe that if somebody is run down by a mail truck, for example, due to the negligence of the driver, that section would preclude any action against the Government.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am glad to have the gentleman's explanation of that, because I do not see any reason for making that exception.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I believe the bill is a good one. However, I should like to get the gentleman's interpretation of just what limitation is placed in the bill on the nature of the actions that may be determined. For instance, I call the attention of the gentleman to line 4 on page 2, beginning with the words—

> Caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any officer or employee of the United States, including any member of the military and naval forces, while acting within the scope of his office or employment.

What I am trying to get at is, Does this bill limit the nature of the claims to the acts specified in that clause?

Mr. CELLER. No. In the first place, this section, section 1, involves the settlement of claims, not actions brought.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, is there any limitation in this bill as to the nature of the claims that may be passed upon by the departmental heads as outlined in the bill?

Mr. CELLER. Yes; if the gentleman will look at section 303, on page 6, and the pages following, he will find this language:

> The provisions of this act shall not apply to—

And then we enumerate the types of claims that cannot be brought or settled under this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Other than that, the bars are down?

Mr. CELLER. Absolutely.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I believe the gentleman has a good bill.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I notice that this bill purports to deal with tort actions. At the present time, under existing law, the departmental heads have the right to settle all property damage arising out of the tortious acts of an agent or employee up to $1,000, while the man injured in the same accident is relegated to filing a claim because the Government cannot be sued in court. Do you extend the same right to the person who has received personal injuries?

Mr. CELLER. To $7,500; yes.

Mr. KEEFE. I notice in this bill there is a distinct provision that contributory negligence shall be a bar to recovery.

Mr. CELLER. That follows the common-law principle.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand that, but I am wondering if the gentleman's committee considered in its study of this bill the more advanced ideas on the subject of comparative negligence—a principle that has been adopted in many States.

Mr. CELLER. As I said before, I believe we ought to go a little slowly on legislation of this character. It might be ill-advised to make such a departure with regard to the rules of evidence. I do believe there is a great deal to what the gentleman says, but I believe we should try out the common-law idea of contributory negligence as barring an action.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is familiar with the law of comparative negligence, which is in effect in numerous States?

Mr. CELLER. Yes; I am.

Mr. KEEFE. If this situation remains in the law, the slightest amount of negligence on the part of an individual who may receive personal injuries is a bar on a finding of contributory negligence, whereas the Government employee may be guilty of all sorts of negligence. Have you considered the inclusion of a comparative negligence proposal in this bill, or was it considered by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. CELLER. It was not specifically spoken of by any witness, but I did discuss the matter with representatives of the Department of Justice. They felt that there should be no departure from the ordinary common rule concerning contributory negligence. Many States have the common-law rules as to contributory negligence as in this bill; in fact, most States have. A few States have the rule of comparative negligence. It would be unfair to the majority of the States, where the common-law rule of contributory negligence prevails, to force them to accept your suggested amendment, the rule of comparative negligence. In a way, you would dragoon those States.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. I understood from conversation with the gentleman while this bill was under consideration that death benefits were to be distributed among the dependents in accordance with the laws of the States where the decedents lived at the time of the accident. Section 204 states specifically how death benefits shall be distributed. Would it not be better to leave it to the laws of the State where the decedent lived?

Mr. CELLER. No; we thought we would follow the language of the Workmen's Compensation Act. That was agreed upon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I say to the gentleman that I believe the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has raised a very vital point. If the gentleman will study the Federal Employees' Liability Act he will find that the Congress there wrote into the law that assumption of risk and contributory negligence were not defenses but could be used in mitigation of damages. It seems to me that it might be well to put that same rule into this bill.

Mr. CELLER. It may be; but I do hope we will not make that rather radical departure. We should wait a bit. Let us experiment with this type of legislation first and then we can probably make these changes, and I shall be very glad to keep that in mind for future consideration.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman should do that, because I think it should be written into the law. I wish to ask another question on another point.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 more minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Paragraph 9, on page 7, it seems to me ought to be stricken out. Suppose an officer goes into one of the parks or goes on an Indian reservation and gets into trouble there with an Indian or somebody else and beats him up and assaults him, why should not an action of that kind be determined by a court or be determined in the manner provided rather than requiring a special act here in Congress?

Mr. CELLER. We considered those possibilities that the gentleman has mentioned, and we were afraid that there would be terrifically exaggerated claims brought if we took away those exemptions, and that is why we included the phrase as you have it there. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I trust this bill will be adopted. There are some things about it I do not entirely like, yet I think it is a great step forward.

You know the Constitution prohibits suits against the Government without the consent of the Government. The Government, from time to time, has consented to suits being brought against it. We set up, for example, the Court of Claims, allowing suits under statutes or on contracts to be brought in that court against the Government. From time to time in the Congress we have given authority to individual claimants in tort to bring action against the Government.

The purpose of this bill is twofold: First, it allows the heads of departments to settle certain cases; and, second, it allows a claimant who has a claim based on tort to bring an action against the Government in the district court or in the Court of Claims.

Something has been said here about the right of these departments to settle their cases. We have various statutes that are different with respect to almost every department, giving the departments the right to settle claims for torts which cause damage to personal property, in some cases up to $500, and in one case, I believe, up to $1,000. I believe, however, no department under existing law has the right to settle any claim based upon tort, which gives rise to personal injury. The provision in this bill simply allows the department head to settle any case, whether based on damages for injury to property or person, up to $500, and, with the consent of the Attorney General, up to $1,000. It is not binding, of course, upon the claimant. The claimant may accept the settlement or may bring the suit in his own district court up to the amount of $7,500.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. I wonder if we are not taking away from the rights of the claimant under this bill.

Mr. GWYNNE. In what respect?

Mr. CARLSON. Under existing law the claimant has the right to settle a claim up to $500 or $1,000, in certain cases.

Mr. GWYNNE. He has under this bill also.

Mr. CARLSON. He does, but under existing law if he is not satisfied with that settlement he can have a bill introduced in Congress and presented to the Claims Committee, while under this measure his case is finally settled.

Mr. GWYNNE. No; he can try to settle his case, and all we do in this bill is to give the Department head authority to settle a claim based on personal injury. If he cannot arrive at a settlement, the claimant then may bring the suit in the court, which he could not do before, or he can file his claim in the Congress.

Mr. CARLSON. Line 8, on page 2, reads, "If the amount of the award does not exceed $500, such determination shall be final and conclusive on all officers of the Government, notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary."

Mr. GWYNNE. That is on the officer of the Government.

Mr. CARLSON. That is true, but, as I read this, it is subject to review by the Attorney General and then in the case of a claimant for property damage, not personal injury, he is then through and cannot go any further.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is not my understanding.

Mr. CARLSON. I hope I am wrong on that, because I think it would be unfortunate if it were true.

Mr. GWYNNE. It simply authorizes the heads of departments and the Attorney General to settle these cases if they can do so, and if they cannot, suit may then be brought.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I notice these settlements up to $500 shall be final and conclusive on all officers of the Government, but if the amount of the award exceeds the sum of $500, the award shall be submitted by the head of the department or independent establishment making the same to the Attorney General for review, and section 203 provides that the Attorney General "is hereby authorized to arbitrate, compromise, or settle any claim under this title, either before or after the institution of any suit thereon." It occurs to me then that we are saying that the Attorney General can have the final say as to the settlement of claims from $1,000 up to $7,500 without review by anyone.

Mr. GWYNNE. No. On the contrary, the answer to that is this: In that section we give the Attorney General authority to settle claims or to settle a case after it gets into court.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Section 2 simply applies to title II. That is where suits are brought. It does not apply to title I.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wish to point out that while the Attorney General's original power of settlement applies simply to section 2, that is the exact reason I am raising the question. In applying to section 2 it would authorize the Attorney General to compromise the settlement of claims up to $7,500. Now, if it is a sound principle that the settlement by the head of a department is subject to review by the Attorney General, it seems to me it is sound principle that a compromise settlement by the Attorney General should itself be subject to review by the district court. I have in mind that a recommendation for a settlement by the Attorney General will generally follow the recommendation of the district attorney or the deputy district attorney. The other day during the consideration of the District of Columbia bill I raised this precise question with relation to some phases of that bill and the House accepted an amendment to provide that settlements recommended by officials in the District of Columbia would be subject to judicial review. It seems to me that here again we should follow that principle. I wonder what the gentleman would think of an amendment to provide that such compromise settlement proposed by the Attorney General would be subject to review and approval by a district court.

Mr. GWYNNE. I would not be in favor of that. For example, every railroad and every large corporation employs attorneys and claim agents. They give them certain authority and instructions to go out and settle cases for the railroad. No railroad ever said that "whatever settlement you make in my behalf as your employer has to be O. K.'d by a court." That is what we would be doing by your amendment.

Now, something has been said about exceptions. If you will look through these exceptions—and they should be carefully examined—you will find there are two classes of torts that are taken out from the operation of this bill. First, there is that class of tort on the part of the Government which has to do with a governmental function, so to speak. For example, the first one, any claim arising out of loss, and so forth, in the Postal Service. We have not given any right to sue the Government in that type of cases. We have followed the principle that has been adopted by the States and various municipalities in this respect.

The next type of exception is represented by paragraph 8. We have given the veterans and we have given the employees of the Federal Government a tribunal where they may come in and try their cases. Therefore they are exempt from the operation of this act. Let me call your attention to what I think is an unfortunate provision in this bill. However, I intend to support it. That is section 204. We debated in committee upon what theory damages should be awarded in the case of a death claim. Finally we took the law from the Federal Employees Compensation Act. My hope was that we would have required suits in those cases to be brought by the executor, and the distribution of the damages to be made in accordance with the laws of inheritance of the particular State that had jurisdiction over it.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. I just wanted to make a statement in answer to the gentleman's observation, that the Attorney General should not have final right to adjust claims under title II. If you put a provision in the act with reference to what he said, you would have rather a confusing situation. For example, the Attorney General could settle patent litigation before or after suit is brought, without reference to a court. He can settle an admiralty case. He can settle a maritime claim. He can settle a suit on contract. Yet we have a provision that he could not settle on cases arising under this act.

Mr. GWYNNE. That is true. There is nothing in this law that takes away the right of any individual that I know of. In fact, it greatly extends the right of people to protect their rights against the Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. KING. In section 201 I am concerned with the definition of the Court of Claims and the district court. May that be interpreted to include the United States District Court for Hawaii? You will recall when the rules of procedure were adopted for the United States district courts the Supreme Court held it did not include the United States District Court for Hawaii, and we had to amend the original act to bring them under that law by specific legislation. Has the gentleman thought whether the term "district courts" would apply to the United States District Court for Hawaii?

Mr. GWYNNE. It had not occurred to me. I am not sure that the language includes it. I think before we conclude this bill that question should be determined.

Mr. KING. Of course, the purpose would be to include it, because it exercises solely Federal jurisdiction, and claimants who could not go to the Federal court in Honolulu would be put to the expense of filing their claims on the mainland some distance away.

Mr. GWYNNE. I do not know how the committee would feel, but it would be my judgment that if the language does not include Hawaii, an amendment should be offered.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I wish the gentleman would look at section 201 for a moment. As I understand it, no one would have had a right to present a tort claim against the Government before the time we established the Court of Claims?

Mr. GWYNNE. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No one would have had any court to go to in a tort case against the Government before we established the Court of Claims?

Mr. GWYNNE. Even the Court of Claims is limited to suits on contract or under statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the pending legislation is intended to relieve, and will very materially relieve, the work of the Claims Committee.

Under the provisions of this bill there is extended to department heads the right to make settlements and adjustments of small claims not exceeding $500 without any interference. Claims above $500, and up to $1,000, department heads have the right to make settlements, provided they are approved by the Attorney General. Above the amount of $1,000 the person has the right to file suit in court and contest the matter before the Court of Claims or the district court. The court, in those cases, hears and determines the matter and renders judgment thereon, the same as in all other causes of action which are presented in the lower and inferior courts in the various States.

One of the outstanding objectives of this legislation that appeals to me is the fact that in matters presented before the Claims Committee, which have to do with tort actions, the question of negligence or contributory negligence is very seldom seriously considered before the committee. This bill places claims of that character either for damages to person or property before the courts where the question of negligence and contributory negligence is determined from a legal standpoint.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I must take exception to the gentleman's statement that the Committee on Claims does not take into consideration questions of negligence and contributory negligence, because in every case considered by this committee, especially a claim growing out of a tort action, the committee always gives serious consideration to every aspect of negligence on both sides, the side of the Government and the side of the claimant; and if the gentleman will read the reports of the Claims Committee he will see that the question of negligence is always covered in the reports of this committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thank the gentleman for his statement and his contribution. I have, however, read reports prepared by this committee in many instances. I have also been interested in claims individually before the Claims Committee. The gentleman has seen, as I have seen, cases come before the House where we know the question of negligence or contributory negligence has not been given the consideration that would have been given in a court.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Am I right in intepreting section 201 as giving to the person who has a tort claim less than $7,500 in amount the right to go into the Court of Claims?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is my definite understanding of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the gentleman believes that by reason of this fact Congress will be relieved of a great many small claims that come before the Claims Committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is entirely right. Those matters will be considered by the court where all of those questions will be duly, fairly, and legally considered, and from the very standpoint which they should be considered.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In this connection I wonder if it is worth while to explore this thought: Will these people have any difficulty in getting their cases into the Court of Claims? Will we have to pass other laws to give them the right to get into the Court of Claims?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think that under the terms of this bill all of the parties would have the right to get into the Court of Claims. Under title III, section 301, he has the right to present his claim and the departments have the right to consider the matter for the period of 1 year. If no settlement is made, the statute of limitations is extended for a period of 6 months after that time, which then gives him the right to file his action in court and get his matter duly and properly presented within time without the statute of limitations running against him.

There are some matters in this bill with which I do not exactly agree, but I think, on the whole, the bill is a step in the right direction and that it should have the support of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. Section 201 of the bill provides that the United States shall be liable to the same extent and in the same manner as a private individual in like circumstances. In view of this why did the committee deem it proper to deny to a claimant when he came into district court the right to a jury trial?

Mr. SPRINGER. Provision is made in section 201, that those cases in which the claim does not exceed the sum of $7,500 may be heard by the court without a jury. Cases involving a sum larger than that amount, of course, must be submitted to a jury, if presented before the court, unless by agreement of the parties it is submitted to the court for trial and determination. It gives the persons the right to a trial by a court of competent jurisdiction where the parties themselves agree to have the case heard and determined by the court. All cases up to $7,500 will be heard and determined by the court unless the parties to the cause of action demand a jury hearing, which could be granted, as in other actions, if the court saw fit to extend that privilege. There is no bar to the court granting that hearing before a jury, if the court saw fit to call a jury.

Mr. GEARHART. As I understand section 201, it confers jurisdiction up to $7,500 for trials without a jury.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true, it gives that right; but if the parties demand a jury trial then a jury trial will be given the same as in any other case in law.

There are some matters in this legislation, as I stated before, with which I do not exactly agree; however, in the main the legislation will be helpful. It will relieve the Claims Committee from hearing small claims; it will give those who have claims against the Government the opportunity of filing and presenting their cases in court and having them determined judicially and in a legal manner. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure there is not a Member of this body who has not been impressed during his service with the fact that the matter of the handling of claims of private individuals against the Government is a rather archaic process. None of us I am sure is free from appeal by our constituents to introduce bills for their particular benefit in connection with personal injury claims which arise against the Government more increasingly in recent years because of the widespread activities of the Government. There is hardly a Member of this body I am sure who has not introduced some piece of legislation for the benefit of an injured person in his particular district. This bill is an attempt to take a forward step to meet that situation, and I believe that the interest which has been manifested so widely on the part of the membership today indicates there is quite strong agreement that the bill meets the situation it is intended to meet.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. Section 202 provides that the Attorney General or the appropriate United States attorney may take the deposition of a witness on behalf of the United States. I am wondering why the committee withheld the same right from the claimant? Does that not constitute a rank discrimination and inequality?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The right granted the Attorney General, the committee felt, is consistent with the general policy of the bill. The committee does not feel that the claimant is seriously prejudiced by this provision. I may say to the gentleman that this is what might be called remedial legislation. It is in effect or in a sense pioneer legislation inasmuch as it enters upon a field which has not been entered upon prior to this time. Up to the present time, as the gentleman is well aware, general tort claims of the sort involved herein were not permitted to be asserted in courts by private individuals. This grants to private individuals who feel aggrieved because of a claim of personal injury of the sort involved herein, the right to go into the Court of Claims or into the district court in those cases in which the amount involved does not exceed $7,500, and makes provision for the settlement of claims in amount not to exceed $5.00 or a thousand dollars, respectively, by the department heads in the first instance without resort to the Attorney General, and in the second instance by the department heads with the approval of the Attorney General.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. In reference to the question propounded by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] the very last sentence of section 202 reads: "Any deposition may be taken by either party." So that the attorney for the claimant may take a deposition just as the Attorney General can on behalf of the Government.

Mr. GEARHART. The only authority to take any kind of deposition is given the Attorney General himself. In no place in this act is the right to take a deposition given the claimant; therefore, that last line does not mean a thing. He can only use a deposition if it brings forth the testimony available to his cause if that deposition was authorized in the first instance by the Attorney General.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand it, at the present time generally a person is precluded from bringing an action against the United States Government except on authorization by Congress, which also applies to the Court of Claims?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Not on property claims. That is not true as to property claims. The present law permits suits on property claims to be instituted and also permits suits on contracts to be instituted. There are provisions in the law authorizing individuals to bring such suits. But this act authorizes an individual to institute a suit for personal injury based upon an allegation of negligence.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is not the real purpose of the law to so fix the law that the time of Congress will not be taken up with these small and meritorious private claims that we are constantly presenting to the Congress that should be disposed of in the manner provided for in this bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. I want to comment on the pending bill and congratulate the committee on the fine work it has done. Those of us who have had to do with private claim bills, which take up the time of Congress, know that this is legislation which will benefit every American citizen who has a just claim against the Government. The committee, in my opinion, has done a fine piece of work, and I want to congratulate the gentleman on his very excellent statement.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota, who has been so active on the Claims Committee. I am sure there are few Members of this House who are more familiar with the operations of the present claims system than the gentleman who has just propounded the inquiry. His approval, I am sure, is an indication that those who are most familiar with the situation are convinced that this legislation is desirable.

Mr. PITTENGER. What you are trying to do is to give the American citizen his day in court?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is right.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a tremendously important piece of legislation, something that has been needed for many years. By this law a citizen is given the right to file his claim for damages against the Government. He no longer needs to depend upon getting some Member to introduce a bill, press it before the committee, argue it on the floor, coax it through the Senate, and then, in most cases, have it vetoed. The present system makes Congress attempt to perform a judicial function for which no judicial machinery is provided, and makes justice for the individual a matter of political favor instead of independent right.

I think the statute of limitations should be longer than 1 year, but after discussing this with the committee I have decided that it would jeopardize the bill to attempt to extend this time, in view of the objections that are piling up against it. While many deserving claims now pending will be cut off by this 1-year provision, at least these claims will have a little better chance of fair consideration by Congress. At present, only a few hundred favored claims get through out of the thousands filed, and these favorites are selected, not necessarily on the justice of the claim but more on the political pull of the author.

At this time, when we are extending the powers of Government over the individual, when we are conscripting men and property and making more and more rights of citizens subservient to the state, I welcome this step in the opposite direction. Here, after 150 years, we are at last recognizing the right of a citizen to sue his Government for injuries to his person and property. I urge that this bill be passed.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, everyone who has taken the floor today has spoken in favor of this bill except myself.

Mr. COCHRAN. True; but here is another opposed to it who proposes to take the floor.

Mr. HANCOCK. I did not see the gentleman. I would expect him to oppose a bill like this.

Mr. Chairman, there are some considerations regarding this bill that ought to be called to your attention. It is urged, as a conclusive argument in favor of it, that the bar associations of the United States are behind this bill. Of course they are. This bill opens up a tremendous new field of litigation. When the bill passes, the actions against the Federal Government will be multiplied by the tens of thousands. The bill ought to be labeled "a bill for the relief of lawyers in general and ambulance-chasing lawyers in particular." Everyone who stumbles on the post-office steps or who slips and falls in this Capitol Building or who is injured in any way in the national parks or the national forests is going to run to his lawyer and bring an action against the Federal Government. If he is defeated in the courts, then he is going to his Congressman, just the same as he does now, and have a private bill introduced for his relief.

The bill is going to cost the Government untold millions of dollars. In my judgment, while the present procedure is clumsy and slow, it is as fair to the citizen and the Government as we can make it, and it does not invite and encourage claims. I have read as many private bills as any man here, and I know that the Committee on Claims is not too tough on the claimants. A private claim is passed on first by the Congressman who is asked to introduce a bill for relief, then by the member of the Committee on Claims who is assigned to read it, and then by a group of official objectors, finally by the President. Some bills get by here which would be thrown out of any court, but not many, and very few meritorious ones are defeated. If we throw the courts wide open to hear every picayune claim for injuries alleged to have been caused by some negligence or omission on the part of any one of our million civilian employees, or any one of our million and a half soldiers and sailors, the courts will be clogged, the district attorneys overwhelmed, and the annual expense enormous.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. What assurance have we, even if this bill should pass, that we still would not have the private bills?

Mr. HANCOCK. None whatever. Nearly every defeated litigant will run to his Congressman and say that he had a biased judge or an incompetent judge, or he has new evidence, or something of the sort. This bill is unnecessary and it is untimely. We have gotten along without it for 150 years. It seems that the nearer we approach bankruptcy the more extravagant we become. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK]. Having served on the Committee on Claims, I disagree with him in reference to what he calls ambulance-chasing lawyers. I say a claimant against the Government where a personal injury is involved has a tough row in this Congress. Very few, if any, of them have attorneys to handle matters. They ought to have attorneys, and then their bills would be presented to the Congressmen in such shape that they could get relief. All this bill does is guarantee to the average American citizen who has a claim against the Government his day in court. The first claim I handled when I came to Congress was the case of a woman who had been run over by a mail truck. If I had not gotten busy and followed it up vigorously she never would have got a cent. This happens to a great many claimants.

I thank the gentleman for this opportunity to make that comment.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his contribution.

There is nothing in this bill that takes away the right of any citizen who has by reason of the negligence of the Government or its agents suffered loss or damage to his property or has suffered personal injury to introduce a special bill. He still has that right. I favor this measure because of the generally interminable delays in getting relief in Congress on a special bill. Furthermore, only a very few of our citizens who are entitled to relief are able to get relief by special acts of Congress.

I know of a case where many years ago, before I became a Member of the House, a paper-serving deputy United States marshal was sent to execute an attachment from a United States court on certain desperate men. This particular deputy marshal did not know of the danger but the marshal did know of the danger. When the deputy marshal attempted to execute the papers he was filled with bullets, as full of holes as a pepper box. His widow and his seven or eight young children had no relief except a special bill in Congress. Two Congressmen from my district before my entry into the House introduced special bills. The first one never got action on his, and after years he went out of Congress and a new man came in. For 8 years he tried to get action on his special bills but failed. I came in and introduced special bills, and I remained here during the holidays one Christmas so that we could get a hearing on one of these special bills. We got the bill through the House but it never passed the Senate. There never was a clearer case of gross negligence. If some private concern had sent a man into such a dangerous place to perform a service such as this man was sent to do, without warning him of the danger, a jury would have given $10,000 or more in damages to that man's widow and children. The widow, after 20 years, passed away. Some of the children died. All of them became of age. They never got a dime for the negligent death of their father.

There are many meritorious cases like that long delayed. I know of other meritorious claims that have been pending for several years. Sometimes some of these bills pass the House and fail to pass the Senate. Other bills pass the Senate and fail to pass the House during a Congress, and when a new Congress meets the bills must be reintroduced and start all over again.

Hundreds of meritorious bills for damage to personal property and death and personal injury to citizens, due to the negligence of the Government and its agents, will not be considered by this Congress and these bills will die when this Congress ends January 3, 1941.

There are meritorious claims of hundreds of citizens whose property has been damaged or the lives of the members of their families have been taken or have received personal injuries through and by the negligence of the Government and its agents but for whom no special bills have been introduced. Such conditions could not obtain if the provisions of the present bill had been written into law. I have favored this legislation for years. It gives the humblest citizen, who because of lack of influence or lack of knowledge of his rights is unable to have a special bill introduced in his behalf, the right to go into the Federal court of his home State and his home Federal court district and file a suit and get action within a reasonable time.

Favoritism cannot enter into it. He can present his evidence and show the negligence and the amount he is entitled to recover. The Government can also submit its proof and present whatever defense it may have.

These claims by special bills before Congress are acted upon in an ex parte proceeding, with no cross-examination of the witnesses. The department whose agent committed the injury has some inspector from that department to investigate and secure statements against the citizen and his claim. These persons are not cross-examined. Perhaps if they were they would be forced to admit that they committed acts of negligence and they would be forced to admit the justice of the claim. You proceed here in Congress on ex parte statements and affidavits. Many of these persons who make the statements exonerating themselves and the Government are not sworn. This bill requires both sides to come into an impartial court and, before an impartial judge and an honest jury, give their testimony and have the case decided on its merits. What could be fairer? [Applause.]

There is a Federal law at the present time giving, the department of the Government involved, the right to settle damages for the negligent injury to personal property not to exceed $200. What does this bill provide for? It gives the department of Government whose agent causes the negligent injury to personal property or to persons the right to settle claims without going into court, up to $1,000. If the amount is not over $500 the department involved can pay the sum without any further steps, but if the department should award to the claimant any sum in excess of $500, and not to exceed $1,000, the claim cannot be paid until it is referred to the Attorney General of the Department of Justice and the award made by the department is approved. If the damage to personal property or personal injury to a citizen exceeds $1,000, then, in that event the claimant has the right under this bill to file a suit in the United States court of the district in which he lives. When such suit is filed, the Government is, of course, notified and it has the right to file an answer and contest the claim. The citizen and the Government both have right to introduce evidence in support of their respective contentions and the court may award whatever may appear just and right in the premises but not to exceed in any case the sum of $7,500.

The Government is engaging in a great many activities. It has millions of persons as officers, agents, and workers. They are operating cars, trucks, and other motor vehicles. It frequently occurs that these persons operating these vehicles for the Government are intoxicated or are inexperienced or reckless, and they run their trucks and cars into and over citizens and into and against their automobiles and through wanton negligence and carelessness destroy the property of citizens, take the lives of other citizens, and injure still others. What good reason can there be advanced for denying our citizens, however humble, the right to present their complaint to an impartial United States court, presided over by an impartial judge, and have the claim and the defenses of the citizen and the Government considered, the witnesses put under oath and subject to cross-examination, and a judgment or award given that may do justice to the citizen and to the Government? Of course, we all know that a citizen cannot sue his Government unless he is granted that special privilege or right by Congress. Unless this bill is passed hundreds—yes, thousands—of citizens will suffer damage to their personal property and injury to their persons through the negligence and carelessness of the Government and its agents and receive no relief. Why should the private citizen or the corporation that injures the property or takes the life of or injures another through his or its negligence be required to answer the complaint of the injured party in court and the great Federal Government commit like injuries through the negligence and carelessness of its agent be protected against responding in damages for the injuries done to its citizens?

This bill, in my opinion, will cause those in charge of the various agencies of the Government to exercise greater care in the selection of its agents and servants to operate the trucks and other motor vehicles and carry on its activities, so that we may have less damage to the property and fewer deaths and injuries to our citizens through the negligence of these agents of the Government.

This bill wisely, in my opinion, limits the amount of fees that may be charged by any attorney for his services to any claimant to not more than 20 percent of the amount recovered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

TITLE I

ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUSTMENT OF TORT CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

SECTION 1. Subject to the limitations of this act, authority is hereby conferred upon the head of each department or independent establishment, acting on behalf of the Government of the United States, to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and settle any claim accruing after the date of approval of this act on account of damages to or loss of property, or on account of personal injuries, where the total amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any officer or employee of the United States, including any member of the military and naval forces, while acting within the scope of his office or employment. If the amount of the award does not exceed $500, such determination shall be final and conclusive on all officers of the Government, notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary. If the amount of the award exceeds the sum of $500, the award shall be submitted by the head of the department or independent establishment making the same to the Attorney General for review. In such event, the determination of the Attorney General shall be final and conclusive on all officers of the Government, notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary. Such amount as may be found to be due to any claimant shall be paid by the head of the department or independent establishment concerned out of appropriations that may be made therefor, which appropriations are hereby authorized.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, claims were introduced in the House this year amounting to something like 15,000 and there were reported and passed something like 300 or 400 involving claims of this character. I do not know whether that is exactly right or not, but it is pretty close to the mark. If we pass this bill we are going to have claims in every district court in the United States by the hundreds and by the thousands. You are going to have claims that will be put up to the assistant district attorneys and all that sort of thing and it is going to cost the Government thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars. It is going to be the football of all kinds of rackets and promotions. Instead of being a bill to clear up and straighten out a situation, it is a bill to befuddle the situation and swindle the Government. I do not question the motives of the committee that brought this bill in here, but I do know what the bill says when I read it. Claims can be brought in the District Court of the United States without any specific authorization up to $7,500, and we all know that the representatives of the Attorney General in making settlements will be the local district attorney and his assistants. The power is given to them to settle without any strings on them at all and without any judicial approval or anything of that kind. I think we are going out on a limb when we pass this bill or even considering passing it.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] rightly labeled this bill as a bill for the benefit of ambulance chasers. There can be absolutely no limit to what can be trumped up and worked up against the Government with this kind of a set-up. I express the hope that when the bill is reached for final passage, it will be defeated.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, first, I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CELLER] whether or not any hearings were held on this bill.

Mr. CELLER. Hearings were held on the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have tried to get the hearings, but they are not at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CELLER. The hearings have been printed for some time and I shall be very glad to hand the gentleman a copy of them.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am glad some hearings were held and it will be my purpose to read the hearings, but I am quite sure only those in favor of the legislation appeared.

Let us now look at title I of this bill. We have heard a lot here from both sides of the aisle about bureaucrats, especially the members on my left, but still you give the bureaucrats you complain of the power to settle all claims up to $1,000. You do not have to go to court if the claim is less than $1,000. They can go to the so-called bureaucrats that you gentlemen have been criticizing so much.

I am confident the Supreme Court of the United States has time and time again held that the Government is not responsible for the negligence of its employees, but when you pass this bill you set aside all such opinions of the United States Supreme Court, because you specifically provide in title II for the determination of claims where the damages are caused by the negligence or the wrongful act or omission of any officer or employee of the United States, including any member of the military or naval forces of the United States, while acting within the scope of his office or employment.

Let me also call your attention to the fact that this title not only provides for personal injury cases, but for loss of property as well, and do not overlook that. In other words, you have everything in this bill. There is nothing omitted.

Let us look at the part of title II which includes "any member of the military or naval forces of the United States." Suppose we have an officer in time of an insurrection of any kind, such as our trip into Mexico, who, through an error of judgment, leads his men into a trap whereby a number of them lose their lives. I may be wrong, but under the terms of this title, in my opinion, their legal representatives can come before a court and sue this Government for $7,500 in each instance. There is no doubt about that in my mind although later on in the bill if we were engaged in war it is provided this title would not apply.

The gentleman from New York states that this is going to cost this Government thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars. I am going to enlarge on his statement by saying it is going to cost this Government millions and millions and millions of dollars. Thousands? I cannot see where the gentleman got such an idea. I think he really intended to say millions instead of thousands.

This is a matter that has been before the Congress as long as I can remember—and I can remember a long while back. I remember a bill brought in by the then chairman of the Claims Committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Underhill, which set up a special court to consider personal-injury claims, but did not include loss of property. The House went into it in detail. There were some 40 or 50 pages to that bill, and in that measure there was some protection for the United States Government.

This is a most dangerous piece of legislation. I do not see anything in this bill that is going to give the Government the right to get something from an individual who might be responsible for damages that might result to the Government instead of the individual. For instance, if you are going along on a highway with a truck containing boys from the Civilian Conservation Corps, and in the opposite direction comes a private truck, and through the negligence of the driver of the private truck there is a collision, and half a dozen of these boys are killed or injured, do you believe the Government is going to get any money out of the owner of that private truck?

This bill should be sent back to the committee and not passed in the closing hours of the Congress. It is too important to pass with just a few Members on the floor of the House.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the last two gentlemen who have addressed the Committee appear in the role of economy advocates and charge that if this bill is enacted it will cost the Government a large amount of money. Their argument is based upon the premise that this is the first time the Government has ever been subjected to tort actions. We have a precedent to govern our conduct in this case. The Government is now subject to suits in tort by act of Congress. If you will turn to page 2 of the report you will see that since 1863 the Government has been subject to suit on contract in the Court of Claims and by the act of March 3, 1887, known as the Tucker Act, concurrent jurisdiction was conferred on the United States district court over such contract claims against the Government as involved a sum not exceeding $10,000. Prior to that time it was necessary for claimants to go into Congress, as all claimants must now go into Congress to present their claims to the Court of Claims. By this proposed legislation we would confer upon the courts, and properly so, jurisdiction over tort claims of citizens against the Government.

Now, further, you will note by the act of March 9, 1920, the Government was subjected to suit in the district courts in respect to admiralty and maritime torts. So that this is not the first time the Government has been subjected to tort actions.

Since 1920 the Government, by act of this Congress, has been called upon to respond to court judgments in admiralty and maritime cases sounded in tort. Thus it will be seen that this is not a departure from any tradition of the Government, and the charge that if this law is passed the gates will be wide open to fraudulent claims, by shysters and ambulance chasers, does not come with any dignity from the gentlemen who assert that claim. Certainly they do not intend to indict the entire bar of the United States. Certainly they do not mean to insinuate that all attorneys who present claims to the court in pursuance of this law must be branded as shysters and ambulance chasers. I believe the respective States are very adequately taking care of this question of ambulance chasers. I know that in my own State the State bar association, integrated with the American Bar Association, is now a self-regulatory body with power to discipline its members, and it is doing a splendid job.

I say to the gentleman who asserts this objection that he had better go back home to his own State and see that the bar cleans house, if it is necessary to do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am glad to yield to my colleague, who is a distinguished member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to compliment the gentleman on the fine statement he is making, but have you observed any such abuses as have been suggested by the gentlemen who have spoken against this bill, under the contract suits and under the limited tort cases?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Certainly not; and I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The very point I am developing is that the charge which these gentlemen are making, although made, no doubt in good faith, has no foundation in fact or in precedent.

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to my distinguished friend from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. I would like to know where the pressure for the bill is coming from and who testified in favor of it? I am not expressing any opinion against it and have no opinion one way or the other.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I would say to the gentleman that the pressure has not come particularly from those who have claims. The Attorney General, whose duty it is to protect the rights of the United States, came before our committee and urged the passage of this law because of the fact that the present system is so inequitable and results in such unfair consequences. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to felicitate the committee and the introducer of this bill for another step forward. Gentlemen who have done me the honor to read my writings on the science of legislation, which were the result of an avocation of many years, will find my chapter on claims exhausting my vocabulary in condemning the action of Congress in not yet meeting fully this particular problem. The waste of congressional time, the inequity of the proceedings, the subjection to accident and chance, condemn us in the eyes of all thinking persons. The result of my study was my belief that there is nothing so disgraceful in the conduct of the Congress of the United States as its treatment of claims. It brings on the floor of the House something that ought never to come within its walls, that is, the dispensing of justice, it brings here the dispensing of equity. However, steps have been taken in the course of 75 years, little by little, to free ourselves from this encumbrance. The creation of the Court of Claims, and the expansion of its activities have been a credit to the Congressmen who have fought again and again to get rid of our outrageous treatment of those who suffer at the hands of the Government. Nobody has ever risen here, to my knowledge, to complain of the result of any step that has been taken.

Always it is accepted as a wise finality. Always it has accrued to the honor of the Congresses that have taken the steps.

The problem had vexed Congress from the very start, but no attempt at remedy was successful until 1855 when a Court of Claims was established. Its powers were so restricted that in 1883 the Bowman Act removed some of the obstacles, and then in 1887 came the Tucker Act with much improvement. Today nobody complains about its workings, but its duties and powers ought to be enlarged.

In Congress the situation became so burdensome and unsatisfactory otherwise that in 1910 a beginning was made of letting the departments settle the little claims, the very idea carried further in this bill, of which some of the Members seem to have no knowledge. Next in 1922 the scope of power was broadened at the instigation of Congressman Underhill, who later would have gone further save for a veto President Coolidge felt necessary by reason of a minor provision. Then in 1932 the process of handling claim bills was bettered and 2 years later was further improved by establishing the present system.

Objection has been made to every change on the score of predicted expense, as we have heard it today. Yet nobody has suggested return to the older process. Nobody should object on the score of expense even if it came. Fiat justitia, ruat coelum—let justice be done though the heavens fall. It is an ancient and honorable maxim. Remember the pledge of King John at Runnymede: "To no man will we deny right or justice." Least of all should Congress, the voice of the Nation, be silent when justice is at stake.

If we make no further progress, then, sir, we accept continuance of a burden that is serious, we accept a procedure that is outrageous, we accept a result that does no credit either to Congress or to the Nation. I am thinking that this bill is another step taken, however short it may be, in this slow progress toward justice and common sense. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], I will ask him, with respect to the question of admiralty cases which he mentioned sometime ago in an earlier colloquy, in the settlement of admiralty cases does the Attorney General under existing law have the power of settlement without judicial review?

Mr. CELLER. As far as I know, he has that power.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman should determine that point if he is citing such cases as precedents, because the question of judicial review is the only point I am raising. But even if there is precedent for settlements without court approval, if the precedent is a bad one, it does not follow that we should extend it. Certainly, the general rule favors judicial review of compromise settlements.

I feel that this bill has two weaknesses. I am not a lawyer, and I do not qualify as a lawyer, but I do know a little about human nature; I have seen a little of politics, and I have served a term on the Claims Committee.

With the general intent that the bill should afford a better measure of justice than the introduction of a private bill I have no quarrel. I think we can probably relieve the Congress of some detail work which should not come before this body, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has pointed out; but there are two things in this bill which ought to be brought to the attention of the House in its consideration. The first of these is section 203, which provides that the Attorney General may compromise or settle any of the claims brought under title II, and without review by anyone. But in section 1 it is provided that departmental settlements between $500 and $1,000 shall be subject to review by the Attorney General.

If this be a good principle then the settlement by the Attorney General of the larger claims up to $7,500 should be subject to review by a disinterested party, presumably the district court. I am sure every Member of this Congress who has had any personal experience in the matter knows that in State bank liquidations it is generally required that compromise settlements of loans and sales of the assets of the bank must be approved by the circuit court. If this be a sound principle for that type of cases it seems to me it is a sound principle in claims regardless of what the precedents may be in admiralty cases.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman know any State practice which requires that a ruling by the Attorney General in settlement of the case of a municipality or other corporate entity should be reviewed?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I know that in my own State in the liquidation of banks the settlement must be submitted to the district or the circuit court.

Another section of the bill to which I direct attention is the provision in section 309 for 20 percent attorneys fees for the settlement of cases under title II.

Every private claims bill that has been acted upon by Congress since I have been here, so far as I know, has had added to it a 10-percent limitation upon attorneys' fees; yet in section 309 of this bill a 20-percent fee is authorized for attorneys in cases that are settled either in court or by the Attorney General; and I make the prediction that if this bill becomes a law in the form in which it now is the Congress will some day rue the action that establishes 20 percent for attorneys' fee for cases that can be settled by an agreement between attorneys. And I make the further prediction that in addition to this being an invitation to ambulance chasers it will be an invitation to district attorneys and deputy district attorneys to make easy settlements in favor of those to whom they owe some political obligation. They will make an easy settlement of cases up to $7,500 to allow some friendly attorney a 20 percent attorney's fee. This, it seems to me, is a very unwise departure from the principle of the 10-percent clause we have insisted go into private claims bills in the Congress and which has tended to reduce the pressing of claims of doubtful merit.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from South Dakota that Section 309 provides only that the compensation to attorneys shall not exceed 20 percent of the amount recovered as to claims prosecuted under title II; that is, where they are brought into court; and they shall not exceed 10 percent as to claims brought under title I; that is, when they are adjusted in the departments. That is when they are adjusted in the department itself. It does not mean that the attorneys will necessarily get 20 percent if the case is brought into court. The pay may be less than 20 percent.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, we have had many private-claim bills where the amount exceeded $7,500 passed by the Congress; yet in every instance we have put in the 10-percent limitation. There may have been one exception where that was left out not so long ago, when the President of the United States, if my memory is correct, vetoed a bill on the ground that the 10-percent limitation was not provided.

Mr. CELLER. It is to be remembered that in title II there is a court proceeding which entails all the work involved in litigation. I believe the compensation should be larger in that case than that which is accorded counsel where he settles a case in a department or brings the claim to Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Section 203 provides that the Attorney General may settle claims under title II either before or after the institution of any suit thereunder; so that it would be possible for him to approve of a 20-percent fee in cases before suit is instituted.

Mr. CELLER. But suit must have been brought before 20 percent can be allowed.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized to adopt and promulgate rules and regulations for the enforcement and administration of this title. Such rules may prescribe the procedure and principles of decision, including construction and interpretation of this act and questions of subrogation, to be followed by the various departments and independent establishments in considering, ascertaining, adjusting, or determining claims under this title, and may include a schedule of the amount of compensation to be awarded for specific physical injuries.

SEC. 3. The head of each department and independent establishment shall annually make a report to the Congress of all claims determined under this title. Such report shall include the names of all claimants and a statement of the amount claimed and of the amount awarded in each instance.

TITLE II

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ON TORT CLAIMS

SEC. 201. That subject to the provisions of this act and the Judicial Code, the Court of Claims and the district courts sitting without a jury, shall have concurrent jurisdiction to hear and determine claims against the United States, not exceeding the sum of $7,500, on account of damages to or loss of property or on account of personal injuries, or death, caused by the negligence or wrongful act or omission of any officer or employee of the United States, including any member of the military or naval forces of the United States, while acting within the scope of his office or employment. In respect to such claims the United States shall be liable to the same extent and in the same manner as a private individual under like circumstances, except that the United States shall not be liable for punitive damages.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEARHART: Page 3, line 17, after the word "sitting", insert the words "with or."

Page 3, line 17, after the comma, following the word "jury", insert the words "if the parties to the action so agree."

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, one of the most sacred rights of American citizenship, a right recognized under the Constitution itself, is the right to trial by jury.

This section, which attempts to confer jurisdiction upon our Federal district courts, confers jurisdiction with a limitation, the right to hear and determine a case the court sitting without a jury. I do not believe that any American citizen, or any person resorting to American courts, should be deprived of his right to trial by jury, except with his own consent.

My amendment will safeguard the great constitutional principle of trial by jury and make possible the free exercise thereof by those who desire a trial by that method. Therefore it ought to be adopted. The adoption of my amendment will clothe the courts with authority to hear a case with a jury or without a jury, as the litigants may agree. All that a litigant will have to do to preserve his right to a jury trial is to refrain from entering into an agreement waiving the privilege. The procedure would be about the same as that already in effect in most of the States.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will be agreed to. The principles involved are so fundamental further argument should not be necessary.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. Chairman, we would have a rather anomalous situation if we adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, because in cases involving maritime torts against the Government, admiralty torts against the Government, and torts under the so-called Tucker Act, we must have trial without jury. There is in those cases no right to trial by jury; yet under this amendment you would accord the privilege of a jury trial in cases under the instant bill. I think that would inject a rather anomalous situation into these proceedings. What about such inconsistencies? In one set of cases jury trial, in another no jury trial.

The testimony of the representative of the Department of Justice on that score was as follows:

I must confess I would have some hesitancy about making any change—

Being the change to trial by jury—

because we know there are occasions when juries, moved by sentiment, may give an exorbitant verdict far beyond the claimant's deserts. This is especially true of the large metropolitan centers.

I can testify as one who has practiced in the courts of New York that jury verdicts are rather excessive there, and oftentimes far beyond that which is deemed proper by the record. Furthermore, as I said before, we should go slowly in connection with innovations of this character. Let us do some experimenting with this legislation before we make a change of the type indicated by the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the event it is a larger verdict, the defense can take it into court and have the amount reduced or set aside, under the present law?

Mr. CELLER. That is true, but, as I said, why extend this extraordinary privilege in a certain sense in these cases where we are giving the person the right to sue as a matter of grace, not as a matter of constitutional right? I think we should go rather slowly.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it not a fact that under the law today in the trial of one of these cases in the Federal court, if the jury returns what may be considered an excessive verdict, that that verdict is within the control of the judge and the court may reduce it, set it aside, or modify it in accordance with the evidence and as justice may appear in the case?

Mr. CELLER. It is not within the jurisdiction of the appellate court to do that.

Mr. KEEFE. I am talking about the trial court.

Mr. CELLER. The court of original jurisdiction may do it.

Mr. KEEFE. Why not have a jury trial then?

Mr. CELLER. Why not leave it as it is; then if the amount given is excessive, even without a jury trial, it can be toned down by the judge of the court of original jurisdiction.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. Time and time again in the gentleman's remarks he has referred to this right as being one which should not be extended. The constitutional right is to a trial by jury. This is a limitation that you are putting in the bill upon that right.

Mr. CELLER. No; I say to the gentleman that there is no constitutional right to trial by jury as far as these cases are concerned. The right never existed to bring the action, therefore we can impose any condition we wish upon that right, and one of the reasonable conditions is that there shall be no trial by jury.

Mr. GEARHART. The bill itself states that the United States shall be liable to the same extent and in the same manner as a private individual under like circumstances.

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. GEARHART. But in the same breath, it states that they shall not be in a like condition because the individual shall not have a jury trial.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is in error. The gentleman should read the remainder of the bill to see under what conditions the individual shall have that right.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York has made a very fair statement. These claims on which suit is permitted in actions of tort are limited in amount. They are less than $7,500.

Mr. CELLER. That is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the actions which have been authorized heretofore in maritime cases no jury trials have been permitted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING: On page 3, line 17, after "courts", insert a comma and the words "including the United States District Court for Hawaii."

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I understand the chairman of the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 202. At the instance of the Attorney General or the appropriate United States attorney, the deposition of any witness may be taken in behalf of the United States at any time, either before or after the institution of any action hereunder. Reasonable notice of the time and place of the taking of such deposition shall be given to the claimant or his attorney. The claimant or his attorney shall have the privilege of cross-examining such witness. Any deposition so taken may be used by either party in any action arising out of such claim.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEARHART: On page 4, line 4, after "General", insert "or claimant", and on page 4, line 6, after "United States", insert "or of the claimant, as the case may be."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I see no objection to including that language. I accept the amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I believe the first part of the gentleman's amendment ought to follow the words "United States attorney" in line 5 instead of the words "Attorney General" in line 4.

Mr. GEARHART. I have no objection to that. It will not change the sense at all.

Mr. TABER. It will be better language.

Mr. CELLER. What was the suggestion of the gentleman from New York? I did not hear it.

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman from New York suggested that the words "or claimant" be put after the words "the appropriate United States attorney" rather than after the words "Attorney General." It does not change the sense at all. It relates to grammatical style alone.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman inquired about this section while I was discussing the bill. As far as I am concerned, and the committee feels the same way, there is no objection to the granting of the same right to the litigant against the Government as to the Government. The committee is perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to change the language of his amendment?

Mr. GEARHART. I do not desire to change it. Unless the gentleman from New York insists, I would let it stand as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 203. The Attorney General is hereby authorized to arbitrate, compromise, or settle any claim under this title, either before or after the institution of any suit thereon.

SEC. 204. Compensation for death shall be awarded and paid to the widow or widower, or, if there is no widow or widower, then to the children, share and share alike; if there be no widow or widower or children, then to any parent, including an adopted parent or a stepfather or stepmother, grandparent, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew, or niece, who may have been wholly or partially dependent for support on the deceased at the time of the death, in such proportions as the court shall decree, or as may be agreed upon between the parties. The term "children" shall include an adopted child, a stepchild, and an illegitimate child. In case the claim is for the death of the father, only such illegitimate child shall be included whose paternity had been duly adjudicated during the lifetime of the parent or had been acknowledged in writing by him.

TITLE III

PROVISIONS COMMON TO TITLE I AND TITLE II

SEC. 301. Every claim against the United States cognizable under this act shall be forever barred, unless, within 1 year after such claim accrued, it is presented in writing to the department or independent establishment out of whose activities it arises, if such claim is for a sum not exceeding $1,000; or unless, within 1 year after such claim accrued, a complaint setting forth a statement thereof is filed in a district court of the United States or in the Court of Claims. In the event that a claim for a sum not exceeding $1,000 is presented to the department or independent establishment as aforesaid, the time to file a complaint in such court shall be extended for a period of 6 months from the date of mailing of notice to the claimant by such department or independent establishment as to the final disposition of the claim.

SEC. 302. No award shall be made or recovery allowed in the event that the person in control of such property, or the person injured, or the deceased, as the case may be, is guilty of contributory negligence; or in the event that the damage, loss, injury, or death is proximately caused by the intoxication or willful misconduct of such person.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE: On page 5, beginning in line 24, strike out section 302 and insert a new section, as follows:

"Contributory negligence shall not bar recovery in any action by any person or his legal representatives to recover damages for negligence resulting in death or in injury to person or property, if such negligence was not as great as the negligence of the Government, but any damages allowed shall be diminished by the court in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering."

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply incorporates into the law what is known as the comparative-negligence doctrine. Under the provisions of this bill, which have been announced to the committee as being a forward step in the matter of handling claims against the Government, a provision is found which is as antiquated as law itself, providing that contributory negligence shall be an absolute bar to a recovery. In many States of the Union which have progressively legislated upon this subject they have adopted, one after the other, the comparative negligence doctrine, which gives to the court the opportunity to adjudicate on the question of which one of the parties was guilty of the most negligence. Just think, if you will, of a situation which may have occurred under your observation as a lawyer, when a person has received a most grievous injury and then, because of a slight want of ordinary care or negligence on the part of such person, regardless of the amount of negligence that may have existed on the part of the person causing the injury, such a person is denied any recovery at all. Under the provisions of this amendment, which is found in many States and in the Federal Employers' Liability Act itself, the court is given an opportunity to estimate and appraise the amount of negligence that shall be attributed to each party. In the event the claimant is found guilty of 35 percent of negligence, for instance, that does not bar recovery, but the amount of recovery when estimated and fixed by the court would be reduced by the amount of negligence which is found against the claimant. I have found in practice extending over some years in dealing with this subject since the adoption of this program in the State of Wisconsin that it has been most generally accepted, and that law in itself is the one thing that has barred the adoption in my State of a commission plan for compensation for all injured persons for injuries arising out of automobile accidents, similar to the workmen's compensation law, regardless of the negligence of the parties involved.

It seems to me that those of us, as lawyers, who are familiar with the progress that has been made in this country on the subject of negligence and with the desire to do justice to the people who have been injured, should adopt this amendment in order that justice may be done and so that people who have actually sustained injuries as a result of the negligent conduct or action of Government employees, may be compensated even though they may be guilty of a slight want of ordinary care when the governmental agencies have been guilty of negligence almost approaching, perhaps, gross negligence.

I feel that this provision in the bill is a step backward, rather than a step forward and that if we are to adopt this law at all, we ought to adopt it in line with the progress made in the law along these lines and put a comparative-negligence provision in this act that will insure justice to those who have received injuries as a result of the negligent and tortious act of certain employees of the United States Government.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Is the gentleman advocating in his amendment a provision similar to the rule in admiralty?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the provision in the bill state the law in the great majority of States?

Mr. KEEFE. It states the law in many States, I will say that.

Mr. GWYNNE. In the majority of the States?

Mr. KEEFE. It is a statement of what we know to be the common law, but I am not prepared to state, however, that it is a statement of good law. It is not in line with the progress in this Nation in the law of negligence. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize very well the desire of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] to perfect the law as he views it. We are confronted in this particular situation with these facts: In a number of States of the Union the law provides that if the plaintiff is guilty of any negligence in connection with the accident on which he sues, that negligence constitutes a complete bar to his recovery. In other States the law provides that if the plaintiff is guilty of negligence, the negligence of the plaintiff is compared with the negligence of the defendant and the amount of the plaintiff's recovery is reduced in the proportionate amount which his own negligence bears to all the negligence which contributed to produce the resultant damage.

In my particular State in which I have practiced for many years, we have the comparative negligence rule. Personally, I like the comparative negligence rule. I think it is an equitable rule and I think it has much to recommend it. However, in the adjoining State, just across the river, the State of Iowa, the State of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], who is a member of our committee, they have the opposite rule. I have tried cases, if you will pardon a personal reference, in both States. I know, perhaps to my sorrow in some cases, that the plaintiff can recover under both rules of law. In other words, in those States where the law provides that contributory negligence is a complete bar, plaintiffs do regularly recover as well as in States in which negligence is compared, as I have outlined. In the tort actions which are provided for against the Government in the acts which have been passed by the Congress up to this time, and which form a sort of pattern for the present bill, the complete-bar theory is adhered to. So the committee in recommending this bill adheres to the rule which applies in the other cases. Perhaps, as time goes on and experience is accumulated on this bill, it would be wise for us, after the trial and error period has passed, to amend the law to make it conform with the law in my State rather than with the law of the State of my distinguished colleague from Iowa, but I submit that this bill in its present form is a great step in the right direction. It materially assists claimants who need assistance.

Let us walk before we run. I submit that this bill in its entirety, subject to the few perfecting amendments which have been accepted by the committee up to this time is a good bill. I believe we should try it out in the form in which the bill has been presented and recommended to the House by the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is making a very fine statement on this bill, but may I ask, Is it not true that the majority of the States of our country still maintain the old common-law theory of negligence instead of comparative negligence?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I regret I am not prepared to speak advisedly in answer to the gentleman's query. Perhaps the gentleman's question answers itself; at any rate, it does not seem to me that is a consideration that is compelling in this instance. For the reasons I have suggested and for the reason that it is following the pattern of similar laws enacted by the Congress in the past, it occurs to me it would be well to enact it in its present form. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the immediately preceding section, section 301, for the purpose of offering an amendment, merely a clarifying amendment that was accepted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Delegate from Hawaii asks unanimous consent to return to section 301 for the purpose of offering a clarifying amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING: Page 5, line 16, after the word "States", insert "including the United States District Court for Hawaii."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 303. The provisions of this act shall not apply to—

(1) Any claim arising out of the loss of, miscarriage, or negligent transmission of letters or postal matter.

(2) Any claim arising in respect of the assessment or collection of any tax or customs duty, or the detention of any goods or merchandise by any officer of customs or excise or any other law-enforcement officer.

(11) Any claim arising out of the activities of the military or naval forces, or the Coast Guard, during time of war.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 7, beginning in line 2, strike out the words "or cargo" and insert "or to the cargo, crew, or passengers of vessels."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, in line 3, strike out the comma following the word "Canal."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 304. No recovery shall be had for the aggravation of personal injury or for death resulting therefrom, caused by an unreasonable neglect or refusal of claimant to submit to or procure medical or surgical treatment.

SEC. 305. The Attorney General, the appropriate United States attorney, or the department or independent establishment before which a claim is filed may require any claimant for damages for personal injury to submit to examination by one or more medical officers of the department or independent establishment under whose activities the claim arises or, with the consent and approval of the head of any other department or independent establishment, by one or more medical officers of such department or independent establishment, or by other duly qualified physicians designated or approved by the Department of Justice. Such examinations shall be had as frequently and at such times or places as may be reasonably required. For failure to submit to such examination or examinations, the court or the department or the independent establishment, as the case may be, in its discretion may dismiss the claim in whole or in part. At the request of the injured person a duly qualified physician, designated by him, may be present and participating at such examination or examinations. Counsel for such person may likewise be present at such examination. In the event that the injured person is required to travel to the place where the examination takes place, he shall be paid his reasonable transportation and subsistence expenses.

SEC. 306. If the damage, loss, injury, or death is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability on the part of some person other than an officer, agent, or employee of the Government or upon some corporation, State, or political subdivision, to pay damages therefor, jointly with the United States, then, and in that event, the recovery against the United States shall be only for the pro rata share of the damages in proportion to the number of parties so jointly or severally liable.

SEC. 307. In cases in which an award made pursuant to section 203 or a judgment for the plaintiff rendered under section 201 of this act includes damages or compensation for physical injuries alleged to be permanent or for temporary physical injuries from which the claimant has not recovered at the time of the award or judgment, as the case may be, such award or judgment, in the discretion of the Attorney General or the court, as the case may be, may provide that a part of the amount awarded shall be paid in a lump sum and the balance in monthly installments. In such event, the award or judgment shall fix the number of installments and the amount of each installment. If the claimant recovers from his injuries prior to the payment of all installments so directed to be paid, installments accruing subsequently to the date of the recovery shall not be paid.

SEC. 308. In the event that any claimant under this act dies prior to the making of any award, or the rendering of any judgment hereunder, or prior to the payment thereof, and the amount of such award or judgment does not exceed the sum of $200, payment thereof may be made directly to the person or persons designated in section 204 hereof.

SEC. 309. The court in rendering a judgment for plaintiff under this act, or any official arbitrating, compromising, or settling a claim may, as a part of the judgment or determination, determine and allow reasonable attorneys' fees, which shall not exceed 20 percent of the amount recovered as to claims prosecuted under title II, and shall not exceed 10 percent of the amount recovered as to claims filed under title I, to be paid out of the amount recovered, to the attorneys representing the claimant. Any attorney who charges, demands, receives, or collects for services rendered in connection with such claim any amount in excess of that allowed under this section, if recovery be had, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $2,000, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 310. The act of December 28, 1922 (42 Stat. 1066) is hereby repealed: Provided, however, That any claim accruing thereunder prior to the approval of this act may be presented, considered, ascertained, adjusted, and determined in the manner therein prescribed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 10, in line 20, strike out the words "the act of" and insert "Public Law No. 375, Chapter 17, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, approved."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEFAUVER: Page 11, line 2, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 310 (a). Claimants prosecuting a claim under and by virtue of this act shall be deemed to have elected to pursue said remedy as an exclusive remedy and to have thereby waived all others."

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. I think it is a step in the right direction and will be much better procedure than the present method of presenting claims to Congress by the introduction of claim bills. One of the principal reasons why we want this bill passed is to eliminate the haphazard method that is necessarily followed in presenting claims to Congress. I think we have a very splendid Claims Committee and they do the best they can under the circumstances, but I do not believe it is set up to handle claims and give everybody as fair a hearing as the courts would give them.

However, there is one thing we want to prevent being done, and that is to prevent a claimant from bringing suit in court and at the same time prosecuting a claim before the Claims Committee of the House.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will turn to section 306 he will see that the result of his amendment would be to bar a claim against an outside individual who might be proportionately liable in damages along with the Government. I am afraid that the way the gentleman has prepared his amendment it would be too inclusive. If the gentleman made his amendment so that the procedure in the Court of Claims or in the district court barred all claim against the United States, in view of section 306, I believe that is as far as he should go.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. The gentleman's amendment is simply an attempt to prevent disappointed litigants, after their case has been tried, from coming to the Congress with special bills. I do not know that it will be effective, but it is certainly a laudable purpose.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman says he does not know whether it will be effective. I am quite sure it will not be effective, because the Congress can reverse itself any time and consider a bill.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Of course, I realize there is no way by which you can prevent a bill from being filed, regardless of what happens in the lawsuit; but the purpose of this amendment is to put as many impediments upon a claimant who will try to prosecute his claim in both places, as possible. This will prevent him from bringing suit in court and at the same time getting a claim bill filed. Of course, he can have it filed, but the Claims Committee will then have something to argue with him about. They can say, "If you have elected the other way, you do not have any right to come into Congress and prosecute your private claim bill." I think the amendment will be a safeguard, and unless you do have such an amendment to the bill I do not know that this will relieve the Claims Committee of much of its burden.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Is it not a fact that in most States the doctrine of election of remedies applies, and if a man elects to pursue one remedy he is barred from taking another bite at the cherry? He ought to be satisfied with one bite at the cherry. I think the gentleman's amendment is right and should prevail.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I thank the gentleman from Missouri. That is the law in most jurisdictions. If you elect one remedy then as a matter of law you are precluded from pursuing another one. That should be stated in here in this bill to prevent these double-barreled actions on the part of claimants.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment should be voted down. It can do no good and might do harm. The harm it could do was pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

I agree with the philosophy announced by the gentleman from Tennessee and I think that rule now governs the Claims Committee of the House. In other words, if a claim is presented to that committee wherein the claimant has some remedy in the courts or before some commission, I believe it is not the practice to report the bill favorably.

The doctrine of election of remedies, however, would not apply here. We cannot bind future Congresses. We cannot say now that a man who elects to sue in the courts can never come to Congress afterward and present his claim. We cannot say that some future Congress could not back up and say they would allow the claim or allow his right to submit a claim to Congress. The Congress is not bound in passing on claims to consider legal obligations only. We may likewise consider whether there is a moral obligation; and if we so believe, we have the right to report the bill favorably. As I say, this amendment can do no good, but may do quite a lot of harm. I hope it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEFAUVER) there were—ayes 5, noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 311. Except as hereinabove provided, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as a repeal of any existing act or acts conferring upon any department or independent establishment the power or authority to consider, ascertain, settle, adjust, compromise, determine, certify, or pay any claims against the United States.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEFAUVER: On page 11, line 8, at the end of section 311, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 311a. Provided that an adverse decision by the court on the merits of any claim shall be considered as conclusive evidence against the validity of said claim in the event the same may be prosecuted or presented for allowance in any other forum or by any action or procedure."

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, as was stated in the argument on the other amendment, there is, of course, no way we can prevent a claimant who has taken one bite at a cherry, and in the event he received an adverse decision, getting some Representative to introduce a bill in Congress to compensate him. But I believe that if that man comes here after receiving an adverse decision in a court of competent jurisdiction on the merits of the case—not on some demurrer or preliminary pleading—that if he comes to Congress then and asks compensation, that the presumption against the validity of his claim should be against him. This impediment should be hung around his neck, and ought to be written into this law to prevent his taking this course.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Would not the proper approach to that problem be that taken in the reorganization bill, that a private claims bill could not be introduced unless there was an affirmative showing that there had not been an adverse decision previously?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I disagree with the gentleman. In the first place, we do not know that such a rule could be passed, or whether it would be legal if passed. In the second place, the rule could be changed from Congress to Congress. My amendment does not try to bind future Congresses. We cannot, of course, bind a future Congress; but we can say to the man that if he wants to take advantage of this law and file a suit in court against the Government, that if he loses out in court and thereafter tries to have a claim bill introduced in Congress on his behalf he is stymied or prejudiced by a conclusive presumption against the validity of his claim.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Claims Committee has adopted a policy of in no case overruling a court or even favorably recommending a bill where the claimant still had some remedy before some court, commission, or board. The gentleman's amendment therefore is not necessary.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I would remind the gentleman that whatever may be the policy of the Claims Committee as it is presently constituted, we may not always be favored with such a fine Claims Committee, and some positive direction should be given about the matter.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. Is not this amendment subject to the same objections and limitations as the previous one?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It is not because the other one attempted to make the claimant elect. This amendment simply provides that in the event the plaintiff loses in one forum and tries to come into Congress the presumption shall be against the validity of his claim.

I might say that I have spoken to the chairman of the subcommittee and also some members of the minority members of the committee. They seemed to feel that this would be a very fair amendment and that it ought to be adopted. I am surprised that the chairman did not agree to accept it when it was offered.

The purpose of this bill is to give a claimant the same right to prosecute a tort claim against the Government that he has against an individual or corporate entity. Do you want to give him a greater right than he would have against an individual? I am sure you do not, and yet you will be doing exactly that under the terms of this bill unless my amendment is adopted.

If a claimant receives an adverse decision in court on the merits of his case against an individual, he is through. Having taken his case through the courts the issue is res adjudicata. He has no further cause for complaint and every principle of our jurisprudence would repel him should he try to again recover on the same subject matter. But you do not give your Government this protection under this bill. Having lost in the courts you would still let him prosecute his claim for damages by a claim bill in Congress. Is that fair? Is it right?

Your answer is that the Claims Committee would repel him. Let us see about that. Those of you who are lawyers know that you can always present a stronger case after you have taken that case through the courts. In going through the courts you have learned more about your case. The judge and opposing counsel have pointed out the weaknesses. The next time you would be able to cure the defects, present testimony to meet vulnerable points in your case. Have you not frequently heard lawyers say, "Oh, if I had thought of that point I could have met it and won my case"? So with the experience gained by taking the case through the courts, even though the judgment was adverse, in many cases the lawyer will be able to present new evidence, other legal principles, or more persuasive arguments to the Claims Committee and thus possibly secure relief. He should not in the face of an adverse court decision be able to do this. The Government should have the same protection that is given to an individual defendant under the doctrine of former adjudication.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the philosophy contained in the gentleman's amendment, but the objections that were advanced against the previous amendment should be urged against this one. To adopt this amendment would be perfectly useless. It would be but to stultify ourselves, primarily, because we cannot bind future Congresses.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Does not the gentleman believe, however, that we could put a label on a claim in the event he has elected under this bill to go to court, and loses, that we can label that claim to say that it is conclusively presumed that it does not have any validity?

Mr. CELLER. It would be just a label, that is all.

Mr. KEFAUVER. It would be a very worth-while label.

Mr. CELLER. I do not think so. You would force the man who has the claim to bring it into the Congress with that type of amendment. The purpose of the bill is to discourage bringing these claims to Congress because of the vast number that have heretofore been brought to this Chamber and into the adjoining Chamber. You would encourage a man, by this amendment, to come here because of a limitation you place upon an alternate remedy and for this additional reason we should vote down the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEFAUVER) there were—ayes 6, noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 312. This act may be cited as the "Federal Tort Claims Act."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN, having resumed the chair, Mr. PACE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7236, to provide for the adjustment of certain claims against the United States and to confer jurisdiction in respect thereto on the Court of Claims and the district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 578, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON SELECTIVE SERVICE BILL

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the bill, H. R. 10132, may have until midnight to file a report for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it the conferees have agreed, but the conference report will be considered first by the Senate?

Mr. MAY. That is right.

Mr. MICHENER. It is proposed to take the conference report up in the Senate tomorrow noon and if the Senate concludes during the day, then the report will come to the House; that is, sometime Friday?

Mr. MAY. I had intended to make that explanation of it. It is the hope of the committee we will be able to take it up tomorrow afternoon and conclude its consideration within the time fixed by the rules of the House, if possible.

Mr. MICHENER. It ought to be taken up in the House about 2 o'clock.

Mr. MAY. About 2 or 3 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs when this final report will be available to the Members? How soon can the Members get the final report?

Mr. MAY. As a matter of fact, the report and the bill have been printed once, but the conferees on reconsideration of the matter today made certain changes in the bill which made it necessary to reprint both the bill and the report.

Mr. HOLMES. That will be available tomorrow morning?

Mr. MAY. That will be available tomorrow morning, as soon as these things usually are. The report will be printed in the RECORD tomorrow morning.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what are the prospects of there being a final vote tomorrow in the event it comes to the House in the early afternoon? In other words, the gentleman from Kentucky indicates he may not call for a final vote until Saturday. There are several Members I know are interested who are absent at the moment and want to be present in the event the final vote comes tomorrow. Can the gentleman indicate what the plan will be?

Mr. MAY. It is my purpose when the bill gets over here tomorrow to call it up immediately. I hope this will not be later than 2 o'clock. I will immediately call it up for consideration under the rules of the House and hope to dispose of it finally, if possible, tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. McKEOUGH. In other words, there will be no disposition to carry it over until Saturday?

Mr. MAY. Not unless it has to go over. If for some reason it has to go over, it will go over, otherwise we will complete consideration tomorrow.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am in entire accord with what the gentleman says, and I hope he will bring it up as soon as he can after the Senate has acted. I want to see the vote expedited as soon as possible. I do hope, however, that the gentleman on this highly important and controversial matter will be somewhat lenient with the hour at his disposal and give the opposition some chance to be heard.

Mr. MAY. I had hoped, if I could make a brief statement of the major differences and outline the manner in which they had been agreed upon, we would be able to dispose of it rather promptly, without debate at all; but, of course, under the rules, as I understand it, there is only 1 hour's debate. I will probably control that time. I do not know how I will handle it.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman will be lenient with those who are opposed to it?

Mr. MAY. I was very lenient during the 2 days' debate and 3 days' consideration of it, and I am not disposed to delay it at all.

Mr. FISH. Neither am I beyond the hour, but I think we ought to have a chance to be heard on the final passage of the report.

Mr. MAY. Of course, I cannot say now how I will allot the time until the Members on the floor make their requests for time, but I want to be just as fair about it as I can.

Mr. FISH. Then I put in my request right now.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that I make this further statement, that if anything should happen so that the conference report does not come up tomorrow, it will be the purpose of the committee to take it up the next day, on Saturday, if it can be reached.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That (a) the Congress hereby declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

"(b) The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service.

"(c) The Congress further declares, in accordance with our traditional military policy as expressed in the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended, that it is essential that the strength and organization of the National Guard, 'as an integral part of the first-line defenses of this Nation,' be at all times maintained and assured. To this end, it is the intent of the Congress that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed for the national security in excess of those of the Regular Army and those in active training and service under section 3 (b), the National Guard of the United States, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall be ordered to active Federal service and continued therein so long as such necessity exists.

"SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States, and of every male alien residing in the United States, who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six, to present himself for and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places, and in such manner and in such age group or groups, as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed hereunder."

"SEC. 3. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, every male citizen of the United States, and every male alien residing in the United States who has declared his intention to become such a citizen, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six at the time fixed for his registration, shall be liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized from time to time, whether or not a state of war exists, to select and induct into the land and naval forces of the United States for training and service, in the manner provided in this Act, such number of men as in his judgment is required for such forces in the national interest: Provided, That within the limits of the quota determined under section 4 (b) for the subdivision in which he resides, any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of eighteen and thirty-six, shall be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction into the land or naval forces of the United States for the training and service prescribed in subsection (b), but no person who so volunteers shall be inducted for such training and service so long as he is deferred after classification: Provided further, That no man shall be inducted for training and service under this Act unless and until he is acceptable to the land or naval forces for such training and service and his physical and mental fitness for such training and service has been satisfactorily determined: Provided further, That no men shall be inducted for such training and service until adequate provision shall have been made for such shelter, sanitary facilities, water supplies, heating and lighting arrangements, medical care, and hospital accommodations, for such men, as may be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, to be essential to public and personal health: Provided further, That except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time under subsection (b) more than nine hundred thousand men inducted under the provisions of this Act. The men inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall be assigned to camps or units of such forces.

"(b) Each man inducted under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a training and service period of twelve consecutive months, unless sooner discharged, except that whenever the Congress has declared that the national interest is imperiled, such twelve-month period may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interests of national defense.

"(c) Each such man, after the completion of his period of training and service under subsection (b), shall be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States; and until he attains the age of forty-five, or until the expiration of a period of ten years after such transfer, or until he is discharged from such reserve component, whichever occurs first, he shall be deemed to be a member of such reserve component and shall be subject to such additional training and service as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law: Provided, That any man who completes at least twelve months' training and service in the land forces under subsection (b), and who thereafter serves satisfactorily in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard for a period of at least two years, shall, in time of peace, be relieved from any liability to serve in any reserve components of the land or naval forces of the United States and from further liability for the training and service under subsection (b), but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent any such man, while in a reserve component of such forces, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(d) With respect to the men inducted for training and service under this Act there shall be paid, allowed, and extended the same pay, allowances, pensions, disability and death compensation, and other benefits as are provided by law in the case of other enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land or naval forces to which they are assigned, and after transfer to a reserve component of the land or naval forces as provided in subsection (c) there shall be paid, allowed, and extended with respect to them the same benefits as are provided by law in like cases with respect to other members of such reserve component. Men in such training and service and men who have been so transferred to reserve components shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

"(e) Persons inducted into the land forces of the United States under this Act shall not be employed beyond the limits of the Western Hemisphere except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands.

"(f) Nothing contained in this or any other Act shall be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States for training and service under this Act, or to members of the reserve components of such forces now or hereafter on any type of active duty, who, prior to their induction or commencement of active duty, were receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation.

"SEC. 4. (a) The selection of men for training and service under section 3 (other than those who are voluntarily inducted pursuant to this Act) shall be made in an impartial manner, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, from the men who are liable for such training and service and who at the time of selection are registered and classified but not deferred or exempted: Provided, That in the selection and training of men under this Act, and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this Act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.

"(b) Quotas of men to be inducted for training and service under this Act shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification, except that credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas. After such quotas are fixed, credits shall be given in filling such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who subsequently become members of such forces. Until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known, the quotas may be based on estimates, and subsequent adjustments therein, shall be made when such actual numbers are known. All computations under this subsection shall be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Public Health Service, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United States Naval Academy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; men who have been accepted for admittance (commencing with the academic year next succeeding such acceptance) to the United States Military Academy as cadets, to the United States Naval Academy as midshipmen, or to the United States Coast Guard Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; cadets of the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of foreign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 2 and shall be relieved from liability for training and service under section 3 (b).

"(b) In time of peace, the following persons shall be relieved from liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States and from liability for training and service under section 3 (b)—

"(1) Any man who shall have satisfactorily served for at least three consecutive years in the Regular Army before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(2) Any man who as a member of the active National Guard shall have satisfactorily served for at least one year in active Federal service in the Army of the United States, and subsequent thereto for at least two consecutive years in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(3) Any man who is in the active National Guard at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration.

"(4) Any man who is in the Officers' Reserve Corps on the eligible list at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein on the eligible list for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the persons enumerated in this subsection, while in reserve components of the land or naval forces of the United States, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(c) (1) The Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States.

"(2) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States, of any person holding an office (other than an office described in paragraph (1) of this subsection) under the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest.

"(d) Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion, and students who are preparing for the ministry in theological or divinity schools recognized as such for more than one year prior to the date of enactment of this Act, shall be exempt from training and service (but not from registration) under this Act.

"(e) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States of those men whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations or employment, or whose activity in other endeavors, is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest. The President is also authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States (1) of those men in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their deferment advisable, and (2) of those men found to be physically, mentally, or morally deficient or defective. No deferment from such training and service shall be made in the case of any individual except upon the basis of the status of such individual, and no such deferment shall be made of individuals by occupational groups or of groups of individuals in any plant or institution.

"(f) Any person who, during the year 1940, entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–1941—

"(1) at any college or university which grants a degree in arts or science, to pursue a course of instruction satisfactory completion of which is prescribed by such college or university as a prerequisite to either of such degrees; or

"(2) at any university described in paragraph (1), to pursue a course of instruction to the pursuit of which a degree in arts or science is prescribed by such university as a prerequisite;

and who, while pursuing such course of instruction at such college or university, is selected for training and service under this Act prior to the end of such academic year, or prior to July 1, 1941, whichever occurs first, shall, upon his request, be deferred from induction into the land or naval forces for such training and service until the end of such academic year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

"(g) Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction, be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. Any such persons claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal to the appropriate appeal board provided for in section 10 (a) (2). Upon the filing of such appeal with the appeal board, the appeal board shall forthwith refer the matter to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing by the Department or the proper agency thereof. After appropriate inquiry by such agency, a hearing shall be held by the Department of Justice with respect to the character and good faith of the objections of the person concerned, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The Department shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend to the appeal board (1) that if the objector is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, he shall be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) that if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, he shall in lieu of such induction be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after such hearing the Department finds that his objections are not sustained, it shall recommend to the appeal board that such objections be not sustained. The appeal board shall give consideration to but shall not be bound to follow the recommendation of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board, in making its decision. Each person whose claim for exemption from combatant training and service because of conscientious objections is sustained shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors.

"(h) No exception from registration, or exemption or deferment from training and service, under this Act, shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

"Sec. 6. The President shall have authority to induct into the land and naval forces of the United States under this Act no greater number of men than the Congress shall hereafter make specific appropriation for from time to time.

"Sec. 7. No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in or be inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States: Provided, That the clothing or enlistment allowances authorized by law shall not be regarded as bounties within the meaning of this section. No person liable for service in such forces shall be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; no substitute as such shall be received, enlisted, enrolled, or inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States; and no person liable for training and service in such forces under section 3 shall be permitted to escape such training and service or be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his period of such training and service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from such training and service or liability therefor.

"Sec. 8. (a) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service, who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes his period of training and service under section 3 (b) shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such period of training and service, which shall include a record of any special proficiency or merit attained. In addition, each such person who is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service shall be given a physical examination at the beginning of such training and service and a medical statement showing any physical defects noted upon such examination; and upon the completion of his period of training and service under section 3 (b), each such person shall be given another physical examination and shall be given a medical statement showing any injuries, illnesses or disabilities suffered by him during such period of training and service.

"(b) In the case of any such person who, in order to perform such training and service, has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within forty days after he is relieved from such training and service—

"(A) if such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such person shall be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

"(B) if such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

"(C) if such position was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

"(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of training and service in the land or naval forces, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was inducted into such forces, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.

"(d) Section 3 (c) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of active military service, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was ordered into such service, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.'

"(e) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (b) or subsection (c), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions, and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney or comparable official for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney or official, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

"(f) Section 3 (d) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: ', and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action'.

"(g) The Director of Selective Service herein provided for shall establish a Personnel Division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for, members of the reserve components of the land and naval forces of the United States who have satisfactorily completed any period of active duty, and persons who have satisfactorily completed any period of their training and service under this Act.

"(h) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in person or by absentee ballot in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, whether he is within or outside of such State at the time of such election, if under the laws of such State he is entitled so to vote in such election; but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require granting to any such person a leave of absence for longer than one day in order to permit him to vote in person in any such election.

"(i) It is the expressed policy of the Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this Act such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

"SEC. 9. (a) The President is empowered, whenever he determines that it is necessary for the common defense, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any person for such products or materials as may be required, and which are of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such persons.

"(b) Compliance with all such orders for products or materials shall be obligatory upon the person with whom such orders are placed, and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore or thereafter placed with such person.

"(c) If any person who owns or operates any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, or who owns or operates any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, is capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy—

"(1) refuses to give to the United States such preference in the execution of the orders so placed with such person, or

"(2) refuses to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or

"(3) refuses to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment,

then, in either such case, if the public necessity is immediate, and the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply, and if such circumstances are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy and to require the exercise of the power hereby created in respect of the property to be taken over, or transformed, or operated, the President, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of such plant, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy, to manufacture therein such products or materials as may be required.

"(d) The compensation to be paid to any such person for its products or materials, or as rental for any manufacturing plant of which possession is so taken while it is used by the United States, shall be fair and just, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be. If the amount so determined is unsatisfactory in any case, such person shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, when added to the payment already received, will be just compensation for such products or materials, or as rental for the use by the United States of such manufacturing plant, as the case may be, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph (20), and section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended, or as otherwise provided by law.

"(e) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in any such plant.

"(f) For the purpose of this section, the term 'person' includes any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, and organized manufacturing industry.

"(g) The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the Act entitled 'An Act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes', approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act Numbered 671, Seventy-sixth Congress), are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. (a) The President is authorized—

"(1) to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act;

"(2) to create and establish a Selective Service System, and shall provide for the classification of registrants and of persons who volunteer for induction under this Act on the basis of availability for training and service, and shall establish within the Selective Service System civilian local boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivision corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials. No member of any such local board shall be a member of the land or naval forces of the United States, but each member of any such local board shall be a civilian who is a citizen of the United States residing in the county or political subdivision corresponding thereto in which such local board has jurisdiction under rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized, all questions or claims with respect to inclusion for, or exemption or deferment from, training and service under this Act of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Appeal boards and agencies of appeal within the Selective Service System shall be composed of civilians who are citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the Selective Service System, or of any such local or appeal board or other agency, shall be excepted from registration, or deferred from training and service, as provided for in this Act, by reason of his status as such officer, member, agent or employee;

"(3) to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fix the compensation at a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum, of a Director of Selective Service who shall be directly responsible to him and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That any officer on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or of any reserve component thereof or any officer or employee of any department or agency of the United States who may be assigned or detailed to any office or position to carry out the provisions of this act (except to offices or positions on local boards, appeal boards, or agencies of appeal established or created pursuant to section 10 (a) (2)) may serve in and perform the functions of such office or position without loss of or prejudice to his status as such officer in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard or reserve component thereof, or as such officer or employee in any department or agency of the United States: Provided further, That any person so appointed, assigned or detailed to a position the compensation in respect of which is at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed, assigned or detailed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided further, That the President may appoint necessary clerical and stenographic employees for local boards and fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and without regard to the provisions of civil-service laws.

"(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this Act; and

"(5) to purchase such printing, binding, and blankbook work from public, commercial, or private printing establishments or binderies upon orders placed by the Public Printer or upon waivers issued in accordance with section 12 of the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, as amended by the Act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475), and to obtain by purchase, loan, or gift such equipment and supplies for the Selective Service System as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, with or without advertising or formal contract; and

"(6) to prescribe eligibility, rules, and regulations governing the parole for service in the land or naval forces, or for any other special service established pursuant to this Act, of any person convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this Act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to delegate and provide for the delegation of any authority vested in him under this Act to such officers, agents, or persons as he may designate or appoint for such purpose or as may be designated or appointed for such purpose pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"(c) In the administration of this Act voluntary services may be accepted. Correspondence necessary in the execution of this Act may be carried in official penalty envelopes.

"(d) The Chief of Finance, United States Army, is hereby designated, empowered, and directed to act as the fiscal, disbursing, and accounting agent of the Director of Selective Service in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 11. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying out any of the provisions of this Act, or the rules or regulations made or directions given thereunder, who shall knowingly fail or neglest to perform such duty, and any person charged with such duty, or having and exercising any authority under said Act, rules, regulations, or directions who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making, of any false, improper, or incorrect registration, classification, physical or mental examination, deferment, induction, enrollment, or muster, and any person who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making of, any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or unfitness or liability or nonliability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this Act, or rules, regulations, or directions made pursuant thereto, or who otherwise evades registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this Act, or who knowingly counsels, aids, or abets another to evade registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this Act, or of said rules, regulations, or directions, or who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under or in the execution of this Act, or rules or regulations made pursuant to this Act, or any person or persons who shall knowingly hinder or interfere in any way by force or violence with the administration of this Act or the rules or regulations made pursuant thereto, or conspire to do so, shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than five years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, or if subject to military or naval law may be tried by court martial, and, on conviction, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial may direct. No person shall be tried by any military or naval court martial in any case arising under this Act unless such person has been actually inducted for the training and service prescribed under this Act or unless he is subject to trial by court martial under laws in force prior to the enactment of this Act. Precedence shall be given by courts to the trial of cases arising under this Act.

"SEC. 12. (a) The monthly base pay of enlisted men of the Army and the Marine Corps shall be as follows: Enlisted men of the first grade, $126; enlisted men of the second grade, $84; enlisted men of the third grade, $72; enlisted men of the fourth grade, $60; enlisted men of the fifth grade, $54; enlisted men of the sixth grade, $36; enlisted men of the seventh grade, $30; except that the monthly base pay of enlisted men with less than four months' service during their first enlistment period and of enlisted men of the seventh grade whose inefficiency or other unfitness has been determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, shall be $21. The pay for specialists' ratings, which shall be in addition to monthly base pay, shall be as follows: First class, $30; second class, $25; third class, $20; fourth class, $15; fifth class, $6; sixth class, $3. STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Age limits

The Senate bill required the registration of every male citizen, and every male alien residing in the United States or its possessions who had declared his intention to become a citizen, between the ages of 21 and 31 at the time fixed for his registration. Under the Senate bill the phrase "between the ages of 21 and 31" was defined to refer to men who had attained the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and had not attained the thirty-first anniversary of the day of their birth. The Senate bill also provided that persons between the ages of 18 and 35, regardless of race or color, should be afforded an opportunity to be voluntarily inducted into the land or naval forces (including aviation units) for the training and service described in the bill. After a man had completed his period of training and service, the Senate bill provided that he should be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces until the provisions of the bill became inoperative, or until the expiration of 10 years or until he was discharged from such reserve component, whichever event occurred first.

The House amendment required registration of those between the ages of 21 and 45, which was defined as referring to men who had reached the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and had not reached the forty-fifth anniversary. Persons between the ages of 18 and 35 were to be afforded an opportunity to volunteer to be inducted into the land or naval forces for the training and service prescribed in the amendment. After the period of training and service had been completed, the House amendment provided that the person so completing such training and service should be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces until the expiration of 10 years, or until he attained the age of 45, or until he was discharged, whichever occurred first.

The conference agreement provides that all male citizens, and all male aliens residing in the United States who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 21 and 36 shall present themselves for registration and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places and in such manner and in such age groups as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Every such person who is between such ages at the time fixed for his registration and who is not excepted from registration by other provisions of the conference agreement is made liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States. Any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of 18 and 36, is to be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction, but no person who so volunteers is to be inducted so long as he is deferred after classification. No person is to be inducted unless he is acceptable to the land or naval forces. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the House amendment relating to a person's service in a reserve component of the land or naval forces until the age of 45 is reached, or until 10 years after the transfer to such Reserve component, or until he is discharged, whichever occurs first. Under the conference agreement, the phrase "between the ages of 21 and 36" is defined as referring to those who have attained the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and who have not attained the thirty-sixth anniversary of such day. The conference agreement defines "land forces" and "naval forces" to include aviation units thereof.

Postponement of induction for 60 days

The House amendment authorized the President to issue, as soon as possible after the enactment of the bill, a call for volunteers between the ages of 18 and 35, and another such call at any time after January 1, 1941, and to induct into the land or naval forces for training and service as many of the men who volunteer as did not exceed the number of men for whom the call was issued. If upon the expiration of 60 days after the issuance of either of such calls the President found that the number of qualified men who had volunteered was less than the number for whom the call was issued, he was authorized to select and induct into the land or naval forces such number of qualified men selected through the selective-service system as when added to the number who had volunteered would equal the number for whom he issued the call. Until the expiration of 60 days from the date of the issuance by the President of the second call no man was to be inducted into the land or naval forces under any other provision of the bill, except that registration, classification, and selection under such other provisions could take place. There was no similar provision in the Senate bill.

The conference agreement omits this provision of the House amendment.

Provision authorizing the taking over of private manufacturing facilities

The Senate bill provided that whenever the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy determined that any existing manufacturing plant or facility was necessary for the national defense and was unable to arrive at any agreement with the owner for its use or operation by the War Department or the Navy Department, the Secretary, under the direction of the President, was authorized to institute condemnation proceedings with respect to such plant or facility and to acquire it under the act of February 26, 1931. Upon the filing of a declaration of taking in accordance with the provisions of such act, the Secretary was authorized to take immediate possession of the plant or facility and operate it, either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms pending the determination of the issue. Nothing in this provision was to be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in the plant or facility.

Under the House amendment the President was empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place orders for any product or material that might be required and which could be produced by the company concerned. Compliance with the order was made obligatory. Upon the refusal of the company to comply with the order, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Department, was authorized to take immediate possession of the plant to manufacture therein the product or material required. Failure to comply with the provisions was made subject to imprisonment for not more than 3 years and to a fine of not exceeding $50,000. The compensation to be paid for the products and material or as rental for the use of the plant or facility while used by the United States was required to be fair and just. Nothing in the provision was to be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in the plant. The House amendment also repealed the first and second provisos of the act of June 28, 1940, entitled "An act to expedite the national defense, and for other purposes."

The conference agreement contains provisions similar to those contained in the House amendment, except that before the President is authorized to exercise the power of taking over the plant or facility, the conference agreement provides that the public necessity must be immediate, and the emergency in the public service imperative, and such as will not admit of resort to any other source of supply, and the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy must certify to the circumstances, and that such circumstances require the exercise of the power created in respect of the property to be taken over or operated.

The conference agreement also provides that the compensation to be paid to any person for its products or materials, or as rental for its plant of which possession is taken, shall be fair and just, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as the case may be. If the amount so determined is unsatisfactory, such person is entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, when added to the payment already received, will be just compensation, in the manner provided for in the case of suits against the United States under the Judicial Code. No special penalty is provided for violations of this provision, inasmuch as the general penalty section is applicable to such violations. In the conference agreement this general penalty section is substantially the same as the penalty section in both the Senate bill and the House amendment.

Conscientious objectors

The Senate bill provided that nothing therein contained was to be construed as requiring any person to be subject to combatant training or service who by reason of religious training or belief is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. All persons claiming such exemption because of such conscientious objections were to be listed on a Register of Conscientious Objectors at the time of their classification by a local board, and their names at once referred by the local board to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing. After appropriate inquiry by the appropriate agency of the Department of Justice, a hearing was to be held by the Department of Justice in the case of each such person with respect to the character and good faith of his objections. If the objections were found by the Department to be sustained, it was to recommend that (1) the objector be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if the objector was found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service that he be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after the hearing the objections were found not to be sustained, the objector and the local board were to be immediately notified, the name of the objector was then to be removed from the Register of Conscientious Objectors, and the objector was thereafter to be liable for the training and service provided for in the bill. If within 5 days after the date of the findings by the Department of Justice, the objector or the local board gave notice to the other of disagreement with the findings, the local board was to refer the matter for final determination to an appropriate appeal board.

Under the House amendment the character and good faith of the objection of a conscientious objector were to be determined by the local board, subject to the right of appeal by the objector to an appropriate appeal board.

Under the conference agreement, if the objections are not sustained by the local board in the first instance, the objector is given the right to appeal to the appropriate appeal board. Upon the filing of such appeal the appeal board is directed forthwith to refer the matter to the Department of Justice for an inquiry and hearing. After appropriate inquiry by the proper agency of the Department of Justice, a hearing is to be held by the Department with respect to the character and good faith of the objections. If the Department finds the objections to be sustained, it is to recommend to the appeal board (1) that the objector, if he is inducted under the act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if it is found that he is conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction that he be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. In making its decision the appeal board is to consider the record on appeal from the local board, together with the recommendations, which it is not bound to follow, by the Department of Justice. All persons whose claims for exemption under this provision because of conscientious objection are sustained are to be listed by the local board on a Register of Conscientious Objectors.

Limitation on number of men to be inducted

The Senate bill provided that there should not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time in time of peace more than 900,000 men inducted under the provisions of the bill.

The House amendment provided that, except in time of war, there should not be in active training or service in the land and naval forces of the United States at any one time more than a million men inducted under the bill.

The conference agreement provides that except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time for the 12-month training and service period more than 900,000 men inducted under the bill.

Deferments of public officers

The Senate bill provided that the Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia, and other executive officers of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, whose continued service in the executive office held by them was found necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest, should, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

The House amendment provided that the Vice President of the United States, and the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, except judges of inferior courts not of record, of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, while holding such official position shall be deferred (which deferred classification might be waived) from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

The conference agreement provides that the Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia, shall be deferred from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized by the conference agreement under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to defer training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States of any person holding any office (other than an office described above) under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found, in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) (relating to local boards), to be necessary to the public health, safety, or interest.

Postponement of induction of certain students

The House amendment provided that in the case of students at certain colleges and universities who during the year 1940 entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–41, the induction of such student was at his request to be deferred until the end of such academic year but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

The conference agreement contains this provision of the House amendment.

Selective Service System

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided for the creation of a selective service system. The Senate bill provided that the Director of Selective Service should receive compensation at a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum. Under the House amendment the Director's compensation was to be fixed by the President. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect. The conference agreement also provides that officers on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or in reserve components thereof, and officers and employees of any department or agency of the United States, who may be assigned or detailed to any office or position to carry out the provisions of the act, may serve and perform the functions of such office or position without loss or prejudice to their status as such officers or employees. Thus, Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard officers, or officers of reserve components thereof, so detailed or assigned will continue to receive the same pay, allowances, and benefits (including promotional and longevity rights and privileges), and all other rights and privileges that they have at the time of such detail or assignment and that they would continue to receive had they not been so detailed or assigned. The conference agreement also provides that any person appointed, assigned, or detailed to a position in the Selective Service System the compensation in respect of which is at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed, assigned, or detailed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. A similar provision was contained in the Senate bill. Clerical and stenographic employees for local boards may, under the conference agreement, be appointed and compensated without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923 as amended.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that the members of the local boards and the boards and agencies of appeal must be civilians and not connected with the Military Establishment. The provisions of the House amendment in this respect are contained in the conference agreement, and it is further provided that under no circumstances can Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard officers, either on the active or retired list, be assigned or detailed to a position of member of any such board or agency.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment directed the Director of Selective Service to establish a personnel division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of persons who satisfactorily completed their training and service under the act, and to aid them in finding employment elsewhere if such replacement in their former positions was impossible or unreasonable. Under the Senate bill the same service was to be extended to members of the reserve components. The conference agreement provides that the director shall establish a personnel division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for, members of the reserve components of the land and naval forces who have satisfactorily completed any period of active duty, and persons who have satisfactorily completed their training and service under the act.

Jurisdiction of courts martial

The Senate bill provided that persons subject to the bill who fail to report for duty as ordered should be tried exclusively in the district courts of the United States and not by military and naval courts martial, unless such persons had actually been inducted for the training and service prescribed in the bill or unless they were subject to trial by court martial under laws in force prior to the enactment of the bill. The House amendment in such cases gave the courts martial and the district courts concurrent jurisdiction, and made failure of persons to report for duty subject to the laws and regulations concerning that branch of the land and naval forces to which they were assigned from the date they were required by the terms of the order to obey the same, even though they had not actually been inducted.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect.

Physical examinations

The Senate bill provided that each person inducted under the bill was to be given a physical examination at the beginning of his training and service, together with a medical statement showing any physical defects noted on such examination. Upon the completion of the period of training and service, he was to be given another physical examination, together with a medical statement showing any injuries, illnesses, or disabilities suffered by him during the period of his training and service.

The House amendment provided that the induction of a person into the land or naval forces of the United States should not be deemed to be complete until his physical and mental fitness for military or naval service should have been satisfactorily determined.

The conference agreement contains provisions similar both to the provisions of the Senate bill, as well as the provisions of the House amendment.

Authority to accept compensation from private employers

The House amendment provided that nothing contained therein or in any other act was to be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted into the land or naval forces under the provisions of the bill, or to members of the reserve component thereof now on or hereafter placed on any type of active duty, which persons and members were, prior to their induction for active duty, receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation. There was no similar provision in the Senate bill.

The conference agreement contains provisions similar to the House amendment in this respect with the omission of a provision contained in the House amendment limiting its application to persons below the grade of captain.

Persons discharged from private employment within 30 days prior to enactment of act—presumption as to cause of discharge

The Senate bill provided that any person who had been required to leave a position in the employ of a private employer, other than a temporary position, within 30 days prior to the enactment of the bill should be deemed prima facie to have left such position in order to perform the service required under the bill. This provision had the effect of requiring reinstatement by the employer after the completion of the employee's period of training and service. There was no similar provision in the House amendment.

The conference agreement omits this provision of the Senate bill.

No discrimination on account of race or color

The House amendment provided that in the selection and training of men as well as in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of the act there was to be no discrimination against any person on account of race, creed, or color. The Senate bill contained no similar provision of general application.

The conference agreement provides that in the selection and training of men as well as in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of the act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.

Employment of Communists and members of the German-American Bund

The House amendment provided that it was the policy of Congress that whenever a vacancy was caused in the employment rolls in business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of the act, such vacancy should not be filled by any person who was not a citizen of the United States or who was a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund. The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House amendment in this respect except that the provisions relating to persons not citizens of the United States is omitted.

Parole of persons convicted of violations of act

The Senate bill authorized the President to prescribe eligibility, rules, and regulations governing the parole for service in the land or naval forces, or in any other special service established pursuant to the act, of any person convicted of a violation of any provision of the act. There was no similar provision contained in the House amendment.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect.

Extension of Vinson-Trammell Act to Army and Navy ordnance

The Senate bill provided that the Vinson-Trammell Act should be applicable with respect to contracts hereafter entered into for weapons, munitions, or other military equipment procured by the Ordnance Department of the Army, and by the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy, to the same extent and in the same manner as such provisions are applicable to contracts for aircraft. The House amendment contained no similar provision. The conference agreement omits this provision of the Senate bill.

Increase in base pay of Army

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment increased the base pay of enlisted men of the Army during the period during which the bill is to be in effect. The Senate provision was also made applicable tc the Marine Corps. The conference agreement also makes this increase applicable to the Marine Corps, and provides that enlisted men of the Navy shall be entitled to receive at least the same pay and allowances as provided for enlisted men in similar grades in the Army. Under the conference agreement the increase in base pay provided for is to be effective on October 1, 1940, and is to be permanent.

Amendment to Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment made certain provisions of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918, applicable with respect to the persons inducted for the training and service under the bill. The House amendment in addition amended that act by providing that nothing in section 301 thereof (relating to installment contracts) should prevent the termination or cancelation of a contract, or the repossession of property purchased under the contract, by mutual agreement of the parties thereto or their assignees. The conference agreement contains a similar provision, but requires that the agreement for termination, cancelation, or repossession be executed in writing subsequent to the making of the original contract and during the period of military service of the person concerned.

Definition of dependent

The House amendment defined "dependent" of a person registered under the bill to include only an individual (1) who is dependent in fact on such person for support in a reasonable manner, and (2) whose support in such manner depends on income earned by such person in a business, occupation, or employment. The Senate bill did not contain any comparable provision.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House amendment in this respect.

Protection of voting rights

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that persons inducted should, during their period of training and service, be permitted to vote by absentee ballot in the State of which they are residents if under the laws of such State they are entitled to vote in such election. The conference agreement provides that any person inducted for training and service under the act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in person or by absentee ballot in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, whether he is within or outside of such State at the time of the election, if under the laws of the State he is entitled so to vote at such election. It is further provided that nothing in this provision should be construed to require granting to any such person a leave of absence for longer than 1 day in order to permit him to vote in person at any such election.

Exemptions from registration

The Senate bill provided, in addition to those excepted from registration under both the Senate bill and the House amendment, that commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Public Health Service should be excepted from registration. The conference agreement also provides for this exemption.

Adequate housing, etc., for persons inducted

The House amendment provided that induction should not be effected until adequate provision had been made for proper housing of the men selected for training and service. The term "housing" was defined to include such sanitary facilities, adequate water supplies, heating and lighting systems, medical care and hospital accommodations, as are in general accepted by the United States Public Health Service as essential to public and personal health. The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The conference agreement contains provisions similar to those contained in the House amendment, but leaves the determination to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be.

Expiration date

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that the act was to become inoperative and cease to apply on and after May 15, 1945, unless continued in effect by Congress. The House amendment excepted from this provision the provisions relating to service in the reserve components of the land and naval forces. The conference agreement also excepts from the expiration provision the provisions providing for the extension of pensions, disability allowances, etc., to men inducted for training and service under the act, and the provisions increasing the Army and Marine Corps base pay. The conference agreement also excepts from the expiration provisions the provisions creating a personnel division in the Selective Service System to aid persons who have performed their training and service under the act or who are members of reserve components who have performed their active service to secure employment.

Whereas for many years past the anthracite industry of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has been suffering from widespread unemployment, unequal distribution of working time among mine workers and producers, insolvency of a large number of operating units, and mining in disregard of sound principles of conservation; and

Whereas acting under the authority of Pennsylvania statutes for the purpose of rehabilitating the anthracite industry and conserving anthracite deposits, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in conjunction with the mine workers and producers, has established and is now administering an anthracite emergency program; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States should be informed as to the relation of said plan to effective conservation and to consumers' interests in States other than the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and study the advisability of Federal action to supplement said plan: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That three Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker to act as a committee to study the anthracite emergency program, its operations and effects, report the results of said study and make suitable recommendations to Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this is just to create a committee of three to investigate, without any authority to subpena or call anybody before it, and without any appropriation whatever?

Mr. FLANNERY. That is right.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it the purpose, if this resolution should be agreed to, to go before the Committee on Accounts and ask for funds to carry on the investigation?

Mr. FLANNERY. No. The anthracite industry has apparently solved its own problems in Pennsylvania. It may or may not be necessary later to enact legislation to effectuate that program, which has already been adopted with the concurrence of the operators, the workmen, and the State officials. It is doubtful whether or not such legislation may be necessary, but if it should be necessary we want to be in a position here so that when the State legislature meets in January we may have had some conferences on the matter.

Mr. MICHENER. Then, all this resolution does is to permit this committee of three to be named by the Speaker to hold some conferences in reference to the Pennsylvania situation. The committee has no probative force and it asks for no money; it just wants to lend its good offices in a good cause.

Mr. FLANNERY. That is right.

Mr. BOLAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand this resolution it will have a great tendency to eliminate the bootlegging of coal, which we have in Pennsylvania. As I understand the resolution, this is the only way to get to the bottom of it and to help that situation. Is that right?

Mr. FLANNERY. It also may contribute to that.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this will apply only to Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLANNERY. To the anthracite industry, that is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE NAUTICAL SCHOOL

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 603) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish to the State of Pennsylvania a vessel suitable for the use of the Pennsylvania State nautical school, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States Maritime Commission is authorized, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, to furnish to the State of Pennsylvania for use by the Pennsylvania State nautical school a vessel suitable for merchant marine training, together with all her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation.

SEC. 2. Any department or independent agency of the Government is hereby authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to supply a suitable vessel for such use by the United States Maritime Commission: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service to which it is assigned.

SEC. 3. Any vessel furnished under the authority of this joint resolution shall be and remain the property of the United States and shall be maintained in good repair by the United States Maritime Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state just what the resolution is intended to accomplish?

Mr. WALTER. The adoption of this resolution will permit the Navy Department to turn over to the Maritime Commission a suitable vessel that can be used by the school ship Philadelphia. The present vessel has been condemned, and they cannot even take it out of the Delaware River. It is tied up in the harbor now. Unless this resolution is adopted, the school ship, which has been in existence since 1889, will not be able to continue the work that has supplied so many very fine officers for our Navy. There is not a cent of money involved. The title to the vessel remains in the United States. This joint resolution merely permits the school ship to use any naval vessel that the Navy Department sees fit to turn over to the Maritime Commission.

Mr. MICHENER. There is legislation pending in Congress now, as I recall, to appropriate $10,000,000 to expedite, extend, amplify, and carry out this type of work. I am wondering about this. This is to be a naval ship turned over to the Maritime Commission. Will it be necessary to get the opinion of the Attorney General and to have the Chief of Operations be compelled to sign a certificate, inasmuch as this is a naval vessel, as was done in the case of the 50 destroyers recently? Will the President be permitted to go on and turn over any overage vessel he sees fit to the State of Pennsylvania for the purpose of carrying out the terms of this resolution?

Mr. WALTER. I just do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is it not true that the Pennsylvania Nautical Schoolship Annapolis is alongside of its dock at Philadelphia and not permitted to go to sea because it has been declared unseaworthy? Is it not a fact that the Pennsylvania Nautical School will graduate a class of cadets in a few weeks, and unless a vessel is made available immediately the annual fall cruise of this graduating class must be postponed?

Mr. WALTER. That is not entirely correct.

Mr. BLAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the resolution was considered this morning by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries as an emergency proposition and reported unanimously by that committee. We thought that it was necessary that Pennsylvania should have a ship that it could at least take out of the Delaware River.

Mr. MICHENER. If there were one reason I would object to the consideration of a bill of this kind, it would be that it was given hasty consideration in the name of "emergency." We have had so much "emergency." The term "emergency" has lately been changed into "national defense." The country is getting tired of emergency. The fate of the Republic does not depend on this transfer. It is not so important that we should place so much stress on the question of emergency. If we cannot get this thing out without the emergency complex, then perhaps we should let it go until later.

Mr. BLAND. The emergency, if the gentleman will pardon me, to which I referred, was the emergency of the school ship of the Pennsylvania State Nautical School and not to the country. [Laughter.] They need this ship.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia has stated that an emergency exists as to the school ship for the Pennsylvania Nautical School, having in mind, I presume, the graduation of the cadets now in training.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; and the continuation of the services of the school ship.

Mr. McGRANERY. And without this ship they would not be able to continue their training in seamanship?

Mr. BLAND. I do not see how you can train boys with a ship that cannot even go out in the river and has been condemned absolutely for navigation purposes, and the purpose of this is to supply a ship that can at least go out on the river.

Mr. WALTER. May I say to my distinguished friend from Michigan that this legislation would not be necessary if it were not for an appropriation act of several years ago. Ordinarily, or in the absence of legislation of that sort, the Navy Department would have the authority to turn a suitable vessel over to a State, just as they turned over the vessel that is now being used and is no longer suitable.

Mr. MICHENER. May I say that I realize that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] would not bring this bill in here under these conditions if it were not a meritorious bill. I serve on a commitee with the gentleman and I know his general reactions. I withdraw my reservation to object.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman understands there is now pending a bill that will provide the State nautical schools of Massachusetts, California, and Pennsylvania with new vessels and that the bill provides for an appropriation of $10,000,000 to cover the cost of construction of these vessels.

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Do I understand, if the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is adopted, it will supersede the bill now pending before the Rules Committee?

Mr. WALTER. Indeed, no. I am very much in favor of that bill which the gentleman has referred to, but, after all, if that bill should become a law, we will still be without a school ship until a ship is constructed.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman realizes it will take at least 2 years to construct new vessels and that the resolution simply provides a temporary vessel for the use of the Pennsylvania Nautical School during that time.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; at least that long.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Regarding national defense and the present emergency, is it not true that the Navy Department has expressed a desire to commission some of these graduates in the regular line of the Navy as well as the Reserve, because of the shortage of officers?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, yes; as a matter of fact, the graduates of all of these schools are commissioned as ensigns in the Naval Reserve.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. And they will commission some of them in the regular line of the Navy under the present emergency?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I have been on board this ship and it is tied up to the dock and they do not dare to take it out into the middle of the river, for fear they may not be able to get it back.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. A few moments ago the gentleman from Michigan propounded a question to the gentleman asking if it was not a fact that the country is getting sick and tired of these measures. May I not ask this question? Is it not a fact that the country is getting sick and tired of the unnecessary delays in legislation?

Mr. TABER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] may be given permission to extend his own remarks and include therein a petition we received from the drought-stricken farmers in the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes after the other special orders heretofore agreed to today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the other special orders of today I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE MILK SITUATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, because of events that have happened in the past several days, I find it necessary at this particular time to rise on the floor of the House to protect the integrity of the committee that I have the pleasure of belonging to, as well as to protect that committee from any criticism that may be heaped upon it in the future because of current events.

So that some of the Members may know what I am about to speak on, let me say that last year it was found necessary to pass a resolution in this House to investigate the milk monopoly that exists in the District of Columbia. The resolution was introduced by our good friend and colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], a member of the Maryland-Virginia Producers Association. The reason for the introduction of this resolution was the fact that the Maryland-Virginia Association, which controlled and monopolized the production and distribution of all milk consumed in the District of Columbia, and nearly all in the northern part of Virginia, and practically all in Baltimore, found there was some bootleg milk, as they called it, coming in from Indiana, from Pennsylvania, from Ohio, from Wisconsin, and from Michigan. They went so far as to solicit the aid of the corporation counsel in the District of Columbia, paid by the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, to protect their interests, and rightly so.

Immediately upon the introduction of this resolution the corporation counsel found it necessary to get six policemen from the District of Columbia, take them away from their police duties, and trail and follow these so-called bootleggers, as he termed them, for 60 days, and follow them all over the country and never has this been done before, not even for murders, and all of this to satisfy the monopoly and all at the expense of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. They trailed them through the State of Pennsylvania, through the counties of Adams, Franklin, and York, where they were also getting some milk—milk that the farmers were glad to sell and make some money.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. No; I will not yield to my friend. You saw fit to attack me and would not yield.

Mr. GROSS. You mentioned my district——

Mr. SCHULTE. I hope you will be a gentleman and obey the rules of the House. They trailed them for 60 days through the counties I have mentioned. There are a great many farmers in the counties of Adams, Franklin, and York in Pennsylvania and near and adjacent to counties here who are very desirous of selling their milk in the District of Columbia, where they may get 25 or 30 cents a gallon for their milk.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I hope the gentleman can understand English. I said "No." I hope you understand that.

The people in his district, the farmers that he is supposed to represent, are among the individuals who are clamoring today for us to knock down this barrier that exists in York, Adams, and Franklin Counties so that those farmers may join with the other farmers who are locked and blocked out of here to sell milk in this very section of the United States that is the highest priced in the country.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania undertook to criticize me. He said:

This organization—

Meaning the milk producers of Maryland and Virginia—has long served this municipality with a quality of milk unsurpassed in any other market.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, for once in his life, is right. That best quality milk came from Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania. He is exactly right "with the best quality," because in tracing this so-called bootleg milk, not only was one particular industry involved or one particular dairy involved, but the Maryland-Virginia producers who were yelling "wolf" were also bootlegging milk in from the same States, to be sold in the District of Columbia, without any inspection whatsoever.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. I have no questions to ask, but I will ask, before the day is over, for 20 minutes to answer your remarks.

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman can have all the rest of the afternoon. I am sure it will be entertaining to the people who want to sit and listen to him. I am sure it will be funny, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania is always amusing.

The gentleman accuses me. He says I am connected with or have some interest in an organization called the Sunshine Dairy, in Indiana. I never heard of the Sunshine Dairy, but I hope and pray, if they are in Indiana that they have been more successful than some of the others in getting products in here and attacking the monopoly that exists in this district.

This particular corporation counsel took these officers away from here for 60 long days trailing this bootleg milk. They finally followed it into the District of Columbia. These men were treated as criminals of the worst type, criminals of the worst kind; the men who brought this milk in, because they attempted to bring decent milk into this holier-than-thou District, reserved only for Maryland-Virginia producers, and the milk trust that exists, and is a part of this combine. But upon testing the milk that came from Pennsylvania, upon testing the milk that came from Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin, it was found far superior to the milk being sold in the District of Columbia that was produced under the so-called rigid rules of the District Health Department.

Mr. GROSS. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman get me more time?

Mr. GROSS. I have no time to give away.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, that is just a part of the story. I want to be decent and fair to my friend who has accused me of practically everything, including that of representing a dairy here. He appeared before the committee. I hate to bring these things up because it is so unfair, but he seemed to respect no one; he saw fit to respect no one connected with this committee. It is a matter of record that he testified before the committee that the plight of the farmers of Pennsylvania was very severe. Oh, it was terrible; so terrible that he as a Member of Congress getting $10,000 a year found it necessary that his wife and children stay home and milk the cows.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. And I have no apologies to make because we work on our farm.

Mr. SCHULTE. That is right.

Mr. GROSS. And if certain people in the district the gentleman represents had done what we do, they would not be doing some of the things they are doing; they would get busy, do their own work, and make a market for their product.

Mr. SCHULTE. I am sorry the gentleman sees fit to attack the producers of the best milk in the country. I am sorry the gentleman found it necessary with men on the W. P. A.——

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SCHULTE. I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SCHULTE. I am sorry the gentleman finds it necessary with men idle in Pennsylvania—Adams, York, and Franklin Counties—men begging for relief in Pennsylvania—that he getting $10,000 a year does not hire one of those men and give him a chance to make a living.

Mr. GROSS. Will not the gentleman please yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. No; I will not yield.

Mr. Speaker, I also made the statement that the committee investigating the milk situation in the District of Columbia had been sold down the river. If the newspapers are telling the truth, and all we know is what we read in the papers, Elwood Seal has handed in his resignation to be effective as of October 31. That is what we read in the papers. He will then join the Maryland-Virginia Producers' Association, a part of this monopoly, as general counsel. Now, this is also part of the trust that admitted violating the law here and bringing in milk. In other words, when I made the statement that the District of Columbia Committee investigating the milk situation in the District of Columbia had been sold down the river evidently I was right at that particular time. And I want to say to my friend that there is not a Chinaman's chance of getting any place in trying to break up this milk monopoly unless we can get some agency of the Federal Government to go in and break it up.

Who are these people that set themselves up as holier than thou? Talk about dictators. Mr. Speaker, right here in the Capital of our Nation is the place to start wiping them out, and I am not referring to the gentleman residing at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, either.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I shall be pleased to yield to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman state that the attorney who was supposed to protect the people of the District has accepted a position as general counsel with the Milk Trust?

Mr. SCHULTE. I will say to my good friend that he is exactly right. During the hearings we found it impossible to get to the bottom of things because of his constant interference.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I shall be pleased to yield to my friend from Chicago.

Mr. McKEOUGH. In the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana, is there any relationship to the date as to which the resignation is to be effective? As I understood the gentleman from Indiana, he stated it was to become effective on October 31. I am wondering whether or not the forward date of resignation is in any way associated with the fact that the gentleman who has served the District as corporation counsel might assume that the Congress would not be in session on October 31, or thereafter, thereby precluding any further investigation of this monopoly that controls the District of Columbia milk? I wonder if there is any connection with that forward date of the effectiveness of his resignation?

Mr. SCHULTE. I do not know. I am giving you some of the high lights and some of the things that were placed in our way during the hearings. This milk monopoly I am criticizing here this afternoon has gone this far: There is one particular dairy in the District of Columbia called the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy, and at one time while the hearings were going on that dairy offered to sell milk in the District of Columbia for 11 cents or 12 cents a quart delivered if they could get inspection. I went down with them and applied for an inspection application, and I was politely told that they did not have the inspectors to go around.

Mr. McKEOUGH. In that connection, it is my recollection at the time this matter was originally before the House it was developed that the standard required for the protection of milk consumers of the District of Columbia was not as high in requirement as that which prevails in the city of Chicago.

Mr. SCHULTE. That is right.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Incidentally, may I take this occasion to indicate to the House that the city of Chicago, very well protected by reason of its regulations in connection with its milk supply, is very happy to secure whatever requirements are needed from the gentleman's State of Indiana, and I point that out merely to indicate that Chicago, whose standard, as I understood it, was at least as high as the District of Columbia, if not higher, is the healthiest city of its size in the world.

Mr. SCHULTE. May I say to the gentleman that after a great many Members of this body who are lawyers read the account in the newspaper that our good friend, the Corporation Counsel, was resigning to join the Maryland-Virginia producers that he was supposed to be fighting because of violating the law and also bootlegging milk here, were dumbfounded and they are severely criticizing that action today, to the extent that some Members have asked for a resolution enjoining any attorney employed by any municipality from accepting a position with any public utility or any organization of the type or kind of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers or any trust for a period of a year. The lawyers in this House resent that action. They are very much surprised this betrayal of a committee, as they call it, would happen, and rightly so. Now, here is a little story: Down in a little place called Occoquan, Va., a milkman was selling milk for 11 cents a quart, and doing a nice business at a profit; but that same crowd was successful in having a State law passed in the State of Virginia, and this milkman came back and told the people that it was necessary for him to charge 14 cents a quart now, that he did not want to charge that, that he had been making money at 11 cents, but the State law said he had to charge 14 cents.

Mr. Speaker, they talk about the nickel milk in the District of Columbia. The mother of a child can have 1 pint a day. Oh, they are generous. One pint of milk to a mother a day. Why is that, or is it as the gentleman from Pennsylvania remarked the other day, as he stated that they might sell it; Heaven forbid. They are afraid that that mother might get sufficient milk. They want to force her to buy more milk. I am talking about mothers on relief. I am talking about people who must accept charity. This monopoly is going to be generous and sell the mothers a pint of milk a day. And the doctors here say at least 2 quarts are necessary and cannot believe that is all they will allow them.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has a special order.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, if it will not be taken out of my time, I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSS. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will answer a question, I will not object

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. Since you from Indiana come in here and are so much concerned about the milk in the District of Columbia, and charge that the people here are getting cheap milk, will the gentleman tell this committee what he has done to give the people of his own district and community cheap milk?

Mr. SCHULTE. I will say to my good friend that they have been getting that long before he started milking a cow.

Mr. Speaker, let me go on further with this. The head of this organization, a Mr. Derrick, was formerly employed by the Department of Agriculture. That is why we cannot get anywhere. He was a former employee of the Department and immediately after the hearings were finished his salary was increased from $10,000 a year to $12,500 a year, and everybody else's salary was increased. Where does that money come from? There is only one place it can come from and that is from the consumers of this milk.

Mr. Speaker, those are the things we resent. We resent placing all of this burden on the backs of the people of the District of Columbia, who have no defense except through the membership of this House, and these people must depend on our help. And they are sure in need of it. Now, here is a good one:

The Maryland-Virginia Producers—and this is a matter of record—testified that not only did they bootleg milk in just as much as any other dairy but, in addition to that, they went so far as to tell the dairies in the District of Columbia that if they could get any business away from the Fairfax-Embassy Dairy that they would sell that milk to them—that is, the other dairies—for 17 cents a gallon on all business that was taken away from the Embassy-Fairfax. Talk about the Fair Trade Commission and downright rottenness. When some of us heard this we could not believe it could happen here. Now, let me say here that there are some members of the Virginia-Maryland Producers Association who did not know this, and, in fairness to them, they objected. But most of the members jump sideways when Mr. Derricks snaps his fingers—and, believe me, they sit down. They do not want a monopoly, but are afraid to say anything. But let us get back to the idea of selling 17-cents-a-gallon milk to all others who could get orders from the Fairfax Dairy.

Any other milk that they got they would have to pay 28 cents a gallon for. Where is our Federal Trade Commission? We called on the Federal Trade Commission and asked them for help. I do not mind telling you as a member of the committee that was investigating this situation that cur hands were tied. We did not have the proverbial Chinaman's chance of getting down deep into it. The further we got the higher the stench reached, and the stench of this thing reached to the high heavens, I am frank to tell you that.

You all know the history of what this combine resorted to, trailing the members of this committee and trying to find them in an embarrassing position—trailing the members of this committee, and using the District police to do it, and even the police resented it. That is how far their "in" really goes in this town. It is one of the greatest rackets that has existed since the time of the bootlegging of whisky. This is really a racket. Our good friend the mayor of New York City, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, former Member of this House, has attempted to break up the monopoly in that city and in the State of New York, and he is making some headway in it.

I do hope that sometime we can give relief to the people of the District of Columbia and help them to solve their problem. The only way we can do that is to give them the right of suffrage, and whether we like it or not is beside the point. If we are going to be honest and fair with the people in the District of Columbia, they must have suffrage so they can clean out some of the departments downtown. Then it is entirely up to those people to regulate their own business to their own wants.

I thank the House for giving me this time to speak about the milk situation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short report of the Dies committee concerning Mr. Byior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

LABOR'S FORGOTTEN MILLIONS

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, people throughout this country have finally caught up with the New Deal. At the Chicago convention we found out a lot of things that we had always suspected. We discovered, for example, that all the talk about cleaning up politics was so much hot air. Even the most loyal followers of the New Deal were shocked at the way the convention was railroaded. When they found that the "angels" of Washington had parked their wings and were using the boys from the back room to do the job, even they got disgusted.

The Chicago convention was bad enough, but we have even worse. The head of the New Deal, the Lord High Executioner himself, had a lot to do with Chicago.

But when he said that he would have no time to engage in "purely political debate" and that he had been forced to "abandon proposed journeys to inspect many of our great national projects from the Alleghenies to the Pacific," he spoke a couple of mouthfuls.

Now it appears that he had his tongue in his cheek when he spoke. Somewhere in all his duties he has dug up enough time to prepare, or have prepared, a speech which he delivered last night over a Nation-wide hook-up. If he has this much time, why not debate with Mr. Willkie?

What has the President done since July 19, when he accepted the first nomination in his second series? From July 19 to September 11, 54 days have elapsed. The President of the United States has been in Washington just 22 of those 54 days. Thirty-two days have been spent outside of Washington, and of those 32 no less than 16 days have been devoted to some of those proposed journeys to inspect national projects about which the President spoke so feelingly on July 19. The President said that he would have neither the time nor the inclination to engage in political debates. What he meant was that he did not have the inclination. The President was deeply concerned over leaving the White House because he required easy access by direct telephone to Europe and Asia. Hyde Park must be very heavily wired, because the President has spent one-half of his time since July 19 right there. Every time a week end rolls around that old yearning to go fishing apparently wins the day from the White House.

The Republicans do not object to the President's recreation; but when he goes fishing in the troubled waters of international politics, we say it is time to stop kidding the public.

We have swallowed enough bait in the last 8 years, and it is just about time that the people of this country got off the hook and started doing a little fishing for the right kind of executive leadership that this country needs.

Most dramatic of all the Roosevelt campaign slogans was his appeal to the Nation's "forgotten man." The very vagueness of the term constituted an open invitation to every citizen of the Nation to include himself among these "forgotten." As one man, millions of Americans suddenly felt that they were coming home; that they had been left out in the cold until the great moment when remembrance dawned.

But no group felt itself more keenly drawn within the hazy outlines of this great new "forgotten" class than the working people of our Nation. Deeply within its membership, labor has felt itself the victim of long discrimination. Our workers feel that their contribution to the development of American prosperity has been the most vital single factor in our phenomenal development, yet they regard their share in the wealth they have helped to create as the least enduring. It is not enough for the people of our land to esteem labor, to honor it with a place in the Nation's councils. Our workers want and need the substantial benefits of increased wages and increased leisure.

To be sure, these processes have been accelerated throughout the last 25 years. Modern social trends have raised wages, shortened hours, and developed a growing body of compensation legislation. Restraints upon the employment of women and children, the fixing of minimum wages, social-security measures have taken us a long way forward. We must recognize that there is still a long way yet to go.

In this fertile soil, the new dealers have planted the conviction that they alone are labor's friends. Like so many of the skillfully conceived suggestions of the present administration, the labor picture of the Republican Party, painted by New Deal artists, is utterly false. The very origins of the party refute the charge; for the Republican Party was born in the minds of free laborers bitterly opposed to the perpetuation of slavery. Nor have we ever forgotten the working people of the Nation. There is nothing historically new in the attempt of the Federal Government to substitute a national labor policy for the individual policies of employers. The purposes of the present administration centering about the organization of labor and the assurance of the right of collective bargaining are no inventions of the New Deal. In the period from 1917 to 1918, the War Labor Board furnished the basic precedent for modern labor policies. The administration of Republican President Calvin Coolidge as far back as 1926 sponsored the Railway Labor Act which contains the essential guaranties of the rights of the laborer. In the 4-year term of President Herbert Hoover, the Norris-LaGuardia Act was passed by a Republican Congress with the precise language adopted by the Democrats for the preamble of their much-publicized N. R. A.

Clearly the Republicans are no less alert to the necessity for safeguarding and extending the rights, privileges, and opportunities of the workingmen and women of this Nation than their opponents. It cannot be asserted that the New Deal has launched a new day for labor without conceding that present-day legislation is the direct product of a long development in which the Republican Party played a glorious part.

It must be clear after 7 years that the administration has been highly inconsistent in its treatment of the Nation's workers. Its policies toward labor, like so many others which have been put forth, are perfect illustrations of the refusal to let its right hand know what its left hand doeth.

From the very outset the meanderings of Democratic national policies were apparent. Section 7–A of the National Industrial Recovery Act was written into the emergency legislation of the Seventy-third Congress in 1933 to "remember" labor. Like its predecessor in American labor legislation, the Clayton Act of 1916, it was hailed as the great step forward, "emancipating" labor. Yet, long before the death of N. R. A. at the hands of the Supreme Court, the phrasing of section 7–A had been proved capable of many diverse and inconsistent interpretations. Within 15 months the New Deal's administrators were themselves at odds over labor policies. Strikes, physical violence, the "sit down," and a general trend in public opinion unsympathetic to labor have followed in the wake of the administration's failure to solve its major problem, unemployment. Today, in 1940, labor is still on the barricades.

Any impartial examination of the position of labor today is discouraging to those who seek the strengthening of the workers' position. Some 8,000,000 men and women are members of labor organizations throughout the Nation. The contest between the leadership of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations has become a bitter battle between two uncompromising groups. Personal attacks by the leaders of both organizations add to the hostility. Public support is solicited by each side. Jurisdictional disputes flare up in plant after plant throughout the Nation. Contests for the approval of workers within every great industry evoke fierce clashes at factory gates and union meetings. The activities of the National Labor Relations Board have completely reversed their early trend. They are no longer concerned primarily with the attitude of employers; instead they are now devoted largely to the settlement of jurisdictional disputes between conflicting unions. The American Federation of Labor declared that the National Labor Relations Board "has brazenly and by official acts declared itself a proponent of the C. I. O., fostering its interests and by the effect of its decrees recruiting membership for the C. I. O."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman has been speaking about the Labor Board?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to read the following from an editorial appearing in the Washington News?

These small-bore New Deal administrators have enjoyed so much self-exaltation in functioning at one and the same time as judge, jury, and prosecutor, and have gloried so much in the power to set off employees against employers, and unions against unions, that they have at times lost sight of the real purposes of the law they administer. Among the results have been sit-downs, jurisdictional strife, and interruptions in pay days to men and women who could ill afford interruptions.

Mr. BENDER. I thank the industrious and distinguished gentleman.

Picket lines are established by one union against the other. In the mining fields, C. I. O.'s United Mine Workers are divided by the American Federation of Labor's Progressive Miners. Negotiations seeking to draw unions affiliated with C. I. O. back into A. F. of L. ranks go on incessantly, and vice versa. The battle lines are drawn. Labor seems hopelessly divided, and the principle of collective bargaining is weakened and endangered. Dissension has spread to the point where it has divided not only the American Federation of Labor from C. I. O. but has also split the membership of C. I. O. itself. The strong International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has left C. I. O. The United Automobile Workers are no longer united. Maritime unions on the Pacific coast have been divided into vigorously opposing forces.

These disquieting circumstances have given the New Deal pause. There have been more strikes under the present national administration than at any other time since the World War era.

But the strike was a weapon which the Government experts of the New Deal had not bargained for in framing their policies. Gen. Hugh Johnson, more than 6 years ago, declared that "Labor does not need to strike under the Roosevelt plan." He insisted that the code system established by N. R. A. offered labor "a complete and highly effective protection of your rights. The plain, stark truth is that you cannot tolerate the strike." Labor's answer was an outbreak of strikes throughout the Nation.

Now, this is a record of the strikes from the year 1930 up to September 1939:

Year	Administration	Number of strikes
1930	Republican	637
1931	do	810
1932	do	841
1933	Democratic	1,695
1934	do	1,856
1935	do	2,014
1936	do	2,172
1937	do	4,470
1938	do	2,772
To September 1939	do	2,721

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And in Michigan this week, the Fisher Plant No. 1 of the Buick Division of General Motors employees, 6,800 of them, have walked out and the plants are closed, not because of any dispute with the employer, but because of a dispute between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

Mr. BENDER. During the months of May, June, and July 1934, strikes hit the Pacific and Gulf Coast ports. Agricultural workers in California, Ohio, and New Jersey; iron and copper miners, textile workers, in Alabama; taxi drivers, theatrical workers, truckers, in New York and Minneapolis walked out on their jobs. In the 8-month period from January to August 1934, 28 workers were killed in strikes and labor disputes. Succeeding months brought no better results. Toledo's Electric Autolite Co. and Akron's rubber plants were hit by devastating strikes which seriously affected the lives of thousands of workers, and the economy of the entire community.

In San Francisco, a general strike stopped work for more than 75,000 employees. Before the matter was closed, 32 men had been wounded and 2 killed. Almost incessantly, major tie-ups of industry have continued to take their toll of national employment. The process has gained momentum yearly. We have had over 9,000 strikes in 3 years. By 1939 the resentment of the general public over increasing union disturbances was reflected in a rising tide of antiunionism. The oft-cited boons of the New Deal had become a boomerang.

The antitrust division of the Federal Government has turned its guns on union officials, representing a revival of the theory that strikes are conspiracies in restraint of trade. In 12 areas of the Nation, inquiries set in motion by the Department of Justice are examining union practices. Only half-hearted efforts to bring the contending factions of labor together have been attempted by the Federal Government. A wave of legislation hostile to the interests of labor has swept the States. Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Minnesota have adopted measures restricting picketing and strikes, and authorizing frequent injunctions in labor disputes. Resentful of the complete failure of his labor program to achieve its objectives, the President of the United States, chief spokesman of the New Deal, has given classic expression to his bitterness with the invocation of a "plague on both the houses" of labor.

You will recall that statement President Roosevelt made in which he said "A plague on both the houses," expressing his contempt for labor and for the division of labor as a result of his own derelictions and his own faulty policies.

Meanwhile the average annual income of all workers, estimated to be $1,450 in 1929, sank to an estimated $1,244 in 1936. The fact that some 750,000 workers were believed to be below the 25 cents per hour Federal minimum wage law indicates that today in 1940 we still have vast groups of industrial laborers who earn less than $572 per year. Hundreds of thousands of agricultural and domestic workers undeniably earn even less.

You know when Roosevelt hands us a sugar-coated pill on the radio, somehow or other with the beautiful oratory he gives us, we are prone to forget the facts. I am reminded of a man who was selling a woman five shares of building and loan stock. This man sat across a table from this dear old lady giving her a strong argument as to why that building and loan stock would be most valuable to her and how it would make a rich woman of her. After he had talked to her for about half an hour this woman, who sat looking at him and listening to him attentively, said, "Why, Mr. Hinchliffe, you have beautiful eyes."

So it is with Mr. Roosevelt. He says a lot of words and you hear the words he says and you unconsciously feel that you are hearing something that is wonderful and great, but all the time he is spreading that baloney and giving you oratory. We still have in this country between eight and ten million people out of work, and those people would not be going to work unless the American Congress had provided an appropriation of over $14,000,000,000 in defense money. Always to get employment in this country we have to spend the taxpayers' money and get the taxpayer further in the hole.

Recently a woman in Toledo was called upon by the census taker. When the census taker asked her about the size of the mortgage on her home she said it was $48,000,000,000. When she made that remark he had her arrested, but the judge acquitted her, because the size of that mortgage was $48,000,000,000. It is almost $50,000,000,000 today. That mortgage is on the home of every laboring man, it is on the home of every farmer in this country. He has gotten us into a mess, and if we permit him to continue for another 4 years, God help us.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The very apt story just related by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, which illustrated so well the characteristics of Mr. Roosevelt, calls to mind a reputed incident in the childhood of our first President, the revered George Washington.

It will be recalled that tradition has it that, when his father found a cherry tree on the old farm which had been cut down and George was asked about it, he courageously replied, "Father, I cannot tell a lie."

Franklin D. Roosevelt prides himself upon being a breaker of precedents. Is this one, established by our first President, another one of those broken by our present President?

Washington said, "I cannot tell a lie." Let those who listen to the President's fireside chats and his public utterances call to mind the statement of our first President as they listen to the charming voice of Mr. Roosevelt.

Just the other day President Roosevelt said that he did not comment on pending legislation. The days of the boy who cut down the cherry tree are in the dim past.

Mr. BENDER. I thank the gentleman from Michigan. To say that the situation is appalling is to put it mildly.

Labor under the New Deal has watched its hopes and aspirations turning into gall and wormwood. The best of organizations disappear when they achieve no tangible result. C. I. O. and A. F. of L. are equally threatened by the persistence of mass unemployment.

Labor has learned that the administration's protestations are meaningless so long as work for the laborer's hands is nowhere in sight. Men need work. Their prospects for getting it are dark indeed if we have a continuation of the New Deal.

Only a Republican victory can change this outlook. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I may have 20 minutes in which to answer the charges of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CONNERY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ACQUISITION OF NAVAL BASES IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House heretofore entered the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interest, is requested to inform the House of Representatives whether in the negotiations of the arrangement between himself and the Secretary of State, representing the Government of the United States, and the British Ambassador at Washington, representing His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, for the acquisition by the United States of naval bases in the Western Hemisphere, and the exchange therefor of certain vessels of the United States, said arrangement contemplated further delivery to Great Britain of additional naval and military equipment and material as would appear from the letter of the British Ambassador to the Secretary of State dated September 2, 1940, wherein it is stated that certain islands in the Caribbean, and in British Guiana will be leased to the United States by the British Government "in exchange for naval and military equipment and material which the United States Government will transfer to His Majesty's Government," and whether the reply of the Secretary of State to said letter of the British Ambassador that "the United States Government will immediately transfer to His Majesty's Government 50 United States naval destroyers," meant that additional naval and military equipment and matériel would follow.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the people of the country are entitled to know whether the administration has in mind transferring to Great Britain more than the 50 destroyers.

We are told, in effect, that more will be transferred, more naval equipment and military equipment and matériel.

This is a privileged resolution, and will go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that although Europe is aflame, untold horrors are going on there, the East is aflame, our Foreign Affairs Committee meets very seldom, and as a committee we are given very little information. I maintain that the people of the country are entitled to know what is going on. The Congress should be told the extent of any danger that we may be in.

I wish to draw attention to a letter of September 3, 1940, from Admiral Stark, written to the President of the United States.

The letter to the President of the United States begins:

1. Concerning the proposed transfer of destroyers to Great Britain in exchange for naval air bases, the Attorney General of the United States, in an opinion, held as follows:

He quotes the opinion of the Attorney General [reading]:

It is my opinion that the Chief of Naval Operations may and should—

Note that—may and should certify under section 14 (a) that such destroyers are not essential to the defense of the United States if in his judgment the exchange of such destroyers for strategic naval and air bases will strengthen rather than impair the total defense of the United States.

May I say here that Admiral Stark is a very fine man and a very gentle, friendly man. Admiral Stark apparently supinely obeyed the command of the Attorney General.

You will note that the Attorney General, in his opinion, said "may and should." Admiral Stark goes on to say [reading]:

2. It is my opinion that an exchange of 50 over-age destroyers for suitable naval and air bases on 99-year leases in Newfoundland, Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Santa Lucia, Trinidad, Antigua, and in British Guiana will strengthen rather than impair the total defense of the United States. Therefore I certify that on the basis of such an exchange and in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, the 50 over-age destroyers of the so-called 1,200-ton type are not essential to the defense of the United States.

And it is signed "H. R. Stark, Admiral, United States Navy, Chief of Naval Operations."

Mr. Speaker, in order to enable the transfer of the destroyers, the Attorney General advised that it could and should be done upon certification by the Chief of Naval Operations that they "are not essential to the defense of the United States if in his judgment the exchange of such destroyers for such naval and air bases will strengthen rather than impair the total defense of the United States." It was necessary to make this broad interpretation, and especially to regard the Navy as a part of our total defense, in order to meet the objections of Admiral Stark, who had testified before Congress that we need all our ships, and who, moreover, felt that the law providing for his certification related solely to the naval defense of the country. As has been proven by many incidents in the past, as well as by the sale and transfer of munitions, this administration regards a law as something to be gotten around, rather than a mandate to be implicitly obeyed.

I wish to draw attention to the fact that it has been generally assumed that the 50 destroyers completed our obligation to Great Britain, but this assumption is obviously incorrect.

It might conceivably cover the destroyer delivery which in my opinion is doubtful, but obviously it does not cover that of patrol boats in paragraph (b) of the Attorney General's opinion to the President nor of military equipment and munitions. Moreover, the transfer required in Lord Lothian's note shows that it is to occur in the future. This means that the transaction does not relate to those that have occurred in the past. We can safely forecast, therefore, that we are committed to a far greater delivery than is indicated by the 50 destroyers.

A reading of the opinion of the Attorney General discloses that in his view it is not a violation of international law to hand over warships actually in service but is a violation of our neutrality if we permit the delivery of vessels such as the mosquito boats being built for a belligerent. This hair-spliting opinion is contrary to The Hague Convention of 1907 signed among other nations by Germany which prohibits the furnishing of vessels or equipment of war by a neutral to a belligerent power. Later, I shall refer to the opinion of the Attorney General, paragraph (h), which violates his opinion as to the illegality of transferring the mosquito boats but permits the transfer "of certain other small patrol boats which though nearly completed are already obsolescent."

I have advocated on this floor the importance of our having certain naval and airplane bases, but I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that while it seems to be generally conceded that it is extremely important for us to have these naval bases for which we have given in exchange the destroyers, it is important—in fact, it is vital—to us to know exactly how far the administration plans to go in giving our naval defense and military equipment to Great Britain or to any other belligerent. The people of this country are very much troubled—in fact, they are greatly alarmed—over the situation in Europe, in England. The sympathies of America apparently are very decidedly with England, but the people of America do not want to weaken our own defense, they do not want to go so far as to send our men overseas; I believe the Members of Congress would be blamed for all time to come and would go down in history in disgrace if we did not see that this country first was adequately protected. Today we are unprepared to defend even ourselves. The administration, in spite of grave warnings from abroad, will have to answer to the charge that it kept vital information from the Congress.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the Foreign Affairs Committee, which will have this privileged resolution before it, should report it out favorably, that when it comes back to the House the House should adopt it, and we should be told exactly what the administration plans to do in aid to Great Britain.

The average man in the street is not protesting against the transfer of the destroyers to Great Britain. The undercover method used in transferring them is what the American people do not like, and what is frightening them. I maintain the problem of preparedness, the existing state of that preparedness, is the business and concern of every citizen of this country—it is not a matter for the sole concern of our President, or of the Cabinet, or of a committee of this Congress. It is just as much the concern of the man in the street as it is of theirs. It is the concern of all of us. Americans do not like undercover methods. They fear them. There is every reason to believe that the negotiations for the transfer of the destroyers had been completed long before the announcement of the trade was made. This is borne out by the fact that the Navy had prepared the destroyers for transfer; the British crews to man the ships were already in Canada awaiting their delivery, and it takes time to organize, equip, and transport such crews. Obviously such preparation could not be made in less than 10 days. It is no wonder that the American people are distrustful and ask what further secret deals are being considered—deals that may vitally affect their national safety.

How far beyond the destroyer deal it is proposed to go nobody knows, but I would call the especial attention of my colleagues to paragraph (b) of Attorney General Jackson's opinion, submitted to the President on August 27, 1940. I quote:

(b) In consideration it is proposed to transfer to Great Britain the title and possession of certain over-age ships and obsolescent military materials now the property of the United States and certain other small patrol boats, which, though nearly completed, are already obsolescent.

Please note the last two lines, regarding the small patrol boats which are still in process of construction. Is this the next surprise that is awaiting the exact theatrical, psychological moment for disclosure? Or is it something more startling that is to be disclosed? The destroyer trade announcement was perfectly timed for drama, both for its effect at home and abroad. How much was saved for future emergencies, for a time when it would be necessary to electrify the country by big news?

I maintain today, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress is not fighting or acting as it should to obtain information as to what is being done in our national defense. Personally, I have given the House several opportunities to vote upon measures that would give us information as to how fast our national defense is progressing, but administration forces prevented favorable action upon them.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that we should know whether the engines in our airplanes, for instance, are suitable for fighting present-day battles and that is true of every part of our defense. We have heard a great deal about the battles in England and France, about the type of planes the Germans are using, about the vast quantities of planes the Germans are using.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the young men of this country ought to be given an opportunity to learn how to fly planes, and they should be given the very best planes to fly, and proper equipment in every way.

I voted for the so-called conscription bill the other day, Mr. Speaker, and in voting for it I did so with the idea in mind that we were giving our young men the advantage of the opportunity, and I feel the tremendous privilege of learning how to defend their country, and I did so believing they should be and would be given proper equipment in every respect. We should not, Mr. Speaker, try to train our young men with obsolete planes or obsolete equipment of any kind.

I earnestly hope that when my resolution comes up the House will vote with me. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the young man, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], does not know that when labor met prior to the Roosevelt day, and long before that, when human beings engaged in laboring in this country met for the purpose of getting what was just in the way of a living wage, they had to meet on roofs and in cellars. That has been changed, and this change is very offensive to those who hate Roosevelt the most. Labor has come into its own. No matter how much you may dislike Roosevelt, he has been on the side of the man who had to live by his work. [Applause.]

No matter what they say about it and no matter how many mistakes were made, there is many a family gathered around the supper table at night that would not be there if it had not been for Roosevelt. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is very offensive to me, especially at this time, when tomorrow we will pass, so the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs states, on a matter he is going to railroad through. Let us lay off of Roosevelt for a moment and let us take after that committee, if you please. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts stated something about boys. I want to talk about the American young man. I do not want to train him for murder. I want him to live his life, as I have lived 73 years, without killing anybody. I want the American boy's life to be spared and not murdered in a foreign war.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Masschusetts. My feeling is that no one knows what will happen and it is only fair to give the youth of America a chance to be trained. I worked with hundreds of veterans during the World War and ever since.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentlewoman wants them to live?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I certainly do, and that is why I want them trained.

Mr. SHANNON. Then do not conscript them for murder purposes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is only to protect them.

Mr. SHANNON. I went through this 23 years ago and I know what it means.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have talked with hundreds of them. Many of them were not prepared. Many lives were lost because they did not know how to protect themselves. Young men are asking me today for the opportunity to be trained. They are asking for an education in self defense.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday Mr. Roosevelt addressed a great meeting and at that great meeting he made perhaps a great speech. He was cheered and I want the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], and I want the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] to read a great speech on the question of conscription by John L. Lewis, which was put in the Appendix of the Record, page 5607 by Hon. BENNET CHAMP CLARK. I know it will enlighten every American who reads it. I am going to put something in the RECORD on that subject from the meeting that Mr. Roosevelt addressed on yesterday.

This is from the proceedings of the Fourteenth Convention of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen, and Helpers of America, the third day, Wednesday afternoon session, held at Constitution Hall, Washington, D. C., September 11, 1940. This is the resolution:

Resolution No. 16

BURKE-WADSWORTH CONSCRIPTION BILL

Whereas the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill is aimed at the regimentation of the entire Nation, would destroy the hard-won gains of organized labor, would under the guise of national defense destroy the democratic concept by creating a military caste, would lay a staggering tax burden on the shoulders of those least able to meet it; and

Whereas the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill would create conditions not dissimilar to conditions now existing in totalitarian nations, would lay the foundation for fascism, would be a continuous threat of plunging this Nation into war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the membership of Local 379, American Federation of Labor, support the position of the American Federation of Labor on this bill.

Submitted by,

GUNNAR OLSON.
JIM BOLLEN.
J. O'BRIEN.
RICHARD GERBLE.

Your committee concur in this resolution.
The report of the committee was adopted.

Mr. Speaker, these men were brave enough and bold enough to speak their sentiments on this odious subject. Let us hope that this body will not get off on the question of who is going to be elected President next fall. Let us take up the subject firsthand, What are you going to do with the American boy?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In 1917, in England, I saw a painting of a young man, 16 years old, who was painted by the artist as a symbol of the courage and patriotism of the youth of England and as a warning against unpreparedness. This miniature pictured him running down the stairs to receive his government's call to defend England. His hand was upraised in jubilation over the fact that he had been called to service. This boy lost his life in a regiment of young men all 16 years of age. They were calling these 16-year-old young men into service. Every officer with whom I talked in London told me the reason that that entire regiment was wiped out so quickly was because they were untrained; they were unprepared. They all went to their deaths the first day they were sent into action.

I vowed then—and I have talked to hundreds of our young men who served during the World War, including the wounded—that never, if I had the opportunity, would I neglect training young men for any task that they might have to perform. I have voted for every measure of national defense, and I always shall. I want to have the young men trained so that they will know how to take care of themselves. There is no kindness in not training them. A thoroughly prepared nation is not attacked. Better a thousand times to be overtrained and overprepared than undertrained and underprepared.

Mr. SHANNON. Resolution No. 16, adopted by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America, states the case plainly against conscription. I stand squarely behind the resolution. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution speaks for itself. I am for the resolution adopted at that convention that Mr. Roosevelt spoke before yesterday.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? And I ask that it be not taken from his time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I just want to remind the Members of the House that President Roosevelt apparently feels that conscription, or selective training, is vital at this time. At any rate high-ranking Army and Navy officers, appointed by him, have appeared for his administration in behalf of it. It is obvious that the Secretary of War would not appear openly before a committee of the Congress and act against his President's command.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio a few minutes ago in which he seemed deeply exercised and upset over a very eloquent and telling address delivered last night in Constitution Hall by the Chief Executive of this country.

During my service in this body I have very rarely participated in partisan debate. This afternoon, however, I feel it my duty to rise in defense of the President and our party, following the rather bitter, and I feel, unwarranted attack.

The President of this Republic reviewed, not only to the delight of those who were at that meeting but also, shall I say, to the extreme vexation of the opposition, the splendid record of the present administration in aiding the laboring men and women of this country during the last 7½ years.

Time does not permit a lengthy reply to the charges of the gentleman from Ohio. The fact which not alone I, myself, realize but the American people as a whole realize is that during these two administrations the Democratic leadership has given to the American people more needed and progressive and worth-while labor legislation than any other administration in the history of the United States of America. [Applause.] That is not challenged by a single individual.

When I hear the opposition crying out in these days that "If we are put into power we will extend the benefits of the social-security legislation, old-age pensions, and aid to the underprivileged," I am reminded of the fact that for 12 consecutive years prior to 1933 the opposition was in power in national affairs, and never in all that time did they place upon the statute books of this country a single Federal law to bring about social security and old-age pensions and aid to the blind and underprivileged of this country. [Applause.] So, it ill behooves the opposition in the campaign of 1940 to say, "yes, the laws which were enacted under the Roosevelt administration are well and good, but if we are put into power we will administer them better and we will extend the benefits more." Mr. Willkie seems to have that viewpoint.

Why, the very basis for that argument is absolutely wrong. We know that the Roosevelt administration enacted the legislation into law, and it is the proper administration to continue to extend the benefits of social security to the men and women of this country. Proven friends are not to be pushed aside for skillfully worded campaign promises.

For 7½ years this administration has proved its faith to labor in this Nation. I should not for a single moment attempt to say that some States of this Union who have been under Republican Governors have not been desirous, as have Democratic States, in bringing certain aid to the laborers of this country. I would remind you, however, that from a Federal standpoint it has been a Democratic administration under Roosevelt, with a Democratic Congress backing him up, that has given to the laboring people in this country privileges and protection in such a way that these good folk will not be misled by the carping critics in 1940. They recall the wage and hour law, the provision for collective bargaining, unemployment insurance, machinery for peaceful settlement of labor disputes, and general legislation for the betterment of the toilers of America, who, by their efforts in the shop, mill, mine, field, and factory, contribute to the well-being of a peaceful and prosperous America.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman referred to the speech made a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and the fact that that gentleman seemed to be unduly exercised by the great praise and the wonderful response to the President's address last evening. Has the gentleman given any thought to the idea that the reason some of the opposition should be so exercised about the speech made last evening is what happened in 1 day—in the fact that both groups of labor unions practically endorsed the President of the United States; and then to hear his speech that was so impressive and was so rousingly received—it was just too much for them to take in 1 day.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; and I believe the gentleman might also add the support of Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, to the groups who are on the battle lines.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the truth is always bitter to those who oppose it.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I cannot yield. I asked the gentleman to yield to me and he would not do it. If I have time later, I will yield. I always want to be considerate and fair in debate.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKEOUGH. In the light of the gentleman's fine appraisal of the President's speech, I wonder if it might not be advisable at this time to ask unanimous consent that there be placed in the RECORD at this point the President's speech delivered last night.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes. He is making a very enlightening contribution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. A few days ago the Presidential nominee of the Republican Party, not the Republican candidate for President but the nominee of the Republican Party, who with Wall Street went into Philadelphia and just pulled off a political "blitzkrieg" on the Republican Party, said that the farmers of the country should not pay any property taxes. He proposes something to that effect. Can the gentleman tell me how the Congress of the United States can pass legislation of that type?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Congress cannot do it.

Mr. McCORMACK. And, if so, what about the local government? Further, if it is good for the farmer it is also good for the home owners. In other words, the nominee of the Republican Party made a tax proposal that Congress could not enact into law, in the first place, and, in the second place, it is completely inconsistent with the best interests of local government.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Following the observation of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I believe it was said here a few days ago on this floor that the Presidential candidate of the Republican Party is going to find it mighty difficult to survive two press conferences daily. Of course, he is talking on a multitude of subjects, and perhaps he may talk a little too much.

With reference to the "blitzkrieg" at Philadelphia to which the gentleman from Massachusetts referred, I know that in the beautiful and health-giving mountains of West Virginia we have forests and in those forests we have different species of trees. I do not want to be facetious for a single moment, but, after all, at Philadelphia it seemed that Senator TAFT and Prosecutor Dewey did not have the necessary Presidential candidate color, and so the delegates desired a candidate who had it. I also remember that as we go into the woodland we find the sumac tree. The sumac tree, of course, has an abundance of color but it has pithiness, and there is no real timber to the sumac tree. That is just spoken in good humor, for I know Mr. Willkie is no doubt a charming individual. We know, however, that Roosevelt for 7½ years has stood like a sturdy oak, not only in behalf of legislation favorable to labor but also in behalf of legislation favorable to the country in general. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] referred to Wall Street influence at Philadelphia. I cannot refrain at this point in remarking that in 1932 the people of this country decided to place the control of our Government in the Main Streets of America and take it from Wall Street. They do not propose in 1940 to return it to the Street that they took it from in 1932. In a battle between Main Street and Wall Street we are for Main Street every time. [Applause.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that the money that is provided in social security has been spent and the people will have to be taxed over again to provide for social security?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am not going to answer that, perhaps, in the way the gentleman wants it. No real basis exists for such a belief. There is a safeguard. I do know it was a Democratic administration that gave for the first time to the people of this country social-security legislation, after 12 years in which the Republicans had failed to enact any such measure into law.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield again to my colleague.

Mr. McCORMACK. And any such statement as that by the gentleman from Ohio is completely inconsistent with the truth. The money that has been raised is absolutely protected. There is a separate and distinct fund created as a result of legislation we passed last year, where the money now goes and is automatically appropriated and it is provided for by mandatory provisions of law, and that bill was reported out of the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member, last year unanimously, by 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans. It is a complete protection of the funds raised for the payment of social security that we can afford under our present situation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The distinguished Member from Massachusetts, of course, has made that perfectly clear to my Ohio colleague. I trust he and the other doubters will agree with your statement. I will not go into that phase further because I do not want to ask for additional time beyond the 10 minutes kindly allotted to me.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY. I just want to say that I have been here nearly 2 years and I have never said an unkind word about Mr. Wallace or the President or anyone else, and I do wish to say that the worst things I have ever heard about your Vice Presidental candidate, Mr. Wallace, has been from one of your own members and some day I hope to repeat what he said to my colleagues here. When you are counting the blessings of the New Deal please remember that this New Deal has chased more farmers out of their homes than all the housing units the New Deal has built. Also remember that the New Deal has driven more people off of their farms in Wisconsin in 1939 than ever before in any year in the history of the Federal Land Bank. A higher percentage as well as a greater number.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am sure the gentleman will express his views when he calls such to the attention of the House, and whenever he has time to speak to this body I will hope to be on the floor to hear him. He is a most pleasant person.

In conclusion, I do not want to overemphasize or be in the position of stretching the truth, but I say with all the power that is within me, that the Roosevelt administration has proven itself worthy of the trust which has been reposed in it during the past 7½ years.

We have seen to it that there has been no crucifixion of labor, in this country under this administration, on the cross of long hours and short pay and insanitary working conditions. We have given to labor its best benefits and labor, organized and unorganized, will show its appreciation on November 5 by aiding in the reelection of the present President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in some sections of the country before 1933, if an alien did not know how many stars there were on a quarter, he could not become a citizen. If he did not know how high the Bunker Hill Monument was, he was disqualified on his application.

Before the present administration came into power, every imaginable obstacle was placed in the way of the naturalization process. Trite and irrelevant questions were asked the alien, and if he failed to appear at a given time for his hearing, he was penalized regardless of the validity of his excuse. The penalty made him wait 2 additional years before he could get another chance.

If the Alien Registration Act had gone into effect just 9 years ago, the job would have been twice as extensive. In 1930 the alien population of this country was 6,234,614; in 1920, 7,430,809. In 1939, after naturalization reforms and a drop in the immigration figure, the alien population had shrunk to 3,628,103.

This administration has taken the attitude that everything possible should be done to facilitate the naturalization process. It has followed a policy that has shifted the emphasis from an alien's ability to memorize the correct answer to one in which his knowledge, understanding, and acceptance of the principles of this Government has been the major concern. Good moral character and the petitioner's attitude toward his home, family, neighbors, community, and agencies of government have been the basic interests of the examiner.

That this belief in the wisdom of a different approach has been justified is indicated by the ever-increasing numbers of aliens who have become citizens in the past 7 years and of those who have applied for citizenship papers.

From 1933 to 1939 a total of 1,003,109 citizenship certificates were issued as compared with 1,253,490 from the period 1926 to 1932. When these figures are compared with the following immigration figures (324,960 immigrants admitted 1933 to 1939; 1,621,011 immigrants admitted 1926 to 1932) the success of the new approach can properly be evaluated.

When the late Daniel W. MacCormack became Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization in 1933 he found an absence of definite and accurate data available concerning the naturalization practices then in vogue. He thereupon directed a survey which disclosed the following deplorable conditions:

1. A great lack of uniformity existed in the attitudes and practices of the judges of the more than 2,000 Federal and State courts authorized to exercise naturalization jurisdiction, and a like lack of uniformity on the part of the naturalization examiners who had a few standards fixed for their guidance.
2. Naturalization examiners in some districts were recommending that petitions for naturalization be denied for highly technical and sometimes trivial reasons. The opposite procedure prevailed in others.
3. Thousands of petitions for citizenship were being dismissed solely because the applicants had failed to appear for final hearing without regard to the merits of the petitions or the circumstances of the failure.
4. Character investigations of applicants for naturalization were inadequate.
5. Information had not been made available during the previous 27 years of the administration of the naturalization laws to show the actual questions being propounded to applicants for naturalization by the naturalization examiners in determining their educational qualifications, although the Constitution requires a "uniform" rule of naturalization. Lack of uniformity was the rule in these educational tests.
6. A large proportion of the questions which were being asked concerning the applicants' educational fitness were factual rather than the reasoning ones.
7. Mere memory tests were being prescribed generally in lieu of examinations designed to test attitudes and understanding about government.
8. Advantage was not being taken of the benefits to both the Government and the alien growing out of effective cooperation by recognized welfare and social-service agencies, with a view to eliminating the exploitation of aliens.
9. No plan had been devised for instructing systematically and continually the entire personnel of the Service as to the immigration and naturalization laws and regulations, and as to the duties of the members of the Service in their administration.

On the basis of such disclosures, measures were taken to reform the complete service. After careful study, naturalization examiners were directed to make no formal recommendations in cases involving technicalities only, the examiners duty being regarded as fulfilled when he had brought all the facts of the case to the court. This action has resulted in the elimination of much so-called red tape in saving of time and work and an assurance to applicants for citizenship of a fair consideration of their cases.

It had been the practice to dismiss thousands of petitions for naturalization annually, solely because of failure of the petitioner to appear in court for final hearing. This failure to appear was frequently due to causes beyond the applicant's control, such as illness, temporary absence from the jurisdiction of the court while seeking employment, or failure to receive advance notice of the hearing.

Much embarrassment, expense, and delay were frequently caused innocent applicants whose declarations had expired and who were required to make new declarations of intentions and wait 2 years before repetitioning.

To protect applicants against harsh and unfair action, examiners were directed not to recommend the dismissal of petitions, first, until notice had been given the petitioner in writing of a hearing date; second, a second notice had been sent him, to his witnesses, and, when practicable, to recognized welfare or similar organizations; third, a final notice had been transmitted to the applicant by registered mail; fourth, until a period of at least a year had elapsed since the first notice; and fifth, until at least two hearing dates had elapsed at which the applicant had the opportunity to appear.

A survey was made to determine the type of questions asked by examiners in various sections of the country. Fifty-four of the senior examiners were queried. The complete lack of uniformity was strikingly illustrated by the fact that of 848 questions asked applicants, not a single one was asked by all 54 of the examiners. From this survey it was discovered that the silly irrelevant questions such as "how high is the Bunker Hill Monument?" and "How many stars are there on a quarter?" had actually been asked by examiners.

Possibly the most important move in the direction of simplifying and liberalizing the naturalization process came in 1934, when there was enacted a statute substantially reducing naturalization fees. The question of the fee had been possibly the major deterrent in the path of the alien attempting to secure citizenship status. The fees for certificate of arrival and for a declaration of intention were reduced from $5 to $2.50; the fees for a petition for citizenship and for a certificate of a derivative certificate from $10 to $5; and a change from $10 to $5 was also made in the fee for issuance of a special certificate of citizenship for use by a naturalized citizen in obtaining recommendation as a citizen of the United States in his country of former allegiance. The fee for issuance of a new certificate of citizenship to replace one which had been lost, mutilated, or destroyed was changed from the obviously exorbitant fee of $10 to $1.

The educational test given to a petitioner for examination is based upon the principles of the Constitution of the United States. In accordance with its policy of aiding aliens to become citizens by simplifying the process, the Department began concentrating on citizenship training. To this end, a new type of textbook was prepared and distributed free of charge to the public schools throughout the country. In the past 7 years, distribution of the textbook has reached all-time highs. In 1931, 32,828 books of a similar nature had been distributed; in 1935, 78,271; in 1938, the supply was exhausted after it had reached the 50,000 mark.

Two laws enacted in 1939 removed a very touchy obstacle set up in the alien's own mind with regard to naturalization. Congress at that time, upon recommendation, eliminated the necessity for renunciation of allegiance by an applicant for naturalization, to the particular sovereign which he apparently owed allegiance before his application. This was particularly touchy in the predominately Irish sections of Boston and New England. [Although not directly connected with the naturalization process, the establishment by Presidential proclamation in 1940, of "New Citizen's Day" or "I Am an American Day" has done much to arouse the interest of the alien in making application for citizenship. The youth of the country who had reached the legal voting age, schools and local organizations throughout the country cooperated in the celebration. Obviously, the alien became more concerned about his own citizenship status when he saw his children becoming legal citizens.

The present Democratic administration, under the brilliant, courageous, and humane leadership of President Roosevelt, has enacted legislation that has enabled hundreds of thousands of fine aliens, loyal to our institutions of government, to become citizens of our great country. These persons, who have benefited by this legislation, will not forget the great leader, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who proposed and led the fight for the enactment of discerning legislation of the past 7½ years.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman, in the course of his remarks, would include a table showing where the social-security funds have been invested. It is quite clearly understood throughout the United States that the social-security funds are being invested in new obligations of the Federal Government, and that if it were not for the social-security funds the taxpayers would immediately have to raise that much more money to carry on the expenses of government. The statement of the gentleman from Ohio to the effect that we will have to tax ourselves all over again seems to be somewhat justified; and as the gentleman has seen fit to answer that question, I am sure he can insert in his remarks a table showing where those funds have been invested, and I am sure it will be a great help to the country.

Mr. McCORMACK. The remarks the gentleman has made do not relate to the subject that the gentleman is discussing. I assume he does not want to insert this colloquy in the remarks I am putting into the RECORD.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I know how fair the gentleman is and how he attempts to confine himself to facts and not mislead the people. I think the gentleman would want to go out of his way to get at the truth of this.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman overwhelms me with his flattery, which is entirely undeserved, but, nevertheless, I am human enough to appreciate it. I cannot plead guilty to the indictment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Never before have I known the gentleman to make a statement which has not been backed up by a study of the facts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Again the gentleman overwhelms me with my veracity.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish the gentleman, in all fairness to himself and the integrity of the RECORD, would give some more attention to the manner in which social-security funds have been invested before he allows his remarks to stand in reply to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, this colloquy refers to the colloquy I had with the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is correct. Things were going so fast that I could not get my oar in.

Mr. McCORMACK. So for the purpose of the Reporter it has no relationship to what I have just inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. Some day when I am in the mood I will be very glad to undertake to educate the gentleman on the subject he has just briefly referred to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might say the gentleman is educated, but I would like the gentleman's remarks for the purpose of educating the people.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will say that I know of no one on the Committee on Banking and Currency that I have more profound respect for than my friend from Michigan. On banking and currency matters I have sat here repeatedly and listened to his words of wisdom and have been profoundly educated by the expressions which emanate from his intellectual and profound mind.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say if we can consider this a draw I will remove my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that each may make a bow to the other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. [Laughter.]

There was no objection.

MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged motion.

Mr. Speaker, on July 10, 1940, on page 9384 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, appears the following:

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. JOHNSON of California conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, on July 11, 1940, on page 9515 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, appears the following:

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. BLOOM, Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, and Mr. FISH.

Mr. Speaker, under rule 28 of the rules of the House of Representatives, paragraph 1½ (a), section 910, the following appears:

After House conferees on any bill or resolution in conference between the House and Senate shall have been appointed for 20 calendar days and shall have failed to make a report, it is hereby declared to be a motion of the highest privilege to move to discharge said House conferees and to appoint new conferees, or to instruct said House conferees; and, further, during the last 6 days of any session of Congress, it shall be a privileged motion to move to discharge, appoint, or instruct House conferees after House conferees shall have been appointed 36 hours without having made a report.

Mr. Speaker, in conformity with the above-stated rule, I hereby move to discharge the conferees appointed on the bill S. 326.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send his motion to the desk, and the Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BEAM moves to discharge the House conferees on the bill of the Senate S. 326.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make a point of no quorum.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. PATMAN. I will withhold it.

Mr. BEAM. This supersedes the motion to adjourn under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. BEAM. I will be glad to concede the gentleman's point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is exercising his right under the rules of the House to make a point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count.

Mr. PATMAN (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 10, noes 14.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count to see whether a quorum is present or not.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois does not have the floor, and cannot yield at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOOM. Would it be in order now to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order to make such motion after the Chair has announced the result of his count of the Members present. [After counting.] A quorum is not present.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that motion?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I am not in position to yield.

Mr. BEAM. I have no objection to this matter going over until tomorrow morning so long as I do not lose my right to bring it up as the first order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can give the gentleman no assurance about a matter like that.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Will the gentleman accept the suggestion——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois cannot yield for a question at this stage of the proceedings. No business is in order unless the gentleman desires to make some sort of motion.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Being a motion of the highest privilege, assuming it is in order, would not the gentleman have the right after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table to ask recognition by the Chair to present his motion to discharge the conferees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It depends whether at that time the motion is a privileged motion.

Mr. McCORMACK. Assuming that it still retains its character of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It all depends on whether or not at that time it is a privileged motion.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, if my motion retains its present status and is the unfinished business before the House in the morning, I am perfectly willing——

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must agree with the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain a unanimous-consent request at this time.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending motion is the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLOOM) there were—ayes 7, noes 13.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). On this roll call 240 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BEAM, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the House should adjourn now and a conference report is not filed by 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, would the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM] be pending and still in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be the unfinished business of the House and the first thing in order tomorrow.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. There are not many Members here who know what this is all about. This motion is to discharge the conferees who have been appointed because they have not filed a report. If the conferees do file a report tonight on the Mexican claims bill, that does away with this proceeding entirely?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is something the Chair cannot fully anticipate, of course.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, then I would rather have my motion voted on pronto. I was given to understand by the Speaker and by the chairman of the committee that such report would not be filed and the status quo would prevail. I stated before the quorum call that that was my position. If the status quo prevails, I am perfectly willing now, as I was before the quorum call, to have it go over until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman must understand I would not have left the Chair to propound a parliamentary inquiry unless I knew that the status quo would be maintained at 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What is the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a privileged motion now pending to discharge the conferees on a certain bill.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, some time ago the House passed what is known as the Mexican claims bill. It seems that the Senate also passed a Mexican claims bill. They were not exactly alike. The matter went to conference. Under the rules of the House if the conferees do not report back to the House within 20 days, it shall be in order for any Member to move that the conferees be discharged. Tonight after all special orders had been disposed of and when there were but four Members on this side and three or four on the other side, this privileged motion was brought up by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM] to discharge the conferees. Of course, we on this side had no knowledge of any such intention. No member of the conference committee was present and I therefore made a point of order that no quorum was present. The roll was called and that is where we stand now.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 602. Joint resolution to authorize Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, to be appointed to, and to perform the duties of, the office of Secretary of Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, September 13, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Naval Affairs, Friday, September 13, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 10224, to establish the minimum permanent authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. House Joint Resolution 603. SENATE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in gladness and humility we thank Thee for all great and simple joys, for the everlasting freshness of experience, for the newness of life as each day dawns upon us. May we value more and more the intimacies of friendship and the sanctities of family ties, that wholesomeness and purity of life may characterize our people.

We bless Thy holy name for the happiness that is born of sympathy and sorrow, for the rapture of the lost soul finding love again, for the joy of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth, for the unveiling of the glory of the Eternal in the workshop of the Carpenter of Nazareth, and for all holy and humble men of heart whose lives have revealed the spirit of the Christ, for Thou hast ever chosen the weak things of the world to confound the strong. O Master of the souls of men, who dost inspire with love's heroism all true followers of Thine, renew Thy spirit in each one of us this day, that we may find the everlasting peace and joy which abide in the secret place of the Most High, even under the shadow of the Almighty. Amen.

SENATOR HENRY F. ASHURST

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on the occasion of the birthday of the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] I wish to express my appreciation of the splendid quality of his service to the Nation during these many years. The Senator is invariably kind, tolerant, generous, understanding, and possessed of inexhaustible sources of good will. He has sometimes pointed to what he has termed inconsistency in himself and others; but I am convinced that in integrity of purpose and desire to serve the American people the Senator has been wholly consistent.

I have always found the Senator from Arizona neighborly and gracious. When stress and strain have manifested need for calm judgment in the Senate, the unfailing humor of Senator ASHURST has come as a benediction to all of us.

As he leaves us he will carry with him the consciousness that among his fellow Senators he will be remembered with the very highest esteem. We shall think of him as we have always known him—strong to defend the weak and oppressed, patient in the performance of his duties, glad when faced with the responsibilities of high office, and consistently faithful to the way of life enjoyed by a free people. We hold the Senator from Arizona in affectionate regard, for he has been to all of us as a brother.

Mr. SHEPPARD introduced a bill (S. 4347) to provide that retired personnel of the Regular Army called into active military service under the provisions of the joint resolution approved August 27, 1940, shall be restored to active duty with the rank held by them on the retired list, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK BILL—SUBSTITUTION OF SENATE CONFEREE

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have been informed that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] who was appointed as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate on the so-called Export-Import Bank bill, is unable to be present and serve in that capacity. He has asked to be relieved for that reason. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from North Dakota be relieved from serving on that conference committee, and that the Chair appoint another Senator as member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate in place of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair appoints the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] a conferee on the part of the Senate on the Export-Import Bank bill in place of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin of September 9, 1940, entitled "Strong Leadership Wanted," which appears in the Appendix.]

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, endorsing President Roosevelt for a third term, published in the New York Herald Tribune of Friday, September 13, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONSCRIPTION—A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY FOR AMERICANISM

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix a statement by a citizen of Vermont on the subject Conscription—A Golden Opportunity for Americanism, which appears in the Appendix.]

CANADIAN-AMERICAN AGREEMENT AND HABANA CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, under date of August 30, I submitted to the Secretary of State a respectful request inquiring whether the Canadian-American defense agreement and the Habana Conference agreements were to be submitted to the Congress in the first instance, and to the Senate for its constitutional advice and consent in the other instance. There has been considerable speculation on the subject. I thought it desirable that the matter should be officially settled.

This morning I am in receipt of a letter from the distinguished and able Secretary of State which definitely and conclusively responds to these heretofore unanswered questions. I wish to present the letter of the Secretary of State and to read it.

The letter is dated September 12, 1940, and is addressed to me. I quote:

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: With reference to the inquiry contained in your letter of the 30th instant, there is enclosed a copy of the joint statement issued by the President and the Prime Minister of Canada on August 18, from which it will be seen that the arrangement to which you refer provides merely for the establishment of a joint board to study—

And the word "study" is underlined—

to study problems of defense of the northern part of the Western Hemisphere. Such an arrangement can hardly be said to constitute a treaty, but is more properly to be denominated an Executive agreement. It is my understanding that the President has not thought it necessary formally to submit it to the Senate.

I digress at that point to comment upon this portion of the letter. If the arrangement is merely for the establishment of a joint board to study—again underlining the word "study"—problems of mutual defense between Canada and the United States, I can understand why the attitude would be taken which the Secretary defines. I personally am heartily in favor of a Canadian-American exploration of this character because it seems to me quite obvious that in the event of untoward developments such a study might well be of desperately important consequence to our own country. It is a wholly legitimate element of our own national defense. Since it is only a "study" there is obviously no controlling reason for congressional consultation; but I respectfully submit that if and when it moves from "study" to "commitment," it will be desirable, if not essential, that the congressional partnership in this responsibility shall be recognized.

I continue reading the Secretary's letter:

The Habana Convention, signed on July 30, 1940, at the second meeting of Foreign Ministers of the American republics, is designed to set forth in treaty form certain contingencies and possible responsibilities envisaged by the American republics with reference to the British, French, and Netherlands colonial possessions in the Western Hemisphere. The convention will be submitted to the Senate for consideration.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) CORDELL HULL.

The latter section of the letter asserts a policy which of course is sound and welcome. Conclusive foreign commitments, binding upon America, must not be attempted at any time without the advice and consent of the Senate as the Constitution requires. I merely express the hope that we may see the treaties officially as soon as possible, because they contain prospective obligations which are constantly interweaving themselves with the legislation upon which we are being asked to pass from day to day.

I desire to express my appreciation to the Secretary of State for his courteous reply. I am glad to submit this information for the RECORD. I ask to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, the enclosure in the Secretary's letter.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Prime Minister and the President have discussed the mutual problems of defense in relation to the safety of Canada and the United States.

It has been agreed that a Permanent Joint Board on Defense shall be set up at once by the two countries.

This Permanent Joint Board on Defense shall commence immediate studies relating to sea, land, and air problems, including personnel and matériel.

It will consider in the broad sense the defense of the north half of the Western Hemisphere.

The Permanent Joint Board on Defense will consist of four or five members from each country, most of them from the services. It will meet shortly.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed the following bills:

On September 6, 1940:

S. 313. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Lester P. Barlow against the United States.

On September 11, 1940:

S. 4272. An act to amend the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes," as amended.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10413.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be made the unfinished business, to continue before the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the bill be made the unfinished business until we dispose of it.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the motion made a moment ago was intended to make it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion first made by the Senator was to proceed to the consideration of the bill. Now he has asked unanimous consent that it be made the unfinished business.

Mr. NcNARY. The adoption of the motion makes it the unfinished business. I assume that the real purpose and import of the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator is seeking is to make the bill the unfinished business without interruption by any other business.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the adoption of the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill carried with it making it the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. But I had some doubt in my own mind about it, and I wanted to remove that doubt; and that is why I made the request.

Mr. McNARY. No; I object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement. The motion is sufficient in itself.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. That is the ruling of the Chair, is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has objected to the unanimous-consent request. Objection being made, of course it cannot be granted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, if agreed to, makes it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill taken up by motion, until displaced, is the unfinished business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it may be displaced in one of two ways—either by unanimous consent or by agreeing to a motion to consider some other bill. It would not be displaced, except temporarily, if a conference report were taken up and considered, that being a privileged matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly; that is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of the bill committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am sure there will not be any confusion, but in order that there shall not be any, I wish to have it made clear that the granting of this unanimous consent will not preclude the offering of a substitute for the committee's proposal in titles I and II.

Mr. HARRISON. I had no such idea.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I knew the Senator did not, but I merely wanted to be sure.

Mr. HARRISON. But I do desire to have the committee amendments considered first, and that is what I requested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendments will be considered first.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is the Senator about to proceed to explain the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is appropriate, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. I was about to proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. There are certain sections in the bill which I cannot figure out, which I cannot understand, and I do not think a Philadelphia lawyer could understand them. I should like to hear the explanation of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. In my opinion the pending bill is the most difficult task which has ever confronted the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate. It has been no easy matter to draft an excess-profits tax. I can truthfully say that the various provisions of the legislation now before us and the problems presented by it have been the most difficult to adjust and agree on than any previously considered. In my opinion neither the suggestions of the Ways and Means Committee, nor the Treasury Department, nor the Finance Committee meet in every respect the true test of an excess-profits tax. The enactment of such a measure carries with it many difficulties if the formula to be adopted is to impose taxes only on those industries that have directly profited from national-defense expenditures.

It will be recalled that some weeks ago the President recommended in a special message to the Congress the enactment of a steeply graduated excess-profits tax to be imposed on individuals as well as corporations. It is very difficult to write a bill and confine the excess-profits tax to only those corporations in the group referred to as national-defense industries. So the bill which passed the House—the one which is favored, I might state, by the Treasury Department over the Senate bill—has been one more designed to raise revenue than to meet the real requirements of an excess-profits tax.

We have had conference after conference in an effort to compose all the various differences of opinion and to get the legislation behind us and upon the statute books. As Senators will recall, there was suggested the amortization plan, urged by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Council of National Defense, and, I may say, by the Treasury Department and the President, and we were urged to speed this matter along as rapidly as possible. It has been pointed out that the national-defense program would be slowed up if we did not pass the accelerated depreciation provisions promptly, and at the same time suspend the Vinson-Trammell Act, because it would stand in the way of contracts which might be made in connection with the national-defense program.

We have had little difficulty about that. There has been some opposition, but I cannot say there has been much opposition. The heads of the departments have been in agreement, and I think there was unanimity in the Ways and Means Committee of the House. There was some slight opposition in the Finance Committee of the Senate with reference to that part of the bill, but it was not very effective.

Most of the time has been taken up, and the delay has been caused, by the agencies of the Congress, both the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee and, I may say, the representatives of the Treasury, in getting together upon an equitable basis in treating the corporate taxpayers of the country. There were sharp differences, but I may say that this legislation beats anything I have encountered in all my experience—which has not been so short, and I hope it will be longer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is this an announcement of reelection? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. It can be taken as an announcement of reelection.

During the consideration of the excess-profits tax two plans which had been suggested stood out. One was the average earnings plan, based upon actual experience as to the profits which had been made by corporations in the past. The other was the invested-capital plan.

I may say that the gentlemen who were suggested to represent the Treasury believed, and sincerely believed, that we should eliminate the average earnings method and confine ourselves to the invested-capital theory. The experts of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation believed that the wisest method to adopt was the average-earnings method. The difference grew so sharp, and was delaying the legislation to such an extent, that the Secretary of the Treasury called a meeting of some of the Finance Committee, the Ways and Means Committee, the representative of our staff, Mr. Stam, and the representatives of the Treasury who believed in the theory to which I have referred. Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, asked these gentlemen to get together on the two plans and directed his representatives to do so. He said, "There will be an agreement by tomorrow at 10 o'clock." Our staff and the representatives of the Treasury went into a conference; they did get together, as we thought, and from their action, the Ways and Means subcommittee of the House recommended a bill adopting not only the invested-capital plan but also the average-earnings plan. They brought out a bill to which there was tremendous opposition, and in the hearings persons appeared in large numbers pointing out the difficulties which might be visited upon one class of corporations or another.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Is this an appropriate time to ask the Senator a question? If not, I will postpone what I have to ask.

Mr. HARRISON. I should prefer to proceed for a few moments, and then I will yield to the Senator to ask his question.

Mr. DANAHER. I will tell the Senator, if he will permit, what I have in mind, and in due course he may be able to answer it anyway.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. DANAHER. Those of us who are not on the committee, and who have been attempting to follow, through the press and in conference with the Members of the Senate who are on the committee, what has been going on, are disturbed by one thing——

Mr. HARRISON. I congratulate the Senator if he is disturbed by only one thing.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator for that observation. One thing in particular I emphasize. The Senator twice in the last 5 minutes has used the expression that this bill seeks to meet "the real requirements of an excess-profits tax." In view of the fact that the House adopted one plan and the Treasury recommended another, and that the Senate Committee on Finance has come in with some modification, or reconciliation, of both ideas, would the Senator be willing, before we go on with the details, to explain, sometime in the course of his statement, what he considers the real requirements of an excess-profits tax? I should appreciate it if he would.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the bill is a combination of both theories, in order to arrive at the method to be elected by the corporation in computing its tax. The main idea presented to us was that those people who would make enormous profits by virtue of the $15,000,000,000 national-defense program should pay excess-profits taxes, thus relating the excess profits to the spending program.

Of course, if that theory is carried through, the profits realized by corporations engaged in making profits from the defense program would be the excess profits against which the measure is directed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] misconceived the House action. The House adopted the same plan which the Senate Finance Committee adopted. The Senate bill is a combination of the two systems. It does not represent one system alone.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. If I am confused, I am not alone.

Mr. HARRISON. I can understand and fully appreciate that confusion may exist in the minds of some, and so far as it is within my power I shall be glad to answer any questions I can with respect to the bill. Alongside of me sits an expert who is familiar with the provisions of the measure, and I shall rely upon him in great part in answering questions which may be asked.

I wish to say that the report on the bill will be found on the desks of all Senators. We have endeavored in the report to make plain the provisions of the bill. We have discussed the various provisions incorporated in it. I hope Senators will read that report. I claim no credit in the world for it, although as chairman of the Finance Committee my name is signed to it as making the report. The report was prepared by the experts of the Treasury as well as by the experts on the staff of the joint committe, and representatives of the legislative drafting service. The Senate committee report, I may say, is in my opinion much clearer than the report of the House committee.

Mr. President, when the bill came to us from the House it represented a combination of the average-earnings plan and the invested-capital plan. We have changed the House bill in many details, but we have retained the provisions which give to the taxpayers the privilege of electing either the invested-capital plan or the average-earnings plan.

After the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means brought to the full committee the bill prepared by the subcommittee, which was a combination of the two plans, I may say, there was some opposition to the bill because under its provisions many cases came within the twilight zone, so to speak. It is my opinion that if assurances had been given, and if those assurances had been written into the measure, that some tribunal would be created to examine and decide the hardship cases, 90 percent of the opposition to the bill would never have arisen.

Mr. President, I may say with respect to the Senate bill that one of its strongest and most beneficial features lies in the fact that it gave to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue authority to hear relief cases, and grant the relief requested, if possible. The Senate bill also gives to the taxpayer the right to appeal from the decision of the Commissioner to the courts or to the Board of Tax Appeals. That ought to give great satisfaction, not only to those who appeared before the committee in support of that idea but to millions of other taxpayers throughout the country. They may not all be satisfied with the decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue but if not, they can still appeal to the Board or the courts.

Mr. President, the bill when it came from the House provided for differentiation between the two methods that might be invoked. It gave the right to the taxpayers to elect between the invested-capital method and the average-earnings method. However, a penalty was provided—not in the report made by the Ways and Means Committee subcommittee, but in the measure passed by the House, against those who might seek to avail themselves of the average-earnings method. I do not think it is a secret that a representative of the Treasury, in a perfectly honest and conscientious way recommended that we should penalize corporations which availed themselves of the average-earnings method, and thus force them into using the invested-capital method. He said we should penalize those who use the average-earnings method by providing an increase of 4.1 percent on the normal tax net income of such corporations. We thought that would be an unfair discrimination. We felt that the middle-class corporations of the country, which had weathered the storm and continued in existence and were making a good showing and average profits, should be permitted to avail themselves of the average-earnings method without being subject to penalty.

Not only was this 4.1-percent penalty tax imposed upon those corporations which elected the average-earnings method but the House bill also subjected such corporations to a 5-percent penalty increase in the rate brackets applicable to such corporations.

That did not appear to be at all fair to the Finance Committee, and we eliminated those penalties. We provided that all corporations be treated alike. We proposed to let them elect either method without penalty. Of course, corporations will select the method which would be best for them. We took into consideration the loss in revenue. We proposed to place a flat increased corporation rate of 3.1 percent on all corporations. That will give us much more revenue. We have heard no complaint on that score. We have not received any objection from businessmen with respect to that proposed increase, and I believe the country will accept it.

The method we have presented, which was the method adopted by the House Ways and Means Committee, of allowing election between the average earning method and the invested capital method, was the method adopted by Canada in writing its first excess-profits measure. At the present time Canada has the average-earnings plan and uses invested capital for relief purposes. It is the method adopted by England in its World War taxation legislation. At the present time England uses the average-earnings method, using the invested-capital method for new corporations or for relief. So we believe it is a fair method. We do not think it operates unfairly against the small businessman at all. Indeed, the invested-capital plan will operate to the advantage of the larger corporations of the country, and most of them will take that plan. We have tried to put justice in this bill by adopting a flat 8-percent exemption under the invested-capital theory, rather than the complicated method that was adopted under the House measure. It takes a lawyer of standing, a very smart lawyer, indeed, to figure out the method of taxation provided in the House bill, because, in order to ascertain the exemption of a corporation for invested-capital purposes, it was required to compare its earnings in the base period with the invested capital in the base period, and that takes time, and no one but a certified public accountant or a tax expert can possibly do it. That is why the House bill was so complicated and caused so much opposition.

So we have made every effort to simplify the House bill. We do not have to go through that method in ascertaining the excess profits under the terms of the bill.

There was much opposition because it was said that small corporations had not been treated fairly in the House bill. There was a $5,000 exemption granted in the House bill. That exemption took care of a great many small corporations. In the bill before us, we have increased the exemption to $10,000, which applies to corporations electing either method. We have been most sympathetic toward smaller business in that respect.

A great appeal was made to the House and to the Senate committee with reference to consolidated returns. We had that method for many years. For years the Senate has stood for permission to file consolidated returns in the case of corporations 95 percent of the stock of which is owned by the parent company. So the Senate committee inserted a provision permitting consolidated returns to be filed with respect to excess profits. It is only permissive. It is not mandatory. We give permission to file consolidated returns under regulations to be issued by the Treasury Department. We think that is very helpful, and that it will simplify the law.

In addition to those titles of the bill dealing with normal corporate taxes and excess-profits taxes, the committee has approved the House action in suspending the provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act as to contracts or subcontracts which are entered into or completed during the years in which the excess-profits tax is applicable. Inasmuch as the excess-profits tax will apply to all corporations, including those now subject to the profit-limiting provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act, we feel that special provisions should not apply while the excess-profits tax is in force.

A very carefully drafted title of this bill relative to amortization of allowances for emergency plants or facilities is included and recommended. This accelerated depreciation allowance was worked out through the joint efforts of the representatives of the National Defense Council, the War and Navy Departments, and the Treasury Department, in cooperation with congressional committees. The sole purpose is the desire of all of us to expand existing facilities which are necessary and vital in our national-defense program.

The House bill contained provisions limiting or restricting the use which a taxpayer might make of facilities against which amortization or accelerated depreciation might be charged. On the recommendation of the Defense Council, and after conferences between representatives of the Treasury Department and the Defense Council, plus careful consideration by the committee, it was decided to eliminate the subsections imposing specific penalties relating to construction facilities after the amortization period had ended, and to substitute provision therefor to the effect that if the taxpayer has or will be substantially reimbursed by the Government for all or part of the cost of any facility, no amortization will be allowed unless the Advisory Commission to the Council on National Defense and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certify to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the contract contains provisions adequately protecting the interest of the Government with reference to the future use and disposition of this facility. Provision is also made for the publication of the terms of the contract with respect to cost or reimbursement of such facilities and the provision protecting the Government's interest but not the specifications of the contract.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the case of a cause of action in law which accrued prior to January 1, 1940, in which there had been a dispute over whether one corporation or another was entitled to receive money in 1938, and in which the suit is not determined until this year, although the money was actually earned and in dispute for a year like 1938, it would be manifestly unfair to tax the 1938 earnings, which have been a matter of litigation, in a year like 1940. I call that matter to the attention of the committee. I ask the Senator whether or not any provision was made to take care of it.

Mr. HARRISON. That would come under the relief provision of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is taken care of?

Mr. HARRISON. That is one of the things taken care of in the general relief provision.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator another question. I have in mind a concern which for 15 years has earned no money and paid no dividends. In order to perfect its product it conducted research which cost a tremendous amount of money. It so happens that this year will be the first time it will make any profit, after 15 years of barren returns. I was wondering whether or not the 4- or 5-year average of earnings would apply to a corporation which has had no profit for a period of time such as I have indicated.

Mr. HARRISON. That matter is taken care of by the relief provision.

Mr. TYDINGS. So all the profit would not be taxed as of this year, but it would be taxed on the basis of recent years?

Mr. HARRISON. That is correct on the basis of the years to which the income was attributable.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator take the very case to which the Senator from Maryland has referred and indicate how it is taken care of in the relief provision? Does he mean that there will be special action by the Department?

Mr. HARRISON. The general provision for relief cases would take care of that specific case. The general provision is found on page 109.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. The word "abnormalities" is used. In the case of abnormalities in income in the taxable period, a commission is set up which is fully authorized to deal with abnormal cases and work out justice so far as possible. Of course, a great amount of discretion is left to the organization.

Mr. DANAHER. It should be. I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Michigan desire to ask any questions?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall be glad to yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the able and distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], has presented his general view without embarrassing himself with too much detailed illumination regarding the pending tax measure.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator did not want me to give too much detailed information; did he? We have had enough in the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I think the Senator, from his own viewpoint, is much wiser and safer to leave out the details.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now, as a very humble member of the Finance Committee, I wish to present my general view of the bill.

My general view is that in respect to its so-called excess profits tax provisions the bill is an imponderable mess which will do more harm than good. It will create more problems than it will solve. It will slow down instead of speed up the productivity of America, and it will fail of any reasonable achievement, either in respect to the limitation of so-called war profits or in respect to the production of any revenue remotely approaching the staggering necessities of the debt-ridden Government. I know of no sure achievement the bill can anticipate except an increase in the sale of aspirin. [Laughter.]

First, I wish freely to concede my agreement with the able Senator from Mississippi that the Senate Finance Committee has tremendously improved the bill. Of course, there is a confusing difference of opinion on that subject. The Treasury Department seems to think the Senate Finance Committee has "submarined" the bill. I do not know to what extent I am entitled to refer to the devastating testimony of Treasury Department representatives before the Senate Finance Committee in executive session. I feel somewhat limited by the earnest desire of the chairman not to have too much said about that disconcerting phase of the matter. But I wish to absolve the distinguished chairman of the committee of any responsibility for delay in connection with this legislation. The newspapers have been belaboring Congress for not being even more reckless in the pell-mell speed with which they have wanted us to rush along with this complicated measure, which they will ultimately find, to their consternation, affects every economic value in the land—and usually adversely. However, the genial and indefatigable chairman of the Senate Finance Committee emphatically is not to blame for any of the delay. If ever I saw a man consumed with a positive passion to get something off his hands and be rid of it, for better or worse, it is my able friend. He does not believe in lengthened agonies. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, even though the Senate committee version is a great improvement over the House bill from the standpoint of most of us, the fact remains that ultimately both versions will go to conference; and my experience with most tax conferences between the Senate and the House is that the House ideas are entirely too authoritative.

So we still confront the element of hazard, still inherent in the House bill, as asserted by the able chairman of the committee himself, plus the hazard inherent in the Senate bill. Meanwhile we confront the total jeopardy, to which I shall shortly refer in detail, which is wrapped up in every line of the sinister tax sections of this measure. The American people have little idea of what is about to happen to them.

I repeat that, under the expert guidance of the able Senator from Mississippi, the bill is decidedly improved, from my point of view, but it is still the most incomprehensible maze which American business has ever been required to thread.

The Senate committee has considerably simplified the bill—I concede that also—but, as one of our own committee experts observed, this bill still penetrates more deeply into the wilderness of incomprehensibility than we have ever taken the American taxpayer before—and that is "going some."

The same expert added that the chief source of revenue to the Government from this bill will be from the income tax on accountants and lawyers who will have to be hired by every taxpayer to guess at its meaning.

That is not my estimate; that is the estimate of the best tax expert I know of related to the congressional work of the House and Senate in respect to taxation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, so that the RECORD will show it, let me ask, who is the expert to whom the Senator referred, and is he connected with the Treasury?

Mr. VANDENBERG. He is not connected with the Treasury. I do not care to name him unless the Senator wishes me to do so, and then I shall.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator might do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am quoting the chief legislative counsel of the House, who made the statement in the presence of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not in the hearings, then?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not recall it being there.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is very little of the underlying truth about this measure in the hearings.

I venture the assertion, Mr. President, that no Member of the Senate, particularly including the able chairman of the committee, would dare take the responsibility of advising any of his constituents precisely how to fill out the detail of his tax return under this bill. If there are any volunteers, I should like to have them rise. I observe that prudence keeps them in their seats.

Such legislation, Mr. President, is indefensible, and it is doubly indefensible when it is needless. This excess-profits-tax law is needless at the moment, not because the Government does not require vast funds but because not one penny can be collected under it until March 15 next. Thus we could have 6 months in which to rewrite the whole tax structure in the light of full exploration, in deliberative consideration of all the interests of our whole people, and with some reasonable degree of approach to the revenue which soon must be produced if the Federal Government is to escape bankruptcy or worse. This is merely a patchwork stopgap. It is whistling through the woods or through that wilderness to which I have previously referred.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Sullivan, a very capable, candid, and efficient official, frankly said to me in the committee hearing that the Treasury's responsibility will undoubtedly force it to ask for another tax bill before the end of the present fiscal year. We have already had one; here is the second; and the third is "on order," or, shall we say in the new parlance, "on intention"? Instead of this helter-skelter formula, which starts nowhere and gets nowhere, Congress should make one thorough, comprehensive, and equitable job of the whole business, even if it never takes a recess. Some things are more important than elections.

Mr. President, there is no defense emergency connected with the excess-profits-tax section of the bill, because, I repeat, no tax collections can be made under it until March 15 next. But there is a defense emergency connected with the new amortization and depreciation sections of the bill. But the two are unrelated so far as the emergency goes—and this point ought to be borne constantly in mind—except that it has not been deemed politic to grant the latter essential appeasements to business without at the same time attacking business profits.

The National Defense Council, the War and Navy Departments, and the President have said that new arrangements regarding amortization and depreciation are indispensably necessary if we are to expect private industry to use its own funds in plant expansion to meet a defense emergency, which may and should stop long before private industry could reasonably recoup its investments.

As a matter of cold, hard-headed fact, as clearly demonstrated by the able Senator from Georgia on the floor of the Senate, even this part of the bill probably is not necessary, because the Treasury Department already has full legal authority to make amortization and depreciation contracts that measure the useful life of a facility. But far be it from me to quarrel with any department of this administration which underestimates its own legal authority. So I go along with the idea of prompt and effective action in general harmony with the urgent request of the defense authorities. I may say, parenthetically, that the so-called emergency sections of the bill relating to amortization, depreciation, and so forth, could have been passed 2 months ago if they had been separated from the tax tangle as they should have been. I asked it then. I wanted action. I ask it now.

I unequivocally go along, too, with the idea of a war-profits tax or a preparedness-profits tax which will save us from the undemocratic curse known as the war millionaire or anything like it. But the two things need not be joined unless we are afraid to trust ourselves to do the second thing, independently and adequately, after we have separately done the first thing. I prefer to take the chance and to stay here and do a real tax job. This is doubly advisable in view of the Treasury's warning that we must have another tax bill during the fiscal year anyway.

Mr. President, in this bill we are guilty of five untenable things.

First. In the name of a tax upon so-called excess profits, which the country erroneously assumes bears some conclusive relationship to the preparedness billions which are to go into circulation, we gouge into the normal profits of almost every corporation in the land making more than $10,000 a year, or $5,000 a year, under the terms of the House bill; and this gouge into normal profits is not equally and equitably distributed, as should be the case when we start in earnest to finance our staggering deficits and our enormous defense expenditures.

We need a plan, Mr. President, not only for national defense but a plan for financing national defense. We have no plan whatever for financing national defense in the long view. We are simply attacking the problem piecemeal from day to day, and not very much piecemeal at that. We need a plan. We have none. I am pleading for one. When we get it, I will do everything within my power to cooperate.

Secondly, in the pious name of a defense emergency we rush into speculative and uncertain tax formulas affecting almost the entire sum total of American business, at least, that section of it making more than $10,000 net a year; and we already are on notice that it will so seriously affect the normal earnings of many enterprises wholly unrelated to the national defense that the so-called general relief section of the bill will have to be so generally embraced that it will make a shambles of the whole sad affair.

I agree with the statement of the able Senator from Mississippi when he says that the relief section is probably the most important section of the bill. In other words, what has been specifically written is of far less concern and importance than the arrangements which have been put into the bill to get away from the other things which are written into the bill. Such a process bears no remote kinship to sound legislative action.

Third. To accomplish our hasty objective, by needlessly commingling these unrelated matters we present the taxpayer with so dense a puzzle that only a Philadelphia lawyer, a certified public accountant, and an extraordinarily clever crystal gazer in combined effort can chart the answer; and even then the courts will finally have to find out precisely what we thought we were doing when we wrote the law.

One can test that statement, Mr. President, by taking up this bill and opening it anywhere he pleases. I do not intend to labor the subject, but let us open the bill at random and see what we find, on page 93, describing the repayment of the processing tax to vendees. This is the simple little problem which Congress is about to lay on the desks of 50,000 corporation executives in the United States:

> The deduction under section 23 (a), for any taxable year, for expenses shall be decreased by an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount deductible on account of any repayment or credit by the corporation to its vendee of any amount attributable to any tax under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended, as the excess of the aggregate of the amounts so deductible in the base period over the aggregate of the amounts attributable to taxes under such act collected from its vendees—

I pause to draw my breath [laughter]— > which were includible in the corporation's gross income in the base period and which were not paid, bears to the aggregate of the amounts so deductible in the base period.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will let the Senator ask me anything except to explain what in the world that provision means.

Mr. HARRISON. Was not that provision offered by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, indeed.

Mr. HARRISON. He was insisting upon such an amendment going into the relief provisions of the law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan was never insisting upon any amendment in any such language as that. The Senator from Michigan was insisting that there should be a complete exemption in respect to processing taxes; but whether this is what I was talking about or not I leave to the Senator. If he says it is, I am grateful and happy; but I doubt whether even he would dare give me that assurance.

Mr. HARRISON. I was delighted when the committee accepted the insistence of the Senator from Michigan upon incorporating such a provision in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the purpose which the Senator describes is excellent. I am just wondering whether we have reached the purpose. I cannot recognize in this meandering language anything I ever talked about. It certainly cinches my point if the father of an idea cannot even recognize his own child.

There are so many other sections of the bill which are of a similar character that it hardly seems necessary to multiply the exhibits. I do not care where any taxpayer opens the bill; I defy him, short of an ultimate headache, to start to approximate an understanding of what his obligation is if he happens to be just an ordinary American businessman engaged in the humble necessity of trying to earn a living, in spite of his Government.

Mr. President, I attribute this difficulty chiefly to the fact that we have tried to hurry our way through this problem, instead of taking the time which is necessary to rewrite the fundamental tax structure of the country, as we could effectively do between now and March 15, when the first collections will be made.

I said there were five untenable things of which the pending bill is guilty. I have suggested three.

Fourth. The revenue we raise, some three hundred or four hundred million dollars a year, is not even a small down payment on our debts and deficits. This is only a penny-in-the-slot bill so far as the Treasury's fiscal needs actually are concerned. This tax bill and its predecessor will produce a total of something like $1,000,000,000 in this fiscal year. The deficit for the same fiscal year will crowd $10,000,000,000. We are not even within gunshot of the red ink. Every sane person knows that this cannot go on. Every sane person knows that the protection of the public credit is a primary need of true national defense. All the more the reason why we should address ourselves now to a real tax bill, instead of smugly dismissing the problem with a pious shadow-boxing gesture.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator, of course, recalls that the chief of our staff, in presenting the estimates for 1941 under the Senate bill, estimated the amount of revenue at $882,500,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator recalls that when the Treasury experts were asked for an estimate they said they did not have the figures, but could only give us those for this year, in which we all know we could not raise much—the amount of $355,000,000, I believe—but that in that instance Mr. Stam said that he estimated the revenue for 1940 at $482,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. All right; $482,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. That is for 1940. But in that year very little revenue will be derived from defense expenditures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. Any estimate beyond 1940 is wholly and purely a matter of complete speculation; so much so that the Treasury has declined to give the committee any substantial estimates beyond the current fiscal year, and in the current fiscal year it puts the figure, if you please, around $400,000,000. Still, when the committee goes through the hard process of writing an excess-profits-tax bill, which is pretty nearly the last tax recourse of the country, and in the presence of an accumulated deficit in this fiscal year alone of $10,000,000,000, the committee produces only $400,000,000, I repeat that the mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse.

That is not the worst of it, from my point of view. This is supposed to be an excess-profits-tax law; but out of the $400,000,000 to which the Senator from Mississippi refers, only $115,000,000 comes from alleged excess-profits taxes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is wrong there.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Just a minute. Against that $115,000,000 there must be a deduction of $15,000,000 on account of the loss in personal, private incomes as a result of the reflex of the law on corporations; so the net production of revenue under this bill from the alleged excess-profits section of it is $100,000,000, or about the cost of one battleship.

I now yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think, to be fair, that he ought to give the figures for 1941 instead of 1940?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator wants to guess about 1941 I am quite willing to welcome his speculation.

Mr. HARRISON. All estimates are guesses to some extent; but if the Senator will look into the guesses made by the experts of the Treasury and those made by the experts of the joint committee, he will find that our experts have been in some instances more correct than the Treasury experts.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the point the Senator is making?

Mr. HARRISON. I might say—the Senator seems to criticize the estimates a great deal—that I would rather have the estimates of the staff of the joint committee than the estimates of the gentlemen in the Treasury, which were wrong a good many times.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the estimate of the experts whom the Senator prefers as to income in this fiscal year from the excess-profits section of this tax?

Mr. HARRISON. In 1940?

Mr. VANDENBERG. What does this bill provide from excess-profits taxation?

Mr. HARRISON. The Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I want the Senator's favorite experts, the experts of the joint committee's staff.

Mr. HARRISON. I was about to tell the Senator the difference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Treasury said there would be $115,000,000 of excess profits.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. That is what I said.

Mr. HARRISON. For 1940, which is almost gone.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. HARRISON. And our own experts said the amount would be $250,000,000 for 1940, which is almost gone. As to 1941, the Treasury experts did not hazard a guess, but our own experts estimated $600,000,000 from excess profits.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator's figures do not in the slightest degree change the contemplation which I am submitting. When he speaks of the year 1940 as "almost gone," I remind him we are talking about a fiscal year which does not end until June 30, 1941. Technically, it is the fiscal year of 1941.

In the first place, when it comes to an estimate of revenue from the excess-profits tax on this year's fiscal business, the Treasury ought to know what it is talking about. The only figure I heard submitted to the Senate Finance Committee is an estimate of $115,000,000 for the present fiscal year from the excess-profits-tax section of the law. What I am submitting to the Senate is that it is not worth $115,000,000 to put American business to the headache, to say the least, which it contemplates when it confronts the tremendously complicated computation which this bill requires. Even this figure must be reduced by $15,000,000 more because of reflected loss from personal-income taxes.

It is not worth $100,000,000 to submit American business to the anxieties and the terrorisms which would rise in any taxpayer's heart if he tried to read this bill and find out what he owed his Government.

One hundred million dollars used to be a great deal of money, but now it does not make so much difference whether the deficit at the end of this fiscal year is $10,000,000,000 or $9,900,000,000. It does make a great deal of difference whether American business in the interim can be released to full productivity, full steam ahead, a full use of its entire productive impulses. It should be relieved of any needless requirement to spend its time threading its way through any such bill as the one before us, which anyone must concede is the most incomprehensible piece of legislation ever presented in the Congress of the United States.

It is not worth $100,000,000 to have the excess-profits section of the bill in the law. It does not produce essential revenue. It certainly does not penalize so-called war millionaires to any effective degree. It is in no sense an answer to the prayer and hope of many of us that we should write an excess-profits-tax law in respect to war and preparedness which would take all of the profit out of war. It is not an excess-profits tax on the reality of the situation, it is not a revenue tax on the reality of the situation, it is not an anti-profiteering tax on the reality of the situation. It is just $100,000,000 worth of anxiety thrown into the American business world, and I submit it is the poorest bargain Congress ever undertook to make.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I think the bill will defeat its own presumed purposes, because, I repeat, it will hamper business and that not only hampers national defense but it also hampers the expanded national income, which is our sole hope of ever paying our bills.

Three or four hundred million dollars, I repeat, used to be a great deal of money, but it is precious little compared with our present and prospective astronomical needs, and it is a costly increment if it deters the larger aim.

There is only one way in which we can once more achieve Federal solvency. It cannot be done by inventing new taxes, always finally paid, as President Roosevelt once correctly said, out of the sweat of labor. It can only be done by increasing the national income to an extent which, under rational tax levies, will produce the needed Federal income. We must become a $100,000,000,000 country instead of a $70,000,000,000 country. That cannot be done just by spending the difference. It can only be done by realizing and releasing the full power and impulse of private business and private enterprise. We lose more than we seem superficially to gain when we seriously cramp these economic forces in our economic life. In my humble opinion, that is precisely what the so-called excess-profits-tax section of the bill is best calculated to do.

Remember, it is not a war-profits or a preparedness-profits tax, despite comfortable pretense to the contrary; it is a tax which reaches into the normal profits, and which, through its involved formulas, may seriously cripple the normal profits of thousands of essential corporations. No one can set limits to this hazard. The bill is a shot in the dark, like an arrow sped into the night. The House bill affects 75,000 corporations, representing the preponderance of American business. The Senate bill affects 50,000. In the course of hasty, pressure hearings, in which each threatened taxpayer was given just 10 minutes in which to tell why the bill would all but ruin him, scores of witnesses proved that the complex ramifications of the bill would burden them beyond endurance, tax them wholly out of proportion to the kindred load carried by others, and often create competitive handicaps which could be fatal. I commend the earnest efforts that were made in each of these instances to correct the inequities which had to be frankly confessed by our own experts. I commend the general relief section which was added to the House bill in the desperate hope that it might relieve other abnormalities. But if these threats exist in the case of these relatively few corporations which found out what was in store for them, and which were able to get here to plead for mercy before these hasty hearings were rushed to a foreclosing finish, who shall say what will be the result upon the rest of the 50,000 when their lawyers and their accountants and their crystal-gazers finally figure out what the bill means to them?

It is a shocking speculation at a time when we have no business to speculate at all. It is poor consolation to refer these victims to a relief section which puts them at the mercy of downtown bureaucrats, although this is infinitely better than no hope at all. The truth is that we have only a vague idea of what we are doing, and I shall respectfully assert that we have no right thus to gamble with the property of our citizenship.

I have not heard any of them complain against carrying their fair share of the increased tax burden which they all know is inevitable in order to pay our deficits of yesterday and our debts of tomorrow. They complain only against an unfair distribution of the load; and they have repeatedly proved that the bill involves an unfair distribution of the load. They complain only that a bill which the country thinks is aimed at "war millionaires" actually hits all business, and probably does not conclusively curtail any war millionaires at all—actually hits all business, even though it is totally unrelated to the new defense spending; and particularly hits middle-class business and especially new business which has had the courage to tempt fate and fortune during the last 4 discouraging years of the so-called base period under the bill. The bill would freeze an arbitrary, existing profits level, and, without any regard to whether undue enrichment is involved, it would say that anything beyond this norm is excessive and subject to attack. I can think of nothing better calculated to depress normal peacetime industrial activities, and retard the normal growth and expansion, upon which employment depends, and upon which we must rely finally for the development of sufficient resources with which to liquidate our national obligations.

The real emergency purpose of the bill is to remove barriers to industrial expansion for defense necessities. That is why it was devised; that is why it was sought. These necessities are entirely and completely confined to other sections of the bill than the tax section, which I have discussed. These necessities are met by other sections of the bill. I think in some respects these other sections are too liberal. I am frank to say that I voted in committee to curtail them; but I am not opposing them. On the contrary, I shall support them, because to do otherwise would be to vote a lack of confidence particularly in the National Advisory Defense Council. That I shall not do so long as men like William S. Knudsen are in charge. But I respectfully submit that it is a ghastly paradox to facilitate business in these sections of the bill, business directly related to national defense, and then to jeopardize business, regardless of whether it has defense orders or not, in the tax section of the bill.

We are emphatically told that the emergency requires prompt action on amortization and depreciation. Very well; let there be action at once. I favor it. We can divide the bill. No one can pretend that there is any particular emergency connected with the so-called excess-profits tax, because it will not raise enough money to pay our bills for 2 weeks, and, in any event, there can be no collections until next March 15.

Mr. President, does this mean that I want to immunize real excess profits—war profits—excess preparedness profits? Emphatically no. I would be among the first to tax them to the limit. But the bill does not do that. Where there are real war profits—the kind which scandalized our experience in 1917 and 1918—the bill only snipes at them. It is in no sense adequate. It would merely divide the loot. It is neither a revenue measure nor a war-profits measure. It is a sort of shotgun stopgap which pretends a vigilance which does not actually exist. It is the worst of all the so-called emergency measures which, in recent years, we have rushed to completion on the theory that speed is better than assurance.

This is what I am trying to say, Mr. President. The tax title of the bill should be separated from the rest, or at least the excess profits tax section of the bill, leaving in, if you please, the flat normal increase in corporation taxes. The excess-profits section of the bill should be separated from the rest, and the Congress should settle down to the long, hard grind of rewriting the whole Federal tax structure, first, for the purpose of producing something like the revenues which are necessary to keep the Capitol out of the bankruptcy court; second, for the purpose of effectively stopping undue enrichment out of national defense and—God save the mark—out of war if it shall needlessly come to the American people.

On the latter score, Mr. President, there are several pending proposals, notably that presented by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], in behalf of his subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee, but it is impossible to give it adequate consideration as a floor amendment to the pending bill, in view of the pressure for prompt enactment of other features of the bill, as demanded by the Council of National Defense and the defense departments of the Government.

Then there are the proposals of the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which I have always heretofore supported. I consider that the able Senator from Wisconsin knows more in ultimate detail about taxation than any other Member of this body. But here, again, there is no adequate opportunity in this forum under the pressure of the moment to assess and explore even the La Follette proposal to a degree which the importance and the tremendous magnitude of the subject demands. There are still other proposals which this legislative "blitzkrieg" rules out of any deliberate consideration.

There was one in particular, Mr. President, which presents a brand new theory of excess-profits taxation, which, in my humble judgment, it would be a calamity not to explore before we commit the country again to the old excess profits tax theory upon which we heretofore have operated.

This suggestion, Mr. President, was submitted to the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but he had only 10 minutes to give to it—and that is not said critically, because all of us were under a pressure which utterly precluded deliberation. The suggestion was submitted to the head of our staff of experts of the Joint Congressional Committee on Taxation. He could give it only 10 minutes, because in 10 more minutes he had to meet the chairman of the committee, who in 10 minutes had to meet the committee, which in 10 more minutes had to start hearing the witnesses, each for 10 minutes apiece. Did someone once say that this is the greatest deliberative body in the world? Did someone say we have not been hurrying?

This suggestion, Mr. President, is that excess profits be measured by the ratio of profits to pay roll. The formula is very simple. The total pay roll for the period 1936 to 1939, and the total profits for the same period, would be determined. The percentage which the total profit bears to the total pay roll would be the company's normal profit. This percentage, applied to the pay roll of the current year, would be the amount exempt from excess-profits tax. That is all there is to the formula. It avoids all the imponderability of the pending text, and it refuses to say that American business has reached a point where anything above 5 or 6 or 7 percent hereafter is excess profits which ought to be punitively discouraged. You cannot build the future of America on that basis, because you cannot turn this from a $70,000,000,000 country into a $100,000,000,000 country, unless you remove the hurdles and the obstacles which confront business and give it encouragement instead of obstruction.

Let me say how this proposal would work. A corporation with an average pay roll of $15,000 for the last 4 years, and an average profit for the same period of $10,000, would have a normal profit allowance of two-thirds of its pay roll. If its pay roll for 1940 increased to $30,000, two-thirds of this amount, or $20,000 increase, would be exempt from excess-profits tax. Any profit in excess of $20,000 would be excess profits subject to tax.

The pay roll upon which the credit is based would be the pay roll subject to social-security taxes. This would exclude wages and salaries in excess of $3,000, and make the base correspond to the wages actually paid to workers. Profits would be determined by taking net income for income-tax purposes and deducting the normal tax, as is done elsewhere in the bill for computing excess profits.

This proposal particularly interests me, Mr. President, and I was told yesterday by probably the leading tax expert in Washington that it is the first time in 35 years he has found an excess-tax formula which not only is simple but which actually encourages American development instead of punishing it when it occurs.

That proposal particularly interests me, because it appears to be a practical application of an incentive principle which I have long favored, namely, to remove tax barriers to healthy business expansion, and thus to encourage increased income and employment.

As I have stated, my chief concern about the present bill is that it will stunt the growth of small businesses by taxing away any increased profits regardless of their source. If the law can be so framed as to encourage normal expansion and increased employment, without permitting speculative and unjust profits, I am wholeheartedly behind it.

The relations of profits to pay roll may be, and probably is, the one fundamental method of accomplishing this purpose. Under this method, an increase in the company's pay roll, either by employing more men or by raising wages, will increase the exemption from excess-profits taxes. This seems to me highly desirable. It will furnish a strong incentive to create jobs and to pay liberal wages.

But, Mr. President, there is no opportunity here to consider a thing of this sort. It would not even be fair to offer it textually as an amendment to the bill. We have no time to perfect the bill under the lash of emergency which is applied to it at the moment, a lash which need not be applied, so far as the realities of emergency are concerned, because the emergency applies only to amortization and depreciation and Vinson-Trammell prohibitions, and those sections of the proposed law can be separated, as they could have been 2 months ago, and passed in 24 hours.

There simply is not a chance to do a workmanlike job on the most fundamental necessity in a fiscal sense which confronts the American people. We have a sort of a plan for national defense. We have absolutely no plan for financing national defense, and the plan to finance it is just as essential in the long view as the plan to produce it, because the public credit in the last analysis is the first line of national defense.

The excess profits tax section of the bill is neither an excess-profits tax in the true sense of the word nor a revenue tax in the true sense of the word, nor an anti-war-millionaires tax in the true sense of the word. It is nothing except a stopgap effort to shadow-box with this emergency.

Mr. President, this is no time to shake dice with the destiny of American business. The tax sections of the bill are premature and immature. In my humble judgment, we should reject them. In my humble judgment, Congress should then dedicate itself to the desperately important task of rewriting the tax laws of the country with sufficiently unhurried deliberation so that we may do full justice to the Government and to the legitimate rights of every citizen within its jurisdiction. We are desperately in need of money. This bill does not produce it in any adequate degree. We need to stop undue enrichment out of this national emergency. This bill does not adequately stop it. The supreme tragedy of the situation is that the country will be led to believe that we are facing these necessities when we are not. It is time for candor and realism. Pass those titles of the bill which are needed for the national defense. Delete the tax title, which has no emergency character whatever. Then make a real job of writing a real tax bill which will answer our national necessities and our congressional responsibility.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the New York Times of this morning, entitled "Good Advice on Taxes," be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of September 13, 1940]

GOOD ADVICE ON TAXES

An excess-profits tax ought to be enacted before Congress adjourns, but the present bill is being rushed through in such haste that it cannot receive the careful study it demands. Even previous experience with this form of tax or previous studies of it seem to have been largely ignored. One of the most important of these studies was printed by the War Policies Commission in 1932. In that report Arthur A. Ballantine, then Under Secretary of the Treasury, is quoted as remarking:

"Working out a carefully formulated war-profits tax is a matter calling for the most careful effort on the part of some body of experts who, uninfluenced by actual emergency conditions, could study the problem in the requisite detail and carefully formulate at least the framework of a statute which would be both workable and effective."

It is instructive to recall also what Mr. Ballantine and the Commission had to say in that report about the principles that should apply to such a tax:

"The ideal war-income tax would bring into the Treasury the entire amount of profits due to the war. * * * The problem here is not as to the principle to be followed, for that is clear, but as to the technical difficulties of so formulating a war-profits tax that it will measurably accomplish its purpose without preventing the necessary operation of the economic machine."

This means that the main basis of an excess-profits tax must be some fair average of the earnings of a corporation in the years preceding that to which the tax is applied. While certain minimum earnings on invested capital must be allowed as an alternative for new or enlarged corporations or those which have had subnormal earnings during the "standard" prearmament period, the War Policies Commission presented the strongest reasons why earnings on invested capital should not be preferred as the main basis for the tax, as it is in effect in the bill that emerged from the House. Said the Commission:

"He (Mr. Ballantine) insisted that the method of recapturing war profits should be made simple and effective. Most of the administrative difficulties arising out of the excess profits tax law were due to the necessity of ascertaining invested capital. This base should not be used in another war. Some of the provisions of the law were so highly complicated that they could not even be litigated because they could not be reduced to logical argument, pro and con. The determination of what constituted invested capital was an insoluble problem during the continuance of the tax, and is still unsolved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States nominating Jesse H. Jones, of Texas, to be Secretary of Commerce, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the Finance Committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I assume that the general debate on the bill has come to a conclusion, although, if I may be permitted to say so, it seems very inadequate, in view of the importance of the issues involved. However, if we are now about to proceed to dispose of the first committee amendment, I wish to offer an amendment as a substitute for the first and second committee amendments, being titles I and II.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin in the nature of a substitute for titles I and II will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted by the committee, beginning on page 81, line 8, and extending down to and including line 10 on page 141, being titles I and II, it is proposed to insert the following:

TITLE I—EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

SEC. 101. Excess-profits tax of 1940.

The Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting, after section 706, the following new subchapter, which may be cited as the "Excess-Profits Tax Act of 1940":

"SUBCHAPTER E—EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

"SEC. 710. Imposition of tax.

"(a) Imposition: There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, on the excess-profits net income, as defined in section 711, of every corporation (except a corporation exempt under section 725) a tax equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) First bracket: 25 percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as does not exceed 7 percent of the invested capital;

"(2) Second bracket: 40 percent of so much of the remainder of the adjusted excess-profits net income as does not exceed 15 percent of the invested capital;

"(3) Third bracket: 50 percent of so much of the adjusted excess-profits net income as is not taxed under the first and second brackets.

"(b) Definition of adjusted excess-profits net income: As used in this subchapter, the term 'adjusted excess-profits net income' in the case of any taxable year means the excess-profits net income minus the sum of:

"(1) Specific exemption: A specific exemption of $5,000; and

"(2) Excess-profits credit: The amount of the excess-profits credit computed under section 712.

"SEC. 711. Excess-profits net income.

"(a) Excess-profits net income: The excess-profits net income for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, shall be the normal-tax net income, as defined in section 13 (a) (2), for such year, except that the following adjustments shall be made:

"(1) Dividends received: The credit for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to all dividends on stock of all corporations, except dividends (actual or constructive) on stock of foreign personal holding companies;

"(2) Interest: The deduction for interest shall be reduced by an amount equal to 50 percent of so much of such interest as represents interest on the indebtedness included in the daily amounts of borrowed capital (determined under section 717 (a));

"(3) Income taxes: The deduction for taxes shall be increased by an amount equal to the tax under chapter 1 for such taxable year;

"(4) Long-term gains and losses: There shall be excluded long-term capital gains and losses. There shall be excluded the excess of gains from the sale or exchange of property held for more than 18 months which is of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 23 (l) over the losses from the sale or exchange of such property; and

"(5) Income from retirement or discharge of bonds, etc.: There shall be excluded, in the case of any taxpayer, income (including amounts includible in income for the taxable year in which retirement or discharge occurs, on account of premium received upon issuance) derived from the retirement or discharge by the taxpayer of any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than 18 months;

"(6) Deductions on account of retirement or discharge of bonds, etc.: If during the taxable year the taxpayer retires or discharges any bond, debenture, note, or certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than 18 months, the following deductions for such taxable year shall not be allowed:

"(i) The deduction allowable under section 23 (a) for expenses paid or incurred in connection with such retirement or discharge;

"(ii) The deduction for losses allowable by reason of such retirement or discharge; and

"(iii) The deduction allowable on account of the issuance at a discount of the bond, debenture, note, or certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness retired or discharged; and

"(7) Refunds and interest on Agricultural Adjustment Act taxes: There shall be excluded income attributable to refund of tax paid under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended, and interest upon any such refund.

"(8) Interest on certain Government obligations: The normal-tax net income shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) The interest on such obligations of the United States or of corporations organized under Act of Congress, as under their terms, is not exempt from excess-profits taxes, and

"(B) If the taxpayer has elected under section 718 (b) to treat for the taxable year as admissible assets other obligations of the character described under section 22 (b) (4), the interest on such other obligations.

"(b) Taxable year less than 12 months: If the taxable year is a period of less than 12 months the excess-profits net income shall be placed on an annual basis by multiplying the amount thereof by the number of days in the 12 months ending with the close of the taxable year and dividing by the number of days in the taxable year. The tax shall be such part of the tax computed on such annual basis as the number of days in the taxable year is of the number of days in the 12 months ending with the close of the taxable year.

"Sec. 712. Excess profits credit.

"The excess-profits credit shall consist of an amount equal to 8 percent of the invested capital for the taxable year determined under section 713.

"Sec. 713. Definition of invested capital.

"For the purposes of this subchapter the invested capital for any taxable year shall be the average invested capital for such year, determined under section 714, reduced by an amount computed under section 718 (relating to inadmissible assets). For computation of invested capital in case of foreign corporations, see section 722.)

"Sec. 714. Average invested capital.

"The average invested capital for any taxable year for which the tax under this subchapter is being computed shall be the aggregate of the daily invested capital for each day of such taxable year, divided by the number of days in such taxable year.

"Sec. 715. Daily invested capital.

"The daily invested capital for any day of the taxable year shall be the sum of the equity invested capital for such day plus the borrowed invested capital for such day determined under section 717.

"Sec. 716. Equity invested capital.

"(a) Definition: The equity invested capital for any day of any taxable year shall be determined as of the beginning of such day and shall be the sum of the following amounts, reduced as provided in subsection (b)—

"(1) Money paid in: Money previously paid in for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital;

"(2) Property paid in: Property (other than money) previously paid in (regardless of the time paid in) for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital. Such property shall be included in an amount equal to its basis (unadjusted) for determining loss upon sale or exchange. If the property was disposed of before such taxable year, such basis shall be determined in the same manner as if the property were still held at the beginning of such taxable year. If such unadjusted basis is a substitute basis it shall be adjusted, with respect to the period before the property was paid in, in the manner provided in section 113 (b) (2);

"(3) Taxable stock dividends: Distributions in stock—

"(A) Made prior to such taxable year to the extent to which they are considered distributions of earnings and profits; and

"(B) Previously made during such taxable year to the extent to which they are considered distributions of earnings and profits other than earnings and profits of such taxable year; and

"(4) Earnings and profits at beginning of year: The accumulated earnings and profits as of the beginning of such taxable year.

"(b) Reduction in equity invested capital: The amount by which the equity invested capital for any day shall be reduced as provided in subsection (a) shall be the sum of the following amounts—

"(1) Distributions in previous years: Distributions made prior to such taxable year which were not out of accumulated earnings and profits;

"(2) Distributions during the year: Distributions previously made during such taxable year which are not out of the earnings and profits of such taxable years; and

"(3) Earnings and profits of transferor corporation: The earnings and profits of a transferor corporation which previously at any time were included in accumulated earnings and profits by reason of property of such transferor having been paid in for shares of, or as a contribution to the capital of, or as paid-in surplus of, the transferee corporation.

"(c) Rules for application of subsections (a) and (b): For the purposes of subsections (a) and (b)—

"(1) Distributions to shareholders: The term 'distribution' means a distribution by a corporation to its shareholders, and the term 'distribution in stock' means a distribution by a corporation in its stock or rights to acquire its stock. To the extent that a distribution in stock is not considered a distribution of earnings and profits it shall not be considered a distribution. A distribution in stock shall not be regarded as money or property paid in for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or as a contribution to capital.

"(2) Distributions in first 60 days of taxable year: In the application of such subsections to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1940, so much of the distributions (taken in the order of time) made during the first 60 days thereof as does not exceed the accumulated earnings and profits as of the beginning thereof (computed without regard to this paragraph) shall be considered to have been made on the last day of the preceding taxable year.

"(3) Computation of earnings and profits of taxable year: For the purposes of subsections (a) (3) (B) and (b) (2) in determining whether a distribution is out of the earnings and profits of any taxable year, such earnings and profits shall be computed as of the close of such taxable year without diminution by reason of any distribution made during such taxable year or by reason of the tax under this subchapter for such year and the determination shall be made without regard to the amount of earnings and profits at the time the distribution was made.

"(d) For determination of equity invested capital in special cases, see section 721.

"(e) For special rules affecting computation of equity invested capital in connection with certain exchanges and liquidations, see section 719.

"Sec. 717. Borrowed invested capital.

"(a) Borrowed capital: The borrowed capital for any day of any taxable year shall be determined as of the beginning of such day and shall be the amount of the outstanding indebtedness of the taxpayer which is evidenced by a bond, note, bill of exchange, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust; except that borrowed capital shall not include—

"(1) Interest;

"(2) Indebtedness described in section 719 (c) relating to certain exchanges; and

"(3) If the taxpayer is at any time within the taxable year a member of a controlled group, indebtedness owed to a corporation which is a member of such controlled group. As used in this paragraph 'controlled group' means one or more chains of corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation if (A) stock of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) possessing more than 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations, or more than 80 percent in value of the stock of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations; and (B) the common parent corporation owns directly stock of at least one of the other corporations possessing more than 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote, or the common parent corporation owns directly more than 80 percent in value of the stock of at least one of the other corporations.

"(b) Borrowed invested capital: The borrowed invested capital for any day of any taxable year shall be determined as of the beginning of such day and shall be an amount equal to 50 percent of the borrowed capital for such day.

"Sec. 718. Admissible and inadmissible assets.

"(a) Definitions: For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) The term 'inadmissible assets' means—

"(A) Stock in corporations except stock in a foreign personal-holding company; and

"(B) Except as provided in subsection (d), obligations described in section 22 (b) (4) (A), (B), or (C) any part of the interest from which is excludible from gross income or allowable as a credit against net income.

"(2) The term 'admissible assets' means all assets other than inadmissible assets.

"(b) Ratio of inadmissibles to total assets: The amount by which the average invested capital for any taxable year shall be reduced as provided in section 713 shall be an amount which is the same percentage of such average invested capital as the percentage which the total of the inadmissible assets is of the total of admissible and inadmissible assets. For such purpose, the amount attributable to each asset held at any time during such taxable year shall be determined by ascertaining the adjusted basis thereof (or, in the case of money, the amount thereof) for each day of such taxable year so held and adding such daily amounts. The determination of such daily amounts shall be made under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of the taxable year for which the tax under this subchapter is being determined, the adjusted basis shall be the adjusted basis for determining loss upon sale or exchange as determined under section 113.

"(c) Computation if short-term capital gain: If during the taxable year there has been a short-term capital gain with respect to an inadmissible asset, then so much of the amount attributable to such inadmissible asset under subsection (b) as bears the same ratio thereto as such gain bears to the sum of such gain plus the dividends and interest on such asset for such year, shall, for the purpose of determining the ratio of inadmissible assets to the total of admissible and inadmissible assets, be added to the total of admissible assets and subtracted from the total of inadmissible assets.

"(d) Certain Government obligations treated as admissible assets: The following obligations shall be considered, for the purposes of this section, as admissible assets and shall not be considered inadmissible assets:

"(1) All obligations of the United States or of corporations organized under act of Congress held during the taxable year the interest on which is includible in computing excess profits net income for the taxable year under section 711 (a) (8); and

"(2) All obligations (other than obligations described in paragraph (1)) of the character described in section 22 (b) (4), if the taxpayer elects in its return for such year to treat all such obligations as admissible assets.

"Sec. 719. Determination of property paid in for stock and of borrowed capital in connection with certain exchanges.

"(a) Definitions: As used in this section—

"(1) Exchange: The term 'exchange' means an exchange, to which section 112 (b) (4) or (5) or so much of section 112 (c), (d), or (e) as refers to section 112 (b) (4) or (5), or to which a corresponding provision of a prior revenue law is or was applicable, by one corporation of its property wholly or in part for stock or securities of another corporation, or a transfer of property by one corporation to another corporation after December 31, 1917, the basis of which in the hands of such other corporation is or was determined under section 113 (a) (8) (B), or would have been so determined had such section been in effect.

"(2) Transferor upon an exchange: The term 'transferor upon an exchange' means a corporation which upon an exchange transfers property to another corporation in exchange, wholly or in part, for stock or securities of such other corporation, or transfers property to another corporation after December 31, 1917, the basis of which in the hands of such other corporation is or was determined under section 113 (a) (8) (B), or would have been so determined had such section been in effect.

"(3) Transferee upon an exchange: The term 'transferee upon an exchange' means a corporation which upon an exchange acquires property from another corporation in exchange, wholly or in part, for its stock or securities, or which acquires property from another corporation after December 31, 1917, the basis of which in its hands is or was determined under section 113 (a) (8) (B), or would have been so determined had such section been in effect.

"(b) Property paid in for stock: In the application of section 716 (a) to a transferee upon an exchange, in determining the amount paid in for stock of the transferee, or as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital of the transferee, in connection with such exchange, only an amount shall be deemed to have been so paid in equal to the excess of the basis in the hands of the transferee of the property of the transferor received by the transferee upon the exchange over the sum of—

"(1) Any liability of the transferor assumed upon such exchange and any liability subject to which the property was received upon such exchange, plus

"(2) The aggregate of the amount of money and the fair market value of any other property transferred to the transferor not permitted to be received by such transferor without the recognition of gain.

"(c) Borrowed capital: In the application of section 717 (a) to a transferee upon an exchange, the term 'borrowed capital' shall not include indebtedness originally evidenced by securities issued by the transferee upon such exchange as consideration for the property of the transferor received by the transferee upon such exchange if (1) such securities were property permitted to be received by the person to whom such securities were issued without the recognition of gain and (2) the indebtedness originally evidenced by such securities did not arise out of indebtedness of the transferor (other than indebtedness which in the transferor's hands was subject to the limitations of this subsection) assumed by the transferee in connection with such exchange.

"Sec. 720. Abnormalities in income in taxable period.

"If there is includible in the gross income of the taxpayer for any taxable year an item of income of any one or more of the following classes:

"(a) Arising out of a claim, award, judgment, or decree, or interest on any of the foregoing; or

"(b) Constituting an amount payable under a contract the performance of which required more than 12 months; or

"(c) Resulting from exploration, discovery, prospecting, research, or development of tangible property, patents, formulae, or processes, or any combination of the foregoing, extending over a period of more than 12 months; or

"(d) Includible in gross income for the taxable year rather than for a different taxable year by reason of a change in the taxpayer's accounting period or method of accounting; or

"(e) In the case of a lessor of real property, amounts included in gross income for the taxable year by reason of the termination of the lease, and attributable to improvements on the property; and, in the light of the taxpayer's business, it is abnormal for the taxpayer to derive income of such class, or, if the taxpayer normally derives income of such class, the item includible in the gross income of the taxable year is grossly disproportionate to the gross income of the same class in the 4 previous taxable years, then: (1) the amount of such item attributable to any previous taxable year or years shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary; and (2) the tax under this subchapter for the taxable year attributable to such item shall not exceed the aggregate of the taxes under this subchapter attributable to such item had it been received in the taxable years to which attributable and in the amounts attributable to each such year, including the taxable year the tax for which under this subchapter is being computed.

"Sec. 721. Equity invested capital in special cases.

"Where the Commissioner determines that the equity invested capital as of the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year under this subchapter cannot be determined in accordance with section 716, the equity invested capital as of the beginning of such year shall be an amount equal to the sum of (a) the money plus (b) the aggregate of the adjusted basis of the assets of the taxpayer held by the taxpayer at such time, such sum being reduced by the indebtedness outstanding at such time. The amount of the money, assets, and indebtedness at such time shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In such case the equity invested capital for each day after the beginning of the taxpayer's first taxable year under this subchapter shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, using as the basic figure the equity invested capital as so determined.

"Sec. 722. Foreign corporations—invested capital.

"Notwithstanding section 713, in the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein, the invested capital for any taxable year shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, under which—

"(a) General rule: The daily invested capital for any day of the taxable year shall be the aggregate of the adjusted basis of each United States asset held by the taxpayer on the beginning of such day. In the application of section 718 in reduction of the average invested capital (determined on the basis of such daily invested capital), the terms 'admissible assets' and 'inadmissible assets' shall include only United States assets; or

"(b) Exception: If the Commissioner determines that the United States assets of the taxpayer cannot satisfactorily be segregated from its other assets, the invested capital for the taxable year shall be an amount which is the same percentage of the aggregate of the adjusted basis of all assets held by the taxpayer as of the end of the last day of the taxable year which the net income for the taxable year from sources within the United States is of the total net income of the taxpayer for such year.

"(c) Definition of United States asset: As used in this subsection, the term 'United States asset' means an asset held by the taxpayer in the United States, determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"Sec. 723. Personal service corporations.

"(a) Definition: As used in this subchapter, the term 'personal service corporation' means a corporation whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and are the owners at all times during the taxable year of at least 80 percent in value of all the stock of the corporation, and in which capital is not a material income-producing factor; but does not include any foreign corporation, nor any corporation 50 percent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal. For the purposes of this subsection, an individual shall be considered as owning, at any time, the stock owned at such time by his spouse or minor child.

"(b) Election as to taxability: If a personal service corporation signifies, in its return under chapter 1 for any taxable year, its desire not to be subject to the tax imposed under this subchapter for such taxable year, it shall be exempt from such tax for such year, and the provisions of supplement S of chapter 1 shall apply to the shareholders in such corporation who were such shareholders on the last day of such taxable year of the corporation.

"Sec. 724. Corporations completing contracts under Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

"(a) If the United States Maritime Commission certifies to the Commissioner that the taxpayer has completed within the taxable year any contracts or subcontracts which are subject to the provisions of section 505 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, then the tax imposed by this subchapter for such taxable year shall be, in lieu of a tax computed under section 710, a tax computed under subsection (b) of this section, if, and only if, the tax computed under subsection (b) is less than the tax computed under section 710.

"(b) The tax computed under this subsection shall be the excess of—

"(1) A tentative tax computed under section 710 with the excess-profits net income increased by the amount of any payments made, or to be made, to the United States Maritime Commission with respect to such contracts or subcontracts; over

"(2) The amount of such payments.

"Sec. 725. Exempt corporations.

"The following corporations shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subchapter:

"(a) Corporations exempt under section 101 from the tax imposed by chapter 1.

"(b) Foreign personal-holding companies, as defined in section 331.

"(c) Mutual investment companies, as defined in section 361.

"(d) Investment companies which under the Investment Company Act of 1940 are registered as diversified companies at all times during the taxable year. For the purposes of this subsection, if a company is so registered before July 1, 1941, such company shall be considered as so registered at all times before the date of such registration.

"(e) Personal-holding companies, as defined in section 501.

"(f) Foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein.

"(g) Domestic corporations satisfying the following conditions:

"(1) If 95 percent or more of the gross income of such domestic corporation for the 3-year period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period during which the corporation was in existence) was derived from sources other than sources within the United States; and

"(2) If 50 percent or more of its gross income for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a trade or business.

"(h) Any corporation subject to the provisions of title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, in the gross income of which for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, there is includible compensation received from the United States for the transportation of mail by aircraft if, after excluding from its gross income such compensation, its adjusted excess-profits net income for such year is zero or less.

"Sec. 726. Meaning of terms used.

"The terms used in this subchapter shall have the same meaning as when used in chapter 1.

"Sec. 727. Laws applicable.

"(a) General rule: All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by chapter 1, shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this subchapter, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this subchapter.

"(b) Returns: Notwithstanding subsection (a), no return under section 52 (a) shall be required to be filed by any taxpayer under this subchapter for any taxable year for which its excess-profits net income, computed with the adjustments provided in section 711 (a) and placed on an annual basis as provided in section 711 (b), is not greater than $5,000.

"(c) Foreign taxes paid: In the application of section 131 for the purposes of this subchapter the tax paid or accrued to any country shall be deemed to be the amount of such tax reduced by the amount of the credit allowed with respect to such tax against the tax imposed by chapter 1.

"(d) Limitations on amount of foreign tax credit: The amount of the credit taken under this section shall be subject to each of the following limitations:

"(1) The amount of the credit in respect of the tax paid or accrued to any country shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayer's excess-profits net income from sources within such country bears to its entire excess-profits net income for the same taxable years; and

"(2) The total amount of the credit shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayers' excess-profits net income from sources without the United States bears to its entire excess-profits net income for the same taxable year."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I first became interested in the subject of taxation when, at an early age, I began attending the sessions of the Senate. My interest was intensified as a result of my service as one of my father's secretaries during the World War period, and in subsequent years while he served in this body and was a member of the Finance Committee. Therefore, when I succeeded him in the Senate in 1925, taxation naturally became one of the subjects to which I devoted much time and attention. Later, I was appointed on the Finance Committee, and have participated, as a member of that committee and as a Member of the Senate, in the consideration of each and every revenue bill which has been reported from the committee since that time.

In considering any question of taxation I approach it as an ardent, confirmed advocate of the principle of ability to pay in levying taxes. While no tax is perfect, it is my conviction that taxes which are levied in accordance with the principle of ability to pay are the fairest type of taxes that have been devised.

In the course of my service in this body I have seized every opportunity presented by the consideration of tax legislation to make the best fight of which I was capable in an effort to maintain the principle of graduated taxation based on ability to pay. In that effort, Mr. President, those of us who believe in the theory have been fighting a rear-guard engagement. Taxation levied without regard to ability to pay and falling heaviest upon those with the least ability to pay has been increased constantly. Such was the case when we considered the first tax bill during the present session of Congress. That bill further increased the inequity of our tax structure. It dumped a heavier burden upon the backs of the plain people of the country in the form of increased taxes levied without regard to ability to pay. Prior to the enactment of the first revenue bill of the present session of Congress, almost $400,000,000 was collected annually from manufacturers' excise taxes, which are, in the last analysis, passed on largely to the consuming public. The bill which we passed in June 1940 increased these nuisance taxes by more than $140,000,000, of which $112,000,000 alone will be extracted from the users of motor vehicles by an increase in the gasoline tax.

The bill passed in June increased corporate taxes only 17 percent, as compared with a 35-percent increase in the yield of excise taxes and a 37-percent increase in the yield of individual income taxes.

I have been an advocate of broadening the base of the income tax, in the hope that increased revenue derived from taxation levied in accordance with ability to pay would enable us to shift some of the crushing burden of direct nuisance taxes which are levied without regard to the ability of the taxpayer to pay on to the sound principle of graduated taxes in accordance with ability to pay.

But, Mr. President, as I stated during the debate upon the revenue bill passed in June, I saw absolutely no justification for a broadening of the income-tax base at the same time excise taxes and direct taxes were increased by such enormous percentages.

Mr. President, when we were considering revenue bill No. 1 we had in contemplation or had already appropriated or authorized only $4,000,000,000 for the purpose of national defense. At this stage of the proceedings, during the ensuing weeks, the Congress has appropriated or authorized $15,300,000,000 for national-defense purposes alone. That amounts to $506 for every family in the United States.

I have voted for these expenditures; I assume my full share of responsibility as a Member of this body for having voted for those appropriations and those authorizations for expenditures; but, Mr. President, adding that enormous burden of increased expenditure onto our already large Federal debt, created by deficiency appropriations to meet the crisis arising during the economic depression, has, in my deliberate judgment, caused the country to be confronted with the most serious financial crisis in all its history. Unless we have the courage, as Members of this body and as representatives of the people who sent us here, to tax, and to tax now, I contend that we shall have to assume responsibility for the inevitable consequences which are certain to flow from our failure to face frankly and courageously this fiscal situation.

Naturally, Mr. President, in considering various methods of taxation which might be employed in this financial and fiscal crisis the device of excess-profits taxation comes to the mind of legislators and those in positions of executive responsibility as a means of increasing the flow of revenue into the Treasury. Such taxation has been a lucrative source of revenue in years of crisis in the past. We raised under the excess-profits-tax laws of 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1921 almost $7,000,000,000.

Mr. President, when it comes to the question of what kind of excess-profits-tax legislation is to be enacted, there are naturally very honest differences of opinion as to what type of excess-profits tax should be employed. It is in this regard that I find myself in complete and unalterable disagreement with the majority of my colleagues upon the Finance Committee. Whatever may be said for the various types of excess-profits taxation standing alone, it seems to me that it is a fatal mistake from the standpoint of tax legislation to endeavor to combine two conflicting theories of excess-profits taxation. That is what the House Ways and Means Committee tried to do; that is what the House of Representatives tried to do; and that is what the bill of the Finance Committee tries to do. As I view it, the combination of these two conflicting theories of taxation together, has the result that, in the main and speaking generally, we obtain the disadvantages of both methods and the benefits of neither.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the bill reported by the Finance Committee, in the first place, because in my opinion, it violates a sound theory and principle of taxation. It raises no appreciable amount of revenue; it is inequitable, in that the small amount of revenue which is raised will be paid, generally, by those corporations least able to pay, while those corporations most able to pay will be left untaxed or lightly taxed.

In my judgment, this bill will confirm and entrench the monopoly and quasi-monopoly positions of certain corporations in our economy. It will result in hopeless administrative confusion, and will increase administrative expense out of all proportion to the revenues which it will raise. In addition, it will seriously impede the collection of our existing taxes, upon which we must rely for revenue. Its complexity and incomprehensibility are such that the cost to the taxpayer of ascertaining its tax liability will, in many cases, be far greater than the amount of such tax liability. It will produce excessive litigation, out of all proportion to its importance in our revenue system, with the result that it may be anticipated, and I confidently predict that many tax liabilities will not be finally determined for many years to come if this measure stays on the statute books.

There has been some discussion concerning the estimates which have been provided the Finance Committee in connection with the consideration of this important legislation. The Treasury estimates that the committee's bill will yield a gross revenue of $355,000,000 in the taxable year 1940.

The net yield from the committee's bill, according to the Treasury estimates, is $305,000,000. I may explain that the difference between the gross and the net yield is accounted for by the fact that some weight must be given to the inevitable effect of increased taxes on corporations, and, therefore, their diminished ability to pay out dividends which otherwise might be paid out, and which, if they were paid out, would be levied upon in the income-tax brackets of the individual income-tax payer who is the recipient of corporate dividends.

The gross amount which the Treasury estimates to be raised from the excess-profits-tax provisions of the committee's bill is $115,000,000. The net yield from the committee's bill from excess profits, according to the Treasury estimates, will amount to $65,000,000. The Treasury also estimates that as a result of the flat increase in the normal corporate tax rate of 3⅒ percent the committee's bill will yield, in 1940, $240,000,000. The Treasury estimates that the amendment I have offered will yield a gross revenue of $475,000,000, and a net revenue of $400,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. What effect will this have on the smaller businessman? I know the interest which the Senator from Wisconsin has always had in the welfare of the smaller businessman, and I was wondering what effect this will have on what we might term the smaller businessman; not the larger corporations as we know them, but the medium-sized and smaller corporations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator refer to the committee's recommendations?

Mr. DAVIS. No; I refer to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I intend to discuss the amendment further on in my remarks, but I digress long enough to say now that, under the terms of the amendment I have offered, a corporation may earn 8 percent upon its invested capital, plus a $5,000 credit; so that under the amendment small corporations may earn substantial amounts of money in relation to their invested capital without being required to pay any excess-profits tax. I shall come to a more detailed discussion of the amendment shortly, however.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to place these estimates in the RECORD in order that it may be obvious to all who may care to read that a description of the committee's bill as an "excess profits" bill is a misnomer. If any person selling goods which come under the Food and Drug Act were to make an equally wild misstatement in branding his goods his property would be seized and prevented from circulating in interstate commerce. To say that a bill is an excess-profits tax bill when it yields only $65,000,000 net from excess profits, and obtains $240,000,000 from flat increased taxation upon all corporations which have net taxable incomes, without regard to their size or their ability to pay is an obvious misnomer.

Mr. President, there is a wide difference of opinion between the majority members of the committee and myself as a minority of one upon the question of what type of excess-profits taxation should be employed at this critical juncture in the affairs of this country. The majority of the committee have taken the position that all they seek to do and all they desire to do is to tax the increase which may come in 1940 and subsequent years in the profits of a corporation, and not to tax the profits which may have been made in 1940 and which were made by the corporation prior to the time an excess-profits tax law would go into effect.

First of all, Mr. President, I think the gravity of this crisis should impel the Congress to levy taxes based on some relation to ability to pay upon all corporations which have ability to pay. In the light of this grave emergency I do not think we can afford to say to a corporation, "Just because you have had the good fortune to make large returns upon your invested capital for 4 years, the Government will not ask you to bear any increased share of the enormous load which is ultimately to be dumped on the backs of the taxpayers of this country, individual or corporate." We may perhaps defer the day when we impose taxes; but in the final analysis all the people of the country and all the corporations of the country must shoulder those increased expenditures, either in the form of taxation or in the form of their share of responsibility for and service to the national debt.

So back of all of the effort and struggle which have been going on for weeks in the House of Representatives and in the Senate there is ultimately the question of where the incidence of the taxes which must be imposed is to fall. So far as I am concerned, I wish very frankly to state that I believe we should, insofar as possible, impose no taxes which fall upon persons without regard to ability to pay, because insofar as we can prevent that kind of taxation, we postpone the evil day when the buying power of the country will be diminished and standards of living will be reduced.

Mr. President, I think that a corporation, just as an individual, having high earnings, whether they were made in 1936 to 1939, or whether they were made in 1940, or whether they may be made in the years to come, should be asked at this critical time to carry its fair share of the load which every citizen and every corporation of this country will have to carry. The Finance Committee bill continues the effort to combine two conflicting theories, and, as a result, it has all the complications inherent in an effort to combine two conflicting theories.

The majority of the Ways and Means Committee and the House of Representatives, in trying to combine these two conflicting theories, did make some effort to equalize the situation which will arise in separate industrial segments of our economy as between corporations, by imposing what has come to be called a "penalty" or a "privilege" tax of 4.1 percent increase in the normal corporate tax on those corporations desiring and preferring to use the base period method, the earnings method, of computing their excess-profits taxes.

I now wish briefly and from my standpoint to present what I think are some of the major defects in the committee bill. I do not believe I can overemphasize my objection to the proposition which is contained in title I of the committee amendment, namely, a flat 3.1-percent increase on all corporations. It is my view that this flat increase in corporate taxes has no relation to ability to pay, and I think it is also without relation to the benefits or the injuries which may result from the defense program.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me finish one more sentence, and I shall be delighted to yield.

Approximately 140,000 corporations in this country which would pay no increase in taxes under what I term a real excess-profits tax will be required by the committee proposal to pay a large share of the $240,000,000 estimated by the Treasury to be raised in the taxable year 1940 by the flat increase in the corporate tax rate.

I now yield with pleasure to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I tried in the little time available to get some idea of the bill, but I wanted one inquiry answered. Am I correct that in the bill there is no effort to impose a tax on war profits, that it is confined generally to an excess-profits tax, regardless of the source?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. That is, the industries which profit out of the defense preparations are treated no differently from industries engaged in other activities, having no relationship to the defense program?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true of the bill as it passed the House, it is true of the bill as it came from the Finance Committee, and it is true insofar as my amendment is concerned.

I will say to the Senator that the trouble with trying to impose a tax upon those corporations which secure a direct and immediate benefit from the letting of contracts under the national-defense program is of such a nature that the committee felt—and I agreed with them—that the problem could not be worked out. The inherent difficulty in the situation is, I may say to the Senator from Colorado, that it is impossible to dye a dollar and thus be able to identify it as it goes through the ramifications of the complex economy which has grown up in the United States of America. It might be possible, insofar as it concerns some contractors who utilize their entire facilities in producing for national-defense purposes, and were so engaged for a whole year, to ascertain what their increased profits were as a result of such activities under contracts with the Government. But the problem is difficult when we come to the case which is likely to be found true more often than not, where a contractor or a subcontractor engages only a part of his facilities in producing for national-defense purposes. Then we run into all the problems of trying to allocate the total overhead expenses of the business to the particular segment or percentage of the business which has come as the result of a defense contract or subcontract. What proportion of the salary of the president of the corporation, let us say, should be allocated to that part of the business not related to a national-defense contract, and what part of it should be allocated to the percentage of the business due to a national-defense contract?

One further observation I should like to make is that when huge sums of money out of the Treasury of the United States are pumped out into the economy of this country, they benefit, directly and indirectly, great numbers of corporations and individuals not directly related to defense expenditures.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand, the bill would repeal the Vinson-Trammell provisions limiting profits on war contracts. I wonder whether any relative comparison was made before the committee as to how much the Government would be waiving by the repeal of those provisions, as compared with the excess-profits tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We did not have much time to consider it, under the genial driving of the Senator from Mississippi, who was behind the wheel. We had very little time to pause anywhere to get any information. We had a standing joke in the committee that a minute or two after anything had come up for consideration someone would say "Call the roll," and the roll was often called when no one on the committee knew exactly what was being voted on. So we did not have any time to inquire as to various facts.

I shall answer the Senator's question as best I can, however. There are certain limitations under the Vinson-Trammell Act—as the Senator well knows, and as he has demonstrated in his able efforts in connection with his work on the Committee on Appropriations—there are certain definite profit limitations under the Vinson-Trammell Act upon certain types of war equipment, namely, ships and planes. There is a limit above which all of the excess is recaptured, or an effort is made to revert it, into the Treasury of the United States. But under the Finance Committee bill that act would be repealed, and it would be repealed on the alleged theory that we are going to impose an excess-profits tax in lieu of these profit limitations under the Vinson-Trammell Act upon all corporations, including those now subject to the Vinson-Trammell Act.

Mr. ADAMS. We are expending, roughly, $15,000,000,000 in the defense program. If we take the limit off, it occurs to me that probably the various war preparations would cost more. In other words, there would be an initial increase in the cost to the Government, and it would not require a very great percentage of increase to more than counterbalance what would be obtained by this excess profits tax bill, as I get the figures this morning on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not have the figures as to what would be collected, or any estimate of what might be collected—and I do not believe there are any figures available—on potential collections under the profit limitations of the Vinson-Trammell Act. But if we pass the Senate Finance Committee bill, and if it becomes law, all corporations in the United States will pay into the Treasury of the United States a net tax of only $65,000,000 in the form of excess-profits taxes. I cannot name any specific company, but if there happened to be an airplane-manufacturing company or a shipbuilding company which was fortunate enough to have high earnings in the base period, 1936–39, inclusive, which was subject to the limitations under the Vinson-Trammell Act, it would not have to pay a dollar of excess-profits taxes in 1940, or in any subsequent year, provided its profits did not exceed the average for the base period.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will permit one further suggestion, as I understand, the airplane manufacturers were taking the position that the limitation of 8 percent was not adequate, so that the House raised the limit to 12 percent. There are $2,000,000,000 of airplane contracts. If there is an increased leeway of 4 percent, we would have $800,000 available there.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have no figures on airplane companies, so I cannot give the Senator any specific example, and I am not charging that such a situation exists, but I say that under certain assumptions, if an airplane manufacturing company in this country had high earnings for the base period in relation to its invested capital, it could go on, either under the House version of the bill or the Senate Finance Committee's version of the measure, and continue to make that large return upon its invested capital without paying $1 in excess-profits tax.

In the meantime, of course, both measures provide for a repeal of whatever profit limitations are contained in the Vinson-Trammell Act.

The same thing is true of shipbuilding companies. As the Senator knows, our shipbuilding program has been augmented in past years. Those companies, as I understand, come under the terms of the Vinson-Trammell Act. If they have had high earnings during the base period they get the benefit of the repeal of the Vinson-Trammell Act limitation on profits. Under that law, as the Senator knows, all profits above 7 percent were recaptured. They will not have to pay a dollar of tax in 1940, or in future years, in the event that their profits do not exceed the average profits during the base period.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WILEY. As I understand the Senator's recent statement—and I agree with his conclusion—if during the base period and in 1940 any company has been making, let us say, an average profit of 30 percent on its capital, it would, under the pending bill, pay no excess-profits tax. On the other hand, if any corporation had an average earning of 4 percent during the base period, and if in 1940 it earned 30 percent profit, it would be taxed on 26 percent as excess profits.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; if I understand the Senator's statement correctly, that is my understanding of the bill. In other words, corporation A could have made an average profit of 30 percent for the base-period years, and if it made no more than 30 percent in 1940 and subsequent years, it would have to pay no excess-profits tax. But if corporation B made an average of only 3 percent on its invested capital during those years, it would have to pay an excess-profits tax under the average-earnings method if its income in 1940 or in any future year increased above 3 percent on the entire capital.

Mr. WILEY. In using those illustrations, the Senator demonstrates clearly that the bill itself is not based on the actual principle of ability to pay.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, there is a very sharp difference of opinion on that point, and no doubt the other point of view will be presented. I expect to come to the point which my colleague has raised in the course of my remarks.

Mr. President, the regular corporation income tax imposes lower rates on the smaller corporations. In the Finance Committee's proposal to raise the corporate normal tax 3.1 percent no distinction is made between the size of corporations. They all get it in the neck just the same.

In effect, the bill raises the tax on corporations with less than $5,000 of income, by 20.9 percent, compared with an increase of only 14.8 percent in the case of corporations with incomes in excess of $25,000. So that the slight recognition which the normal corporate-tax brackets gave to the size of corporations is abrogated in principle when the committee comes to employ the meat-ax method of raising taxes by simply jacking up the corporate-tax rates.

Mr. President, up to a point of diminishing returns it would take no group of experts, it would take no weeks of study by committees of Congress to raise increased revenue, if that is the way it is to be done. All we have to do is to turn the crank. All we have to do is to write in a change in the rate, and we can hike up the amount of flat corporate taxes that are levied upon corporate incomes in this country.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is my conviction that in this respect the committee's bill is even less desirable and less equitable than the regular corporate income tax.

Mr. President, in his message to Congress on July 1, 1940, the President urged that an excess-profits tax be enacted to help pay for the defense program because—and I quote a portion of his statement:

> It is our duty to see that the burden is equitably distributed according to ability to pay so that a few do not gain from the sacrifices of the many.

It is my contention that the bill has no relation to corporate ability to pay. Also, as I have already pointed out, the majority of the committee intend to tax merely the extra profits due to defense appropriations rather than excess profits.

The so-called earnings method of the bill is supposed to measure defense profits directly. Earnings in the taxable year are compared with earnings in the base period and the increase, if any, is called excess. Two basic assumptions are involved which are not true in a large percentage of cases in my opinion, first, that the earnings during the base period are normal, and, second, that the increase is excess, due to defense expenditures. Actually with respect to the first assumption, a base period that is normal for corporations as a whole is almost invariably abnormal in varying degrees for corporations individually, as the testimony before both the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate indicates.

With respect to the assumption that the difference is an excess, due to defense expenditures, there is no reasonable assurance that the increase is excess, or that it will be due to defense expenditures.

Many witnesses before both committees of the Congress testified that the earnings of their companies were abnormal during the base period, or that increased earnings had nothing whatsoever to do with the defense program.

Obviously the bill exempts large amounts of defense profits, and taxes large amounts of nondefense profits, without any recognition of the sound principle of ability to pay.

As I have already stated, in response to an inquiry propounded by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], it is my judgment that there is no way by which dollars spent in a huge program of this nature can be traced through the ramifications of our complex economy. There is no chemical test which can be applied to make a precise separation. Dollars lose their identity when flowing through the economic system. Products which have an important use in the defense program may have a simultaneous important use in normal industrial activities. Paint for a battleship is the same as paint for industrial machinery. Shoes for the Army are, generally speaking, the same as shoes which are normally used by the consumer. Even with complex accounting systems no satisfactory separation of profits can be made, in my judgment. Surely no rule-of-thumb method of comparing profits in the taxable year with profits in some previous years—whatever years may be selected—affords an adequate separation.

To my mind the most serious defect in the bill from the standpoint of tax theory is the attempt to combine two opposing theories of taxation in one bill.

As I have already said, the net effect is to include the shortcomings of both without the advantages of either. The loopholes, or potential loopholes, are at least doubled. The revenue yield is reduced well below what might be obtained under either method separately. As I view it, the bill provides a "heads you win, tails I lose" proposition from the standpoint of the Treasury.

Obviously, Mr. President—and there is no intended or implied criticism of corporations—every corporation in the country which will be subject to the tax, or which thinks it will be subject to it, will compute the tax under the two alternative methods, and elect the one which results in its paying the lesser amount into the Treasury.

Also, it is my contention that, in addition, highly inequitable situations are created among competing corporations which are forced by circumstances to use different methods of tax computation. The slight semblance of equality which existed between the two methods in the bill as it passed the House has been destroyed by the majority of the committee with the removal of the 4.1 percent privilege tax on the earnings method, and the 5 percent differential in the tax on the tax brackets.

In this connection, I wish to point out that there is a sharp difference of opinion in relation to the statement I have just made. At the outset, I wish to say that I am not making an attempt to change the competitive situation in the economy of this country. In proposing my amendment I am not seeking to do so. However, I believe it is a responsibility of Congress to see that the imposition of a tax does not perpetually freeze existing competitive advantages or disadvantages. Every possible effort should be made to guard against such a situation arising out of the enactment of revenue legislation.

The large, prosperous corporations, with consistent, substantial profits are those which have the best ability to pay taxes. The situation may not be entirely analogous, but when we come to impose income taxes on individuals we do not ask an individual taxpayer, "What income did you have for the base period of 1936 to 1939?" If he replies "$5,000 average," we do not say, "If you do not make any more than that in future years we shall not ask you to pay any increased taxes despite the critical situation facing the Government."

Mr. President, if we are to protect the fiscal integrity of our country in the light of the enormous appropriations which have been made, I believe we shall have to "jack up" the individual income tax rates. But it is also my view that in facing this critical problem we cannot afford, in all conscience, to say to corporations which have had high earnings upon their invested capital over a base period, "So long as you earn no more than the average which you have earned in the past 4 years you are given immunity; you are given a certificate of nonnecessity for coming to the aid of your Government in the situation which confronts it."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator speaks of large corporations escaping under the measure as reported by the committee. As I understand the Senator's amendment, he uses the invested-capital formula, and corporations are permitted to make 8 percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And everything above 8 percent is taxed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct—above an additional $5,000 exemption.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I hold in my hand a list of some very large American corporations. The list contains the names of 64 corporations, 46 of which do not make as much as 8 percent on their invested capital. Among the 46 we find such companies as the American Shipbuilding Co., making 3.3 percent; the United States Steel Corporation, making 3.1 percent; the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., making 5.4 percent; the Westinghouse Co., making 7.3 percent; the Otis Elevator Co., making 7.4 percent; the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., making 7.9 percent; Swift & Co., making 4.5 percent; and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, making 5.2 percent. Under the terms of the Senator's amendment, all these companies would entirely escape paying any tax whatsoever.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Assuming, of course, that the statement which the witness placed in the RECORD is correct, so far as 1940 earnings are concerned, that may be true. Later in my remarks I shall discuss the question of whether or not invested capital is a fair method of testing ability to pay. Immediately in answer to the Senator's observation, I will say that the committee bill does not remedy that situation. Under the terms of the bill which the Senator supported, all those corporations may use the invested-capital method; and the only way in which the committee can say its bill reaches them at all is by taking a meat ax and chopping at all corporations in the United States with a flat 3.1-percent increase in the corporate tax level. I say there is no justification for such a policy. It violates the principle of ability to pay; and in the end, in order to reach the corporations which have relatively low earnings on their invested capital, it proposes to penalize large and small corporations alike without regard to ability to pay.

As I stated a moment ago, I am firmly convinced that the invested-capital method is a fair test of ability to pay, and I expect to discuss that question later in my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Under the terms of the bill reported by the committee, the Senator will agree that the companies whose names I have read would pay a tax of 3.1 percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; and in order to reach them the Senator has voted to tax every little corporation in Colorado, without regard to size, an additional 3.1 percent. If there is any equity in that, I am unable to see it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Colorado was able to have an amendment agreed to by the committee which increases the exemption from $5,000 to $10,000. In his substitute the Senator from Wisconsin still clings to the $5,000 exemption.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; so far as invested capital is concerned. The Senator from Colorado is talking about corporations which have large amounts of capital invested in their business, but which have been making a small return upon it, not paying any excess-profits tax. I say that under the terms of the bill as reported by the committee—for which the Senator from Colorado and a majority of the members of the committee voted—the committee and the Congress are about to take a meat ax and operate on the corporations of the country, big and little.

I say that we are confronted by no such necessity. We do not have to go after those corporations in the country which are struggling desperately on the verge of collapse and bankruptcy. The small corporations will be the last to obtain any benefit from the national-defense program. I do not know what the experience of other Senators has been; but I will say that so far as my own State is concerned the small manufacturer, even though he has facilities, is not the one who receives first consideration. The large negotiated contracts are being made with the big manufacturer, the big operator. Yet, under the terms of the bill as reported by the committee, the Congress is about to take by the throat the small corporations all over the United States and shake them until their financial teeth rattle.

Mr. President, under the terms of the bill as reported by the committee, a tremendous advantage is conferred on the established, prosperous corporations as against competitors which have suffered a depression during the base period, or as against a newly-organized corporation which has not yet become well established.

Mr. President, considerable discussion occurred in the committee about this competitive situation. It must be obvious to anyone who studies the question that the earnings method confers a competitive advantage to the corporate taxpayer which has had a high return upon its invested capital during the base years as against a less fortunate taxpayer that did not have such high earnings or as against a new competitor entering the field and competing with an established company with high earnings. It is clear that, so far as corporations competing in the same line of business are concerned, a great advantage is given to the established corporation with high earnings, because one which has had a poor earning rate in the base period is confronted with one of two alternatives. Either it is forced to take the invested-capital method, and thus to pay a high tax, or it is forced to take the base-earnings method. If it is more successful in 1940 and subsequent years than during the base period, it must pay into the Treasury very substantial amounts on its increased profits, while the established competitor, so long as it does not make any more than it made during the base period, does not have to pay any excess-profits tax at all.

It has been argued, Mr. President, that the same thing would happen if the invested-capital method were employed. I do not believe that to be true, although, of course, I am the first to admit that in a complex economy such as ours, with wide degrees of difference between corporations and their experience, it is difficult to make general statements. Speaking very generally, however, industry by industry, there is a definite similarity among companies that are competitive with respect to amounts of invested capital. In other words, industries in which large corporations with large aggregations of invested capital operate, generally speaking, are engaged in a type of business or activity which requires a large amount of capital in order to engage in the particular line of business.

The Senator from Colorado has mentioned the United States Steel Corporation, and I presume it will be mentioned again and again; but the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from Michigan, the Senator from Alabama, and myself cannot put $500 apiece into a corporation and go into the steel business. If we wish to engage in the steel business, we have got to have a relatively large amount of invested capital, because in that type of enterprise considerable capital is required, whereas in other lines of business less capital is required to operate.

For instance, in 1935, 54 corporations in the field of public utilities had assets in excess of $65,000,000 per corporation, as did 39 railroad corporations, 17 petroleum refining companies, 10 steel and rolling-mill corporations, 6 corporations manufacturing motor vehicles, bodies, and parts; 4 corporations engaged in meat packing; 4 corporations engaged in the manufacture of tires and tubes; 4 corporations manufacturing chemicals, and 3 corporations manufacturing cigarettes.

In order to make clear this point, which I think is important, I wish to suggest that, dividing industries into competing subgroups with similar amounts of invested capital per worker or per value of product, are the ordinary cases. As an example, take the food industry. The average capital per corporation of 215 major companies in this major industrial group was $14,760,000 in 1930. When this is broken down into subgroups we find that the average meat-packing corporation of these leading corporations had $41,650,000 in capital invested, while the average flour-milling company had $2,070,000.

The point is, Mr. President, that the relationship of invested capital to the particular enterprise is to be found among the meat-packing corporations; they are the ones that have to compete with each other. The meat-packing corporation does not compete with the corporation milling flour. It is in the industry-by-industry situation that the competitive problem arises. It does not make much difference, so far as a steel corporation and a meat packer are concerned, if they have different situations so far as the incidence of a tax is concerned, but it does make a tremendous amount of difference in the competitive situation if meat-packing corporation A has an advantage in taxes over meat corporation B. That is a point of vital importance which the Senate should clearly understand. When we are considering the question of competitive advantage or disadvantage, and what this tax proposes to do, we must bear in mind that it is actual competitors, company by company, industry by industry, that is important, and not the relationship between the United States Steel Co. and the Hart, Schaffner & Marx Clothing Manufacturing Co.

I ask, Mr. President, that the table to which I have referred may be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, let me point out an example of the manner in which I fear the bill as reported by the Finance Committee will perpetuate monopolistic and quasi-monopolistic corporations in their existing advantageous positions as against competitors in their particular line of industrial or other corporate activity. Assume that corporations A, B, and C are competitors. Assume that corporation A is in a quasi-monopolistic position and earned profits of 25 percent on invested capital during the 4 base years; that corporation B, struggling along against terrific odds, earned 9 percent, and that corporation C has recently been organized. In 1940, let us assume that corporation A continues to earn 25 percent, which, if I were a stockholder in a corporation, I would consider a fairly good return on invested capital; let us assume that corporation B, having improved its situation and doing a little better, earns 15 percent; that corporation C, the newly organized company, trying to compete with the others, earns 9 percent. It seems to me that this would be a typical experience, for it is a well-known fact that a certain development period with low profits is the usual experience of new corporations.

Under the average-earnings method of the pending Finance Committee bill, corporation A would pay no excess-profits tax whatever, because it did not exceed 25 percent of earnings on its invested capital during the base period. Corporation B would pay a substantial tax, though its earnings were much less. In other words, it earned 10 percent less on its invested capital in 1940, but it had to pay a much higher tax. Even corporation C would have to pay an excess-profits tax unless it were small enough so that the $10,000 flat exemption gave it relief.

This tax would be an insurmountable barrier to fair competition among these corporations. No more powerful club than is provided under the tax provisions of the Finance Committee bill could be placed in the hands of corporation A. No other concern could successfully challenge its quasi-monopolistic position as long as the Finance Committee bill remained on the statute books.

The tax would be an insurmountable barrier to fair competition. If, during any future year, corporations B or C did achieve the same level of profits as corporation A, they would pay most of the profits in additional taxes, while corporation A would go untaxed. The most likely result would be bankruptcy for corporations B and C, and a complete monopoly for corporation A.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. DOWNEY. I am wondering in my own mind what answer was made before the Finance Committee to the difficulty and the inequity that the Senator is just pointing out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The answer, in general, was, in the first place, that the purpose of this bill is only to tax profits resulting from the defense expenditures. Secondly, the argument was made that if the invested-capital method is used, there is an inequitable incidence of taxes on corporations engaged in a line of business in which a large amount of capital is necessary, as compared with corporations which have very high earnings upon a comparatively small amount of capital. The point I am trying to drive home is that the factor of vital importance is not, so far as the competitive situation is concerned, between a steel corporation and a baking company; the vital factor of competition and the incidence of taxation is as between companies engaged in the same type of business.

The inequity inherent in the committee amendment may be further illustrated by the following example, which shows the excess-profits tax that would be payable under the committee amendment by each of two corporations having the same invested capital and excess-profits net income during the taxable year. Under this assumption one of these corporations, corporation A is an established company, with stabilized earnings. The other corporation, corporation B, is a growing enterprise just coming into the field and beginning to compete with corporation A. Under this situation and under the committee bill, corporation A would have an excess-profits net income of $1,000,000, and so would corporation B. Corporation A would have $5,000,000 of invested capital, and so would corporation B. The rate of return on the invested capital would be 20 percent for A and 20 percent for B. During the base period, however, the excess-profits net income, which is the average——

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I wonder if we may have better order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, after having served with the Finance Committee in the consideration of this bill, the confusion and conversation here do not disturb me at all. I am completely conditioned to them. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOWNEY. If the Senator will yield, they do disturb me, because I am very much impressed with what the Senator is saying and I desire to be able to hear him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from California is one of the first I have found, on the Finance Committee or off it, who even wanted to find out what is in this bill. In the back of my mind I keep hearing somebody say, "Call the roll! Call the roll! Call the roll!" So if I do not hear that, and all I hear is general conversation, I feel good. [Laughter.]

To continue with the example, so far the corporations are identical as to their excess-profits net income, their invested capital, and the rate of return on the invested capital. Now, however, we come to the difference. The average excess-profits net income for the 4-year base period for corporation A is $1,000,000. For corporation B it is $200,000, because it has not been in the business as long. The invested-capital average is the same, $5,000,000 each; but the rate of return on the invested capital for the base period is 20 percent for corporation A and only 4 percent for corporation B.

Now let us see how the excess-profits tax hits these two corporations, which are identical except for the fact that one of them started in business after the other one did, although the second one made a splendid record after it got going.

Under the average-earnings method, corporation A, the established corporation, pays no excess-profits tax at all; corporation B pays $349,000 excess-profits tax. What have we done to the competitive situation between those two corporations? What have we done to the company which has just come into the business, as against the established high-earnings company?

Senators may say, "Let corporation A get out by taking the invested-capital method. It has two choices." No; it has not. Under the invested-capital method it would pay a $249,000 tax. Of course, that is the method corporation B will take, because it pays less; but, of course, the method that corporation A, the established company, will take is the base-earnings method, under which it does not pay any excess-profits tax. If corporation A had to pay under the invested-capital theory, it would pay $249,000, and so would corporation B.

I do not suppose I shall ever get this point across, but I shall leave it here in the RECORD, at least: The importance of the competitive situation is not among corporations engaged in different kinds of activity. The importance of the competitive situation is among corporations engaged in the same kind of activity, because that is where the competition arises. I repeat, it does not arise between a steel company and a bakery. The competition in the baking industry is within the field of industry encompassed by the baking corporations. The competition in the steel industry is among corporations engaged in the steel business.

This fundamental defect in the average-earnings method of computing tax liability under an excess-profits tax would not be remedied by any provisions for abnormal cases. The relief provision does not do one bit of good to the corporation B about which I am talking. If such were the case, it would mean the establishment of arbitrary control over all competitive situations. Further, notice should be taken of the fact that this is not an isolated, exceptional case, but rather the typical situation whenever and wherever a semi-monopolistic corporation which was prosperous during the base period dominates a particular field.

Certain statistics published in the recent report of the National Resources Committee, The Structure of American Economy, part I, page 100, and some statistics submitted during the joint hearings on this bill, indicate that a considerable number of the largest corporations in America are in exactly the position I have described by the example I have just given the Senate. In my opinion, no more effective means could be devised if it were intended—and I absolve the committee from any such intention—to stifle further competition for these concerns, unless it would be an outright monopoly franchise extended to them by the Government.

It is a serious charge that this bill will condone and encourage monopoly, but perhaps even more serious is the severe penalty which is placed on the new or growing corporation. Mr. President, I do not know of any cry which has been raised more frequently during this economic crisis, when we have been discussing the problem of the failure of capital to reinvest in this country, than the cry that we ought to have new corporations, that we ought to have new enterprise; that some outlet must be found for the huge reserves of capital, the savings of our system which accumulate in sterile piles in our banks and fiduciary institutions.

Yet, in my opinion, Mr. President, the committee bill slams the door in the face of new corporations if they are entering a field where there are large corporations, or even small corporations, which have had large average earnings in the base period.

Such a newly organized corporation probably received very little profit during the initial years, and would be entering into a period when the work of earlier and unprofitable years is beginning to bear fruit. The committee bill allows no future prosperous years for the new or growing corporation. It envisages an economy with the present inequities frozen into the future so long as this measure remains on the statute books.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator has probably explained how that would come about, but I have not been in the Chamber, and I was just wondering how it would be done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to try to explain it again, because I now have two interested in the bill, the Senator from California and the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). My colleague must not forget the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw the remark. I was trying to be facetious, and every time I try to be facetious someone misunderstands me. [Laughter.]

It happens in this way: There are two methods of computing excess-profits taxes provided in the bill. One is the average-earning method, whereby a corporation measures its average earnings over the base period and then pays excess-profits taxes in future years (including 1940) when the earnings are over and above the average earnings for the 4-year base period. The other is the invested capital method. That gives an alternative to corporations. They can either pay under the invested-capital method, or they can pay under the average-earnings method. Obviously all corporations which have high earnings in the base period, especially corporations with substantial earnings of 10, 15, or 20 percent, will, under all ordinary circumstances, elect to use the average-earnings method.

I have just cited for the Senate the example of two corporations, corporation A and corporation B, which are identical in every respect with the exception of the fact that corporation B is a newer corporation, and has not had such a good earnings experience. I have shown that corporation A, a competitor with corporation B, can get out of paying any excess-profits tax whatsoever while earning 20 percent on its invested capital, whereas corporation B, which has earned 20 percent on its invested capital in the same year, would have to pay either $349,000 in excess-profits taxes under the average earnings method, or $249,000 under the invested-capital method. If we use the invested-capital method, corporation A and corporation B would pay the same taxes, under the circumstances I have given.

It is said in opposition to the invested-capital method that some very large corporations in this country have not been making high returns on their invested capital, and therefore that they would get out of paying excess-profits taxes.

I will say to the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that he need not sit here and wait. I am not going to let him in until I get through.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have not evinced any impatience.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have watched the Senator, and I do not want him to think that he need remain here, that I shall conclude very soon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am interested in the Senator's speech.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is said, referring to the invested-capital method, that large corporations with large aggregations of capital invested, which have not earned money, will not pay so much, or will pay no tax. At the appropriate time I shall discuss the question of whether or not invested capital is not a fair test of whether or not a corporation has ability to pay regardless of size. But I wish to reemphasize that what we are considering is not the question of competition between corporations which are engaged in a line of manufacture where they must have a large invested capital as a matter of course in order to get into the business, but it is competition between companies engaged in the same line of business.

One cannot go into the steel business, for example on a shoestring. The very nature of the manufacture of steel requires large capital investment. But steel companies do not compete with clothing manufacturers or shoe manufacturers. Shoe manufacturers compete with shoe manufacturers; clothing manufacturers compete with clothing manufacturers; steel manufacturers compete with steel manufacturers.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. The Senator showed by his figures that one corporation would have to pay $249,000 in taxes while the other escaped the excess-profits tax entirely. What was it assumed the corporations made in that year—what were their profits?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is assumed that they made a rate of return, in the taxable year, of 20 percent on their invested capital.

Mr. DOWNEY. On how large an invested capital?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is assumed that they have $5,000,000 of invested capital in the base period and in this current year.

Mr. DOWNEY. That answers the question. At 20 percent, then, the profit for the corporation would be $1,000,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. That is what they made on their invested capital.

The precedent herein set will make it all the more difficult at some later date to tax the corporations which get the "break" under the committee bill. The hue and cry then will be raised, just as it has been raised to a certain extent now, that the stockholders who have recently purchased stock at high prices, because of anticipated high earnings, have a vested interest which should not be disturbed. That argument was heard in the committee against the invested capital method, in favor of the average earnings method. The contention is that a corporation which has made fat profits during the base years, the stockholders of which have bought stock on the assumption the company would go on earning all that money, should be permitted to continue to get juicy profits no matter how grave the fiscal situation of the Government might be. The idea is fallacious, but to allow it to go unchallenged in the discussion of this tax bill would give it a cloak of validity which it would be harder later to remove.

Entirely disregarded in the bill as reported by the committee is one of the cardinal principles of taxation, that the burden should be fairly distributed. The preponderance of testimony during the hearings clearly demonstrated that many taxpayers have more concern about the equity of the tax than the amount of the tax. I did not say "all," I said that many did. Aside from those corporations with high earnings, which will be able to take advantage of the average earning method, corporations in general are willing to bear almost any reasonable load provided their competitors are treated similarly. The average earnings method and the hodgepodge of a dual method of computing tax liabilities precludes equal treatment for all.

It has been said, in answer to the contention I have made, that it is not the function of a tax bill to remove existing competitive advantages or disadvantages. This answer in my judgment is specious. One can agree that it is not the purpose of this tax bill to equalize competitive conditions, but it is undeniable that tax bills should not distort existing competitive conditions and place unwarranted tax handicaps upon one class of corporations as opposed to another, thereby creating an indefensible competitive advantage in favor of the one and not the other.

The objection to the committee amendment is not that it does not equalize existing competitive conditions. Rather the objection is that the committee amendment in and of itself creates new and far-reaching competitive advantages.

The invested-capital method on the other hand does not create or give rise to either new competitive advantages or new competitive disadvantages. It simply imposes an excess-profits tax which falls alike on corporations regardless of their competitive position, and thereby does not disturb existing competitive conditions.

Mr. President, it is often asserted that the necessity for determining invested capital results in an excessive burden upon the administrative machinery, and imposes undue hardship upon taxpayers, because of the complexities involved in ascertaining invested capital. The experience under the wartime revenue acts is often cited in support of this contention.

It should be pointed out that the alleged complexities of the so-called invested-capital method are no less under the committee amendments than under my amendment, which uses invested capital as the sole measure of excess profits.

Under the committee amendments it will be necessary for almost every taxpayer to determine its invested capital or average earnings in order to ascertain which of the two alternative methods—invested capital or average earnings—is to its advantage. In fact, the committee proposes to supplement all the alleged complexities of invested capital with the further complexities necessitated by the use of base-period experience under the average-earnings method. Whether or not my amendment is adopted, practically every corporation subject to excess-profits tax will still have to compute its invested capital.

In any event, the complexities involved in determining invested capital have always been exaggerated. The assertion that complexities will occur is traceable to the wartime revenue acts. These acts permitted the value of property paid in for stock at the time paid in to determine invested capital. This dependence upon valuation caused extensive litigation and much delay in the final ascertainment of tax liabilities. My amendment, however, like the committee amendment, uses the tax cost of property paid in to the corporation for the purpose of determining the invested capital of the corporation.

The figures respecting the tax cost of property must always be ascertained for income-tax purposes and consequently in most instances are already available both to the Bureau of Internal Revenue and to the taxpayer. These figures once ascertained remain constant. Current adjustments to invested capital can readily be computed. Moreover, as most of the current adjustments relate to the earnings of the business involved and as such earnings must also be ascertained for income-tax purposes, no complexity will arise on this score.

It has been asserted that use of the invested capital method will perpetuate for excess-profits-tax purposes all the evils of watered stock and inflated valuations of property and will give a tax advantage to those corporations which in the past have pursued such practices. This assertion is unfounded. The invested capital of a corporation under my amendment does not depend upon the value at which the corporation's property is carried on the books. I want to emphasize and reemphasize that statement. Consequently, the corporation which issued its stock for the properties of other corporations, and which placed those properties on its books at an excessive valuation, will not obtain any tax benefit from such excessive valuation, since the valuation is immaterial for the computation of invested capital for tax purposes.

Mr. President, I may say that, in my opinion, one of the difficulties that the invested-capital method has been laboring under is due to the fact that these huge corporations, with large amounts of invested capital, are presented as a reason why the invested-capital method should not be employed. Many people have drawn the inference, because these large corporations have gone through a large number of corporate organizations, and mergers, and so forth, that they must have an inflated invested capital and overcapitalization, and that therefore under an invested-capital method of computing excess profits they would get the advantage of that overcapitalization. Such is not the case. It is the actual paid-in value which is used for invested-capital computation. It is the tax cost, and not any inflated book value that may be on the corporation's books.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. How would the value the Senator speaks of be computed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would be computed according to the tax cost, which is whatever was paid in for the property that the corporation now holds. I am coming to an example. For instance, suppose one corporation bought another, and, in exchange at the time of the boom period, gave in payment an excessive amount of stock in relation to the actual value of the corporation it purchased. That would not do it any good. The actual accretion to invested capital for tax purposes made by that purchase is what was actually invested in the corporation that was taken into the large corporate structure.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. With all due deference to the Senator, does he seek to simplify the bill by sending all the taxpayers hurrying and scurrying back to 1913 to get a true value of all the property of all the corporations in the country?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, the first answer to that, I may say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, is that the same procedure would be necessary for every corporation desiring to use the invested-capital method under the committee's bill. In the second place, it is my contention——

Mr. GEORGE. I thought the Senator had spoken very highly of his amendment as simplifying the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it does.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator if this is one of the provisions which he thinks would simplify the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it simplifies the bill tremendously.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator thinks the provision he just referred to simplifies the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I mean eliminating the option of giving corporations an alternative method tremendously simplifies the bill, and it is my contention, and I believe I am correct in it, that so far as the corporations of this country are concerned, the tax cost of their properties and invested capital is determined now, for tax purposes, and that for a large percentage of the corporations these adjustments have been entirely exaggerated.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not rise to debate that issue. I simply wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there can be no simplification of the bill under the suggestion which he makes, because this squeezing out of the water in all the stocks of all the corporations in every item of assets in the corporation, is a long, long lifetime process.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not agree with the Senator, because I think the major portion of that has been done now for tax purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. When the Senator speaks of "for tax purposes," what does he mean?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I mean under the existing corporate-tax laws.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but I understood the Senator to say that he would not take these assets as they appeared on the books, but he would go back some years. Under the bill, one can go back beyond 1913, perhaps, for the purpose of ascertaining earnings, profits, and so forth. So the books will be worth nothing in computing the tax.

I am not debating the merits of the Senator's suggestion. I am simply saying that the Senator is not now simplifying the processes under which one would have to compute this tax. That provision undoubtedly complicates the assessments of an excess-profits tax immeasurably, and it would be hard even to guess how long it would be before the courts would get through finding out the true value—not its book value, not how it is carried on the books, not what it cost, but what the actual true value is of every asset in every corporation in the country. It would be an impossible task.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator feels that way, but I wish to say that I do not agree with him, because the tax cost of property must be ascertained now. In arriving at the tax cost of property under existing law we do not take the book value of the corporation, or the value at which the corporation carries the property on its books.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I know so little about taxation that I hesitate to ask the Senator a question. However, suppose a corporation should buy some concern and pay for it in stock. Suppose the stock is represented to be worth $100 a share, but that the actual value later should prove to be only $5 a share. How would the Senator arrive at the actual cost for the purpose of taxation under the terms of his amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Whatever had actually been paid into the corporation would be the tax cost of those assets. Let me give the Senator an example. Let us assume that corporation A issues 500,000 shares of stock for the properties of corporation B in order to take it over and make it a part of corporation A. Let us assume that corporation A values those shares and properties at $5,000,000. Let us further assume that the stockholders of corporation B had invested only $2,000,000 of capital and earnings in corporation B. In other words, when corporation A took over the properties of corporation B, it valued them at $3,000,000 more than corporation B had actually paid in, or had invested in its property as a result of earnings. Corporation A would not receive the benefit of the extra $3,000,000. When the invested capital of corporation A was determined, so far as its acquisition of corporation B is concerned, it would be exactly what had been invested in corporation B, namely, $2,000,000, instead of $5,000,000.

As I have already stated, the controlling figure for excess-profits purposes is the tax cost of property paid in for stock, and not its value on the books of the corporation which acquires the property. Moreover, I wish to emphasize that the only property which figures in the computation of invested capital for tax purposes is property received in return for corporate stock issued to acquire such property.

The purchase or sale of property by a corporation has no effect upon its invested capital for tax purposes, so that if a corporation buys property at an inflated price its invested capital will not be increased thereby. I have just given an illustration which I think demonstrates that point.

The invested-capital method of computing excess profits thus seeks to determine as fairly as possible the actual dollars invested by the shareholders in the business and remaining at risk in the business. It is only on actual money actually risked that invested capital is based.

The same observations may be made with respect to the argument that an excess-profits tax based upon invested capital unduly penalizes the corporation using conservative accounting practices and writing down its properties in the light of changing business conditions. Since invested capital is based only upon what was originally paid into the business plus the earnings remaining at risk in the business, subsequent write-downs on the corporate books have no effect upon invested capital. That is the reverse of the situation in which the value is inflated.

Finally, it is often asserted that use of the invested-capital method is unduly advantageous to the very large corporation having a substantial amount of capital in the business. To the extent that this criticism of the invested-capital method has any merit, it is equally applicable to the committee amendment. No large corporation with extensive invested capital will pay any less tax under my amendment than it will pay under the committee amendment. In many instances such corporations will pay more tax under my amendment than under the committee amendment.

With respect to the merits of the argument, figures show that large corporations tend to earn a higher percentage of return upon their invested capital than do small corporations. Thus, it can fairly be said that the invested-capital method is less advantageous to large corporations as a class than to small corporations as a class. To the extent that a large corporation consistently earns more than 8 percent upon its invested capital it is unduly favored under the committee amendments. In fact, it can fairly be said that those large corporations which are now and have been in the past consistently rich and prosperous are precisely those corporations which secure the greatest advantage and pay the least tax under the committee amendments.

Moreover, any proper comparison respecting the effect of an excess-profits tax can only be made in terms of each separate industry, rather than in terms of a representative corporation in one industry with a representative corporation in a completely different industry. The real question is whether an excess-profits tax affects substantially alike all the corporations which are engaged in the steel industry, and not whether it affects a corporation in the steel industry, differently than a corporation in the merchandise field. By and large, within an industry the ratio of earnings to capital is relatively the same for each corporation in the industry, whereas it may differ from industry to industry. Within each industry, therefore, the invested-capital method treats corporations substantially alike, since the single standard of the relation of earnings to invested capital is utilized. But the committee amendment, by using both the standard of absolute earnings and the standard of the relation of earnings to invested capital, has an unequal competitive effect upon corporations within each industry. As is shown above, moreover, it unduly favors the entrenched corporation over a growing or newly established corporation in the same industry.

Any possible advantage secured by the large corporation under the invested-capital method is mitigated under my amendment by allowing every corporation the same dollar amount as a specific exemption. In other words, by exempting from excess-profits tax 8 percent of invested capital plus $5,000, a corporation having an invested capital of only $100,000 may earn free of excess-profits tax $13,000, or 13 percent of its invested capital. A corporation having an invested capital of $10,000,000, on the other hand, may earn free of excess-profits tax $805,000, or only 8.05 percent of its invested capital.

That brings me to a discussion of the rates in the bill as reported by the committee.

The rates in the bill are graduated according to the amount of so-called excess profits. This means that a large corporation may make only a very small percentage of excess profits on its capital and still pay the highest rate of tax. Thus, a corporation with $100,000,000 of invested capital and $1,000,000 of taxable excess profits will pay the same tax as a corporation which has the same amount of taxable profits on an invested capital of only $1,000,000. In other words, the brackets are now graduated without reference at all to the earnings or size of a corporation, and a corporation which had excess profits amounting to a 100-percent return on invested capital would pay no more tax than a corporation having excess profits amounting to 10 percent on invested capital, providing the absolute amounts of excess profits were the same.

Profits cannot be divided sharply into those that are excessive and those that are not. Excessiveness is a matter of degree and the tax rate should be graduated according to the degrees of excessiveness, not simply according to the amount of excess profits. A proper rate structure for an excess-profits tax would graduate the rate according to the ratio of profit to invested capital. Under the rate structure as it now stands, many corporations with extremely excessive profits will pay much more moderate taxes than other corporations with only moderate excess profits.

I think every Senator who has looked at the bill at all will agree that it is a very complicated measure. I do not claim that excess-profits taxation is a simple problem from the standpoint of the legislative draftsman, but I do believe that the bill would cause taxpayers who cannot spend any considerable time in learning to understand it much worry and expense.

Some of the complications of the bill were undoubtedly introduced for the purpose of making it more equitable. If the complications had succeeded in making this a reasonably equitable measure, it would, of course, be preferable to a simple but inequitable bill. As has been pointed out, however, the bill is not equitable and accordingly the complications are inexcusable.

A substantial portion of the bill is devoted to tax-free reorganizations and exchanges, a subject which will be of no concern to the majority of corporations. By far the most difficult sections of the bill are in this part. They are necessary in any bill in which base-period experience is used to determine the standard of normal profits. The complications of the tax-free exchange and reorganization sections can be almost completely eliminated if the use of base-period experience is abandoned. Thus, in the case of an invested-capital approach using a flat percentage as a norm, only transactions occurring during the taxable year need be taken into account. These can be handled with comparatively simple provisions.

A further complicating element in the bill is the provision for permissive consolidated returns. Permissive consolidated returns will give corporations the option of using such returns when it is to their advantage to do so and not to use them when it is to their advantage not to do so. It gives great aggregations of wealth an unfair advantage over smaller corporations with simpler structures.

That fight was fought out here, Mr. President, and the privilege of consolidated returns was taken away from corporations by the Senate. I believe an analysis of the debate at that time would show that it was done for the purpose of trying to prevent large corporations with huge chains in their corporate structure from having an advantage over smaller competitors. Under this bill the committee proposes to restore that privilege to corporations.

Mr. President, the appropriations and contract authorizations for the defense program are in excess of $15,300,000,000, and we have not yet provided any money to take care of the draft army and the training of the National Guard. I saw a statement in a newspaper this morning that it would cost $1,600,000,000 to take care of those items. The excess-profits tax under this bill will yield only about $115,000,000 for 1940. The costs of administration and compliance will all have to be borne and the revenue will be small. Administrative and compliance costs will represent a large proportion of the revenue yield.

I have no figures on which to base that statement, but I base it on the fact that, under this bill, the Treasury will face the most complicated and difficult problems that have ever confronted any governmental organization since the beginning of time.

These costs are somewhat inflexible and would be a much smaller percentage if larger revenues were collected. More serious is the defective tax structure which is created under the bill. If the rates must be raised at a later date to obtain more revenue, the inequities previously recounted will become all the more severe.

It should be emphatically stated that increasing the revenue yield of this bill by adding a flat rate to the normal corporation tax solves none of the problems raised by this bill. It simply camouflages the negligible yield derived from the excess-profits tax. The normal corporation-tax rate can be increased at any time Congress desires to do so. It bears no relation whatsoever, in my opinion, to an excess-profits tax.

An excess-profits tax could be an excellent method of raising money with relatively little harm to business. The excess-profits taxes imposed on corporations during the years 1917 through 1921 produced about $7,000,000,000 of revenue. On the whole, that revenue was obtained from corporations which could best afford to pay the taxes, namely, corporations that made large returns on their invested capital. Businessmen have been complaining for years about the high corporate income taxes. If additional revenue is now raised by increasing the rates on all corporations, the rate of return in lines of business which are barely earning enough to keep going may be reduced to the point that they will be driven out of business. No such result follows from the taking of excess profits from prosperous businesses which are making high returns on their capital. Accordingly, far more money can be raised with much less harmful effect on business if the revenue is taken from those concerns whose business is most prosperous. That should be the function of a real excess-profits tax.

I now desire to discuss briefly the changes in this amendment from the one which passed the Senate in June.

The flat exemption has been increased from $3,000 to $5,000. The 8-percent credit on invested capital remains the same. The amount of $3,000 was the flat exemption contained in the 1917–21 acts. Examination of available statistics seems to indicate that $5,000 is wholly ample. As previously stated, only one out of every seven corporations would be taxed by my amendment. To place the exemption higher than $5,000 is to overlook the fact that varying degrees of ability to pay exist among small corporations. The pending amendment differs from the old in that three brackets of taxation are provided: 25 percent on the excess profits not in excess of 7 percent of the invested capital; 40 percent on the remainder up to 15 percent on invested capital; and 50 percent on all excess profits not taxed under the first two brackets. These rates are slightly higher than the rates imposed under the two brackets of the original excess-profits amendment—to compensate for the greater exemption allowed in the new amendment, and also taking into account the tremendous increase in defense expenditures which have occurred between the 19th of June and the present time.

Technical improvement of the original amendment has been made by accepting certain definitions and methods of computing invested capital, as provided in the House bill by the Treasury experts; that is, the computation and definition of average invested capital, daily invested capital, equity invested capital, borrowed capital, and so forth. In addition, interest on Federal obligations which may under the terms of such obligations be subjected to excess profits is so taxed and interest on other governmental obligations is included in income if its taxpayer exercises an option to treat such obligations as admissible assets. The method of computing excess profits net income is the same under my amendment and the committee amendment.

The new amendment includes borrowed invested capital to the same extent that it is included in the Finance Committee proposal: 50 percent of the outstanding indebtedness which is evidenced by a bond, note, bill of exchange, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust.

Provisions with reference to amortization, included in the original amendment, have been entirely excluded because the subject is covered in title III of the committee amendment which is not affected by my amendment, which is a substitute for titles I and II.

As in the committee bill, provision is made for certain tax-free exchanges. Compared with the committee bill, however, the language in the amendment is simple. This is possible because one consistent theory of taxation is followed and because exchanges during the base period need not be taken into account.

I should also like to point out that the relief provision contained in the committee bill is now a part of the pending amendment.

The allegation has been frequently made that all other countries are using the earnings method as a basis for measuring excess profits. That statement is not true. The facts are that several countries at present use the invested-capital method. Furthermore, it is significant that Australia, which during the World War relied on the earnings method, is basing its present excess-profits taxes on invested capital.

The German law, imposed early in 1939, is based on the average-earnings method; but the French law, imposed shortly thereafter, was on an invested-capital basis, with special provision for profits accruing from Government contracts and armaments. The severity of the French tax is evident from the rates imposed September 1, 1939—an exemption of 2 percent on invested capital, a 25 percent tax on profits in excess of 2 percent of invested capital but less than 8 percent of invested capital, and a 100 percent tax on all profits above an 8 percent return.

The present excess-profits-tax law of Great Britain defines excess profits in relation to earnings in the base period. New corporations and additions to the capital of old corporations, are taxed on the invested-capital basis, the first 8 percent of return being exempt. The valuation of capital investment is regulated by complex rules. Great Britain in the World War allowed a taxpayer a credit of either 6 percent of capital, or an amount equal to average earnings in any 2 of 3 base years.

The Canadian law enacted last year allowed an option between a tax based on invested capital and one based on average earnings. Rates under the invested-capital method were graduated from a 10-percent tax on profits above a 5-percent exemption to a 60-percent tax on profits in excess of 25 percent of the investment. The tax failed to raise the revenues desired, and on June 24 of this year a decision was made to eliminate one of the options. The new law, conceded to be an emergency measure to raise the most possible revenue from war expenditures, levies a 75-percent tax on all profits in excess of average profits during the past 4 years. A minimum excess-profits tax of 12 percent upon profits before credit is also imposed.

The Canadian experience indicates that an optional law will not work satisfactorily. It is true that Canada chose the earnings method when one option was eliminated, but apparently recognition was made of the fact that such a tax could only be a temporary tax. It may be inferred, therefore, that the other option would ultimately be adopted if the tax were to be continued for any considerable length of time.

Mr. President, as I stated at the outset, it is my firm belief that in the grave financial crisis which confronts this country we are justified in asking corporations, in proportion to their ability to pay, to carry their fair share of the enormous load which is being dumped upon the backs of taxpayers in America. Corporation earnings have been going up in this country in recent months, not only due to the fact that our own rearmament program is beginning to have some effect on the country's economy, but likewise due to the fact that preparation for war, and actual war orders coming from abroad, have increased the earnings of corporations both directly and indirectly.

I desire to show a comparison of corporation profits for the first quarters of 1938, 1939, and 1940, which are the only complete corporation statistics now available.

According to Standard Statistics, a recognized authority, the corporation-profits index stood at 32.8 in the first quarter of 1938; at 60.4 in 1939; and 92.7 in the first quarter of 1940.

Broken down into industrials, railroads, and utilities, the index shows that in 1938 the first quarter's earnings index of industrials stood at 36.6; in the first quarter of 1939, at 65 percent, and in the first quarter of 1940, 102.5 percent.

Railroads had deficits in all the first quarters. Their deficit index in the first quarter of 1938 was 63; in 1939 it was 25.4 percent; and in 1940 the deficit had decreased to 7.4.

Utilities profits stood at 112.1 percent in the first quarter of 1938, 124.7 percent in the first quarter of 1939, and 147.2 percent in the first quarter of 1940.

In other words, Mr. President, corporation profits for the first quarter of 1940 were about 53 percent above those of the first quarter of 1939, and 182 percent above those of the first quarter of 1938.

In this connection I should like to have incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing profits for selected corporations. These have been taken largely from newspaper financial pages, and in some instances they are preliminary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For instance, General Motors has had a 13-percent increase in its profits in the first 6 months of 1940 as compared with 1939; du Pont is up 17 percent; United States Steel, 1,740 percent; General Electric, 58 percent; Chrysler, 20 percent; Bethlehem Steel, 250 percent; Westinghouse, 55 percent; Curtiss-Wright, 85 percent; United Aircraft, 70 percent; Martin Aircraft, 330 percent; Douglas, 140 percent; Pure Oil Co., 95 percent; Remington-Rand, 270 percent; and Goodyear, 15 percent.

Also, Mr. President, I ask that there may be incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing, for certain selected corporations, the average return on invested capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Also I ask that there may be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks tables taken from the August 1940 bulletin of the National City Bank of New York showing the profits of leading corporations for the half year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit D.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Also in this connection I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing taxes, net income, and dividends of all active corporations in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit E.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Also I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table published in the August 1940 bulletin of the National City Bank of New York showing rates of corporate-income, war, and excess-profits taxes. Also I ask to insert a table comparing tax liability for specific conditions under various plans of computing excess-profits taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibits F and G.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is not only the question of where the incidence of this particular tax bill will fall. There is not only the question of what effect it may have upon the competitive situation in the United States and the effect upon our entire economy in freezing the competitive advantage of certain high-earning corporations in the base period; but back of all of this problem rests the ultimate question of where these taxes are to fall; and likewise, as a corollary of that question, is the more important question: What is to be the incidence of the tax? Upon what principle is it to be predicated?

We all know that we are confronted with a situation which will require enormous increases in our revenue if the financial structure of the Government is not to crumble and decay. In the last analysis we are determining in this measure, just as we are every time we pass a tax bill, whether taxes are to be levied in accordance with ability to pay or whether ultimately the entire burden is to fall on the backs of the people of the country in the form of direct taxes, sales taxes, taxes which have no relation to ability to pay.

I say that with corporation earnings as they are now, and in the light of the emergency and the demands upon the Government for revenue, we are justified in enacting tax legislation which will require corporations, in accordance with their ability to pay, to shoulder a portion of this load. The Finance Committee bill raises only $65,000,000 net from excess profits. My amendment will raise $400,000,000 net from excess profits. In getting that substantial amount of revenue it does not jack up the taxes on all corporations by a flat increase in the corporate tax without any relation to ability to pay.

Mr. President, we should utilize methods of graduated taxation both with respect to corporate and individual income-tax structure and to inheritances and estates. Ultimately the people must assume this burden; and, unless ability to pay is the basis, it means that we shall be taking it out of the hides of the farmer, the wage earner, the small businessman, and the consumer. It means a lower standard of living; it means less buying power.

Mr. President, the people of this country do not have to choose between guns and butter. We have vast resources of productive capacity on our farms and in our factories; we have vast aggregations of capital; we have vast natural resources; we have a population of 130,000,000 people skilled in industrial and agricultural technique. Release that productive capacity, put it to work, and we can rearm America to meet any and all comers; we can rearm to defend this hemisphere from the Arctic Circle to Cape Horn; and, at the same time, we can lift the standard of living of the people of this country. But in order to attain these objectives an equitable and fair and sound system of taxation, predicated upon ability to pay, is essential.

It is essential also to strengthen the democratic process in America. In the long run, nothing will undermine the faith of the people in their Government more than to dump the major portion of the burden of the cost of rearmament onto the backs of the people at a time when we are drafting men for peacetime military service.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment may receive consideration by the Senate. I should like to state at this time that—in case there should be no roll call on the bill—in the event my amendment should be defeated I do not find myself in a position to vote for the measure.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that Mr. LUCE had been appointed a manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, vice Mr. GIFFORD, excused.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 4165) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

COMPULSORY SELECTIVE MILITARY SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 4164, the compulsory military training and service bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that the pending business be temporarily laid aside so that the conference report may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business and proceeding to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to submit a brief explanation of the conference report and of the differences between the two Houses, and the conclusions of the conference. I ask not to be interrupted while I make my initial statement. After I conclude I shall be glad to answer any questions I may be able to answer.

Mr. President, the Senate provided that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed for the national security in excess of those of the Regular Army, the National Guard of the United States, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall be ordered to active Federal service.

The House provided that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed in excess of those of the Regular Army, and of those in active training under the provisions of the proposed act, the National Guard shall then be ordered.

The conferees agreed to the House provision.

The Senate provided that the draft program should go into effect at once, together with the volunteer system.

The House provided that the draft program should not go into effect until after a period of 60 days, but that the volunteer feature should go into effect at once.

The House amendment authorized the President to issue, as soon as possible after the enactment of the bill, a call for volunteers between the ages of 18 and 35, and another such call at any time after January 1, 1941, and to induct into the land or naval forces for training and service as many of the men who volunteered as did not exceed the number of men for whom the call was issued. If upon the expiration of 60 days after the issuance of either of such calls the President found that the number of qualified men who had volunteered was less than the number for whom the call was issued, he was authorized to select and induct into the land or naval forces such number of qualified men selected through the Selective Service System as when added to the number who had volunteered would equal the number for whom he issued the call. Until the expiration of 60 days from the date of the issuance by the President of the second call no man was to be inducted into the land or naval forces under any other provision of the bill, except that registration, classification, and selection under such other provisions could take place.

The conferees agreed upon the Senate provision.

The Senate provided that the age limits for the draft should be 21 to 30, inclusive.

The House provided that such ages should be 21 to 44, inclusive.

The conferees agreed that such ages should be 21 to 35, inclusive.

The Senate made no provision as to housing or shelter. The House provided that induction should not take place until adequate provision should have been made for the proper housing of the men selected for training and service, the term "housing" to include such sanitary facilities, adequate water supplies, heating and lighting systems, medical care, and hospital accommodations as are in general accepted by the United States Public Health Service as essential to public and personal health.

The conferees accepted this provision, except to substitute "shelter" for "proper housing," and to strike out the words "as are in general accepted by the United States Public Health Service as essential to public and personal health," inserting in lieu thereof the words "as may be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, to be essential to public and personal health."

The Senate provided that there should not be in active training or service in land forces at any one time, in time of peace, more than 900,000 men inducted under the act.

The House provided that, except in time of war, there should not be in active training or service in the land and naval forces at any one time more than 1,000,000 men inducted under the act.

The conferees agreed upon the Senate provision.

The Senate made no provision as to deferment of college and university students.

The House provided in this respect—

> That in the case of any person who, during the year 1940, entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–41—
>
> (1) at any college or university which grants a degree in arts or science, to pursue a course of instruction satisfactory completion of which is prescribed by such college or university as a prerequisite to either class of such degrees; or
>
> (2) at any university described in paragraph (1), to pursue a course of instruction to the pursuit of which a degree in arts or science is prescribed by such university as a prerequisite;
>
> if, during his attendance at such college or university while pursuing such course of instruction, such person is selected for service and training prior to the end of such academic year, or prior to July 1, 1941, whichever occurs first, his induction into the land or naval forces shall, upon his request, be deferred until the end of such academic year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield, although I asked to be allowed to conclude my statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to say that there was some misunderstanding on the part of some as to the actual meaning of paragraph (f), which is the one relating to college students. I merely wanted to make certain that this applies to any person going to college for a bona fide reason, no matter whether he is a freshman or a senior, or whether he is taking a professional course or not. It gives him deferment until July 1, 1941. So that if a young man were a senior in a law school entering this fall, he would have until July 1, 1941, to complete his course as would a medical student, and so on.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator has the proper understanding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The conferees agreed upon the House provision.

The Senate provided that—

(b) Whenever the United States is not at war, each man so inducted shall serve for a training period of 12 consecutive months, unless sooner discharged: Provided, That if during his training period the Congress shall declare that the national interest is imperiled, he may be required to remain in service until the Congress shall declare that the national interest permits his being relieved from such service.

The House provided in this regard that—

(b) If and so long as the United States is not at war, each man selected for training and service shall serve for a training period of 12 consecutive months: Provided, That if during his training period the Congress shall declare that the national interest is imperiled, he shall be subject to service until the Congress shall declare the national interest permits his being relieved from active service.

The conferees agreed upon the following in this respect:

(b) Each man inducted under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a training and service period of 12 consecutive months, unless sooner discharged, except that whenever the Congress has declared that the national interest is imperiled, such 12-month period may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interests of national defense.

It will be seen that under both Senate and House provisions induction is limited to a time of peace. Under the provision adopted by the conferees induction can be had in war as well as in peace.

The Senate provided that after completion of training and service, trainees would be transferred to reserve components until the act expired, or for a period of 10 years, or until discharged, whichever occurred first.

The House provided that trainees, after completion of training and service, should be transferred to reserve components until they reached the age of 45, or for a period of 10 years, or until discharged, whichever occurred first.

The conferees adopted the House provision. The practical effect of this provision is to extend somewhat the time a trainee would remain in the reserve component.

Passing to the next item, the Senate provided that the trainees should have the same pay and allowances and other benefits as enlisted men of the Regular forces of the same grades and lengths of service.

The House provided that in addition trainees should receive pensions, compensation, and disability allowances to the same extent as such enlisted men.

The conferees accepted the Senate and House provisions in substance with clarifying language, as follows:

(d) With respect to the men inducted for training and service under this act there shall be paid, allowed, and extended the same pay, allowances, pensions, disability and death compensation, and other benefits as are provided by law in the case of other enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land or naval forces to which they are assigned, and after transfer to a reserve component of the land or naval forces as provided in subsection (c) there shall be paid, allowed, and extended with respect to them the same benefits as are provided by law in like cases with respect to other members of such reserve component. Men in such training and service and men who have been so transferred to reserve components shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

The Senate made no provision permitting payment by employers to trainees during training and service or to members of reserve components on active duty. The House made such provision to trainees and members of reserve components below the rank of captain.

The conferees agreed to the House provision without the limitation relating to the rank of captain.

The Senate adopted a provision preventing discrimination on account of race or color with respect to men volunteering for induction, specifically including aviation.

The House bill contained a similar provision, and no further action as to volunteers by the conferees was necessary.

The Senate made no provision relating generally to discrimination in carrying out this act in reference to race or color.

The House adopted such a provision, including creed.

The conferees adopted the House language, striking out the word "creed."

To the persons and groups of persons excepted from registration and relieved from training and service by the Senate, the House added men accepted for admittance to the United States Military Academy.

The conferees agreed to the Senate provision with the House addition, and added men accepted for admittance to the Naval Academy and Coast Guard Academy, and also cadets of the advanced course senior division, Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps. The R. O. T. C. senior graduates had already been included, and the House has agreed.

The Senate provided that:

(b) The Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and other executive officers of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia whose continued service in the executive offices held by them is found to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest, shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

In this connection the House provided that:

(b) The Vice President of the United States, and the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, except judges of inferior courts not of record, of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, while holding such official positions shall be deferred, which deferred classification may be waived from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

The conferees divided this subject into two paragraphs, reading as follows:

(c) (1) The Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service under this act in the land and naval forces of the United States.

(2) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this act in the land and naval forces of the United States, of any person holding an office (other than an office described in paragraph (1) of this subsection) under the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest.

The Senate bill provided that nothing contained in the Senate bill was to be construed as requiring any person to be subject to combatant training or service who by reason of religious training or belief is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. All persons claiming such exemption because of such conscientious objections were to be listed on a Register of Conscientious Objectors at the time of their classification by a local board, and their names at once referred by the local board to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing. After appropriate inquiry by the appropriate agency of the Department of Justice, a hearing was to be held by the Department of Justice in the case of each such person with respect to the character and good faith of his objections. If the objections were found by the Department to be sustained, it was to recommend that (1) the objector be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if the objector was found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service that he be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after the hearing the objections were found not to be sustained, the objector and the local board were to be immediately notified, the name of the objector was then to be removed from the Register of Conscientious Objectors, and the objector was thereafter to be liable for the training and service provided for in the bill. If within 5 days after the date of the findings by the Department of Justice, the objector or the local board gave notice to the other of disagreement with the findings, the local board was to refer the matter for final determination to an appropriate appeal board.

The House followed the Senate provision except to eliminate the Department of Justice.

The conferees provided that if the objections of the so-called conscientious objector are not sustained by the local board in the first instance the objector is given the right to appeal to the appropriate appeal board. Upon the filing of such appeal, the appeal board is directed forthwith to refer the matter to the Department of Justice for an inquiry and hearing. After appropriate inquiry by the proper agency of the Department of Justice, a hearing is to be held by the Department with respect to the character and good faith of the objections. If the Department finds the objections to be sustained, it is to recommend to the appeal board, first, that the objector, if he is inducted under the act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President; or, second, if it is found that he is conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service in lieu of such induction, that he be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. In making its decision the appeal board is to consider the record on appeal from the local board, together with the recommendations, which it is not bound to follow, by the Department of Justice. All persons whose claims for exemption under this provision because of conscientious objection are sustained are to be listed by the local board on a Register of Conscientious Objectors.

The Senate bill provided that any person who had been required to leave a position in the employ of a private employer, other than a temporary position, within 30 days prior to the enactment of the bill should be deemed prima facie to have left such position in order to perform the service required under the bill. This provision had the effect of requiring reinstatement by the employer after the completion of the employee's period of training and service. There was no similar provision in the House amendment.

The conference agreement omits this provision of the Senate bill.

The Senate provided that:

(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered during the period of service in such forces as on furlough or leave of absence; and shall be so restored without loss of seniority; and shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time of being inducted into such forces; and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration.

The House adopted a similar provision.

The conferees extended this provision to those affected by the National Guard bill.

The Senate had no provision relating to filling positions vacated by trainees.

The House provided as follows in this connection:

(i) It is the expressed policy of this Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this act that such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is not a citizen of the United States or who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

The conferees agreed to the House provision with the elimination of aliens.

The Senate provided that draftees should be under the jurisdiction of the civil courts in the matter of violations of this act prior to induction for training, and thereafter to military and naval courts martial.

The House provided for concurrent jurisdiction in such cases by civil and military courts.

The conferees adopted the Senate provision.

Both the Senate and the House provided for the creation of a selective-service system. The Senate provided that the Director of Selective Service should receive compensation at a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum. Under the House provision the Director's compensation was to be fixed by the President. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate in this respect. The conference agreement also provides that officers on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or in reserve components thereof, and officers and employees of any department or agency of the United States, who may be assigned or detailed to any office or position to carry out the provisions of the act, may serve and perform the functions of such office or position without loss or prejudice to their status as such officers or employees. Thus, Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard officers, or officers of reserve components thereof, so detailed or assigned will continue to receive the same pay, allowances, and benefits, including promotional and longevity rights and privileges, and all other rights and privileges that they have at the time of such detail or assignment and that they would continue to receive had they not been so detailed or assigned. The conference agreement also provides that any person appointed, assigned, or detailed to a position in the selective-service system the compensation in respect of which is at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed, assigned, or detailed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. A similar provision was contained in the Senate bill. Clerical and stenographic employees for local boards may, under the conference agreement, be appointed and compensated without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Both the Senate and the House provided that the members of the local boards and the boards and agencies of appeal must be civilians and not connected with the Military Establishment. The provisions of the House amendment in this respect are contained in the conference agreement, and it is further provided that under no circumstances can Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard officers, either on the active or retired list, be assigned or detailed to a position of member of any such board or agency.

The Senate bill provided that whenever the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy determined that any existing manufacturing plant or facility was necessary for the national defense and was unable to arrive at any agreement with the owner for its use or operation by the War Department or the Navy Department, the Secretary, under the direction of the President, was authorized to institute condemnation proceedings with respect to such plant or facility and to acquire it under the act of February 26, 1931. Upon the filing of a declaration of taking in accordance with the provisions of such act, the Secretary was authorized to take immediate possession of the plant or facility and operate it either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms pending the determination of the issue. Nothing in this provision was to be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in the plant or facility.

Under the House amendment, the President was empowered through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place orders for any product or material that might be required and which could be produced by the company concerned. Compliance with the order was made obligatory. Upon the refusal of the company to comply with the order, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Department, was authorized to take immediate possession of the plant, to manufacture therein the product or material required. Failure to comply with the provisions was made subject to imprisonment for not more than 3 years and to a fine of not exceeding $50,000. The compensation to be paid for the products and material or as rental for the use of the plant or facility while used by the United States was required to be fair and just. Nothing in the provision was to be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in the plant. The House amendment also repealed the first and second provisos of the act of June 28, 1940, entitled "An act to expedite the national defense, and for other purposes."

The conference agreement contains provisions similar to those contained in the House amendment, except that before the President is authorized to exercise the power of taking over the plant or facility, the conference agreement provides that the public necessity must be immediate, and the emergency in the public service imperative, and such as will not admit of resort to any other source of supply, and the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy must certify to the circumstances and that such circumstances require the exercise of the power created in respect of the property to be taken over or operated.

The conference agreement also provides that the compensation to be paid to any person for its products or materials or as rental for its plant of which possession is taken, shall be fair and just, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be. If the amount so determined is unsatisfactory, such person is entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, when added to the payment already received, will be just compensation, in the manner provided for in the case of suits against the United States under the Judicial Code. No special penalty is provided for violations of this provision, inasmuch as the general penalty section is applicable to such violations. In the conference agreement, this general penalty section is substantially the same as the penalty section in both the Senate bill and the House amendment.

The bill, as passed by the Senate, provided:

SEC. 12. (a) All the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as now or hereafter amended, shall be applicable with respect to contracts hereafter entered into for weapons, ammunition, and other military equipment procured by the Ordnance Department of the Army and by the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy to the same extent and in the same manner that such provisions are applicable with respect to contracts for aircraft or any portion thereof for the Army and Navy: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall exercise all functions under such section with respect to such contracts for the Army, and the Secretary of the Navy shall exercise all functions under such section with respect to such contracts for the Navy.

(b) The provisions of section 3 of such act of March 27, 1934, as amended, shall, in the case of contracts or subcontracts entered into after the date of approval of this act, be limited to contracts or subcontracts where the award exceeds $50,000.

(c) All determinations hereafter required under such act of March 27, 1934, as now or hereafter amended, with respect to the costs and profits of War Department and Navy Department contracts shall be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively.

The House bill contained no such provision.

The conferees struck out the Senate provision. In this connection I desire to read a letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, Judge Patterson:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 9, 1940.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Military Affairs Committee, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: 1. Attention is invited to S. 4164 (the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940), which, as passed by the Senate on August 28, 1940, contained in section 12 a provision which would extend the profit-limitation provisions of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended, to contracts for weapons, ammunition, and other military equipment procured by the Ordnance Department of the Army. No similar provision was incorporated in the selective-service bill as passed by the House of Representatives on September 7, and the matter will therefore no doubt now be handled by the conferees on this bill.

The act of March 27, 1934 (the Vinson-Trammell Act), as amended, imposed a maximum limitation of profit in the case of aircraft or portions thereof of 12 percent of the contract price. The Senate Appropriations Committee considered, in connection with H. R. 10263 (the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1941), a proposal to extend the application of profit limitation to contracts for weapons, ammunition, and other military equipment procured by the Ordnance Department of the Army. The views of the War Department were requested in connection therewith and were presented informally by the Chief of Ordnance. The attention of the committee was invited to the currently existing reluctance on the part of aircraft manufacturers to enter into contracts in view of the uncertainties as to profit-limitation requirements and with respect to amortization of the cost of new facilities required. It was likewise pointed out that hundreds of prime contractors would be affected by the extension of the legislation proposed, as well as thousands of subcontractors, and that prospective contractors to the Ordnance Department would be unable to hold their contemplated subcontractors to commitments previously entered into if the legislation were adopted, with the inevitable result that the national-defense program would be seriously retarded. Upon the presentation of such views, the Senate Appropriations Committee took no further action toward including the provisions, and the appropriations act, as finally passed by the Congress and approved this date by the President, does not include the same.

However, as indicated above, when S. 4164 (the selective-service bill) was passed by the Senate on August 28, it contained in section 12 a similar provision, added by amendment on the floor of the Senate, to that theretofore considered and rejected by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The same objections to such a provision exist as were presented to the Senate Appropriations Committee.

It may be noted that there is now under consideration in the Senate a provision contained in H. R. 10413 (the Second Revenue Act of 1940) which would in effect suspend the operation of the Vinson-Trammell profit limitations as a whole during the continuance of the proposed excess-profits taxes. If the selective training and service bill were now to extend the profit-limitation provisions to an additional and important category of supplies not now coming within the scope of such profit limitation, the effect, aside from the very great difficulties that would be entailed upon the Ordnance Department in the carrying out of the large procurement task imposed upon it, would be a distinct contradiction to the proposed provisions of the second revenue act as passed by the House of Representatives and now under consideration by the Senate.

The restrictions of the existing profit-limitation provisions have very greatly retarded the placing of aircraft contracts, and subcontractors as well have been found to be extremely reluctant to enter into contracts under such limitations. To extend the application of the profit-limitation laws to the important items of military equipment procured by the Ordnance Department of the Army would inevitably slow up the armament program to such a degree as to seriously prejudice the national defense. It is the view of the War Department that, in line with the action already taken by the House of Representatives, the matter of preventing the making of excessive profits can be more equitably handled in a general excess-profits tax bill, the effects of which would fall evenly on all, rather than by singling out particular classes of manufacturers to the great detriment of the national-defense program.

The War Department is unalterably opposed to further extension of profit limitation at this time.

2. Attention is also invited to section 12 of S. 4164, as passed by the House of Representatives on September 7, which deals with the so-called drafting of industry during the present emergency. The provisions stated in this section are essentially the same as those contained in section 120 of the National Defense Act of 1920, which is applicable, however, to time of war or when war is imminent. The War Department considers that the House provision is preferable because it fits in with the general national-defense scheme, as expressed in the National Defense Act, and, furthermore, obviates the necessity of actually effecting transfer of plants or facilities from private ownership to ownership by the Government, which may in many cases be objectionable.

The War Department favors the adoption of this legislation as contained in section 12 of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives.

3. Time has not permitted submission of this report to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. Therefore it involves no commitment as to the relationship of the report to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Acting Secretary of War.

Passing to the next item, the Senate increased the base pay of enlisted men of the Army and Marine Corps during the period of the life of this act.

The House had a similar provision and extended it to the enlisted men of the Navy.

The conferees adopted the House provision and made the changes permanent, beginning October 1.

The Senate had no provision relating to termination or cancelation of installment contracts entered into by trainees.

The House had the following provision:

Article III of the act of March 8, 1918, chapter 20, United States Statutes at Large, entitled "Rent, Installment Contracts, Mortgages," is amended by the addition of a new section to be known as section 303, as follows:

"SEC. 303. Nothing contained in section 301 shall prevent the termination or cancelation of contracts by mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, executed in writing, nor the repossession of property pursuant to such agreement."

The conference, on consideration of those provisions, reached the following conclusions:

(c) Article III of such act of March 8, 1918, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 303. Nothing contained in section 301 shall prevent the termination or cancelation of a contract referred to in such section, nor the repossession or retention of property purchased or received under such contract, pursuant to a mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, if such agreement is executed in writing subsequent to the making of such contract and during the period of military service of the person concerned."

The effect of the conference agreement is to make certain that the benefits extended to the trainees would be in the form of agreements entered into after the making of the original contract, and applying to retention as well as repossession of property.

The Senate provided that—

(b) The term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, shall be deemed to include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territories, and the possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands.

The House had a substantially similar provision.

The conferees agreed upon the following:

(b) The term "United States", when used in a geographical sense, shall be deemed to mean the several States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

The Senate had no definition of the term "dependent."

The House had the following definition:

(c) "Dependent" of a person registered under the provisions of this act includes only an individual (1) who is dependent in fact on such person for support in a reasonable manner, and (2) whose support in such a manner depends on income earned by such person in a business, occupation, or employment.

The conferees adopted the House definition.

Both the Senate and the House provided that the act was to become inoperative on and after May 15, 1945, unless continued in effect by Congress. The House excepted from this provision the provisions relating to service in the reserve components of the land and naval forces. The conference agreement also excepts from the expiration provision the provisions providing for the extension of pensions, disability allowances, and so forth, to men inducted for training and service under the act, and the provisions increasing the Army and Marine Corps base pay. The conference agreement also excepts from the expiration provisions the provisions creating a personnel division in the Selective Service System to aid persons who have performed their training and service under the act, or who are members of reserve components who have performed their active service, to secure employment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am always loath to say anything that might be construed as being critical of a conference committee. From my service on conference committees on many bills dealing with appropriations and other matters, I know something of the difficulties which confront the representatives of the House and of the Senate when they meet in an attempt to reconcile and iron out the differences between the two bodies. I cannot, however, refrain from expressing my disappointment that the conferees, in dealing with the section of this bill relating to the compulsory use of recalcitrant industry in the rearmament program, saw fit to limit the express language of the amendment adopted by the Senate and circumscribe the language adopted by the House, and to write into the conference report such limitations on the powers conferred by those two amendments as to restrict the War Department and the Navy Department in the acquisition of necessary supplies for the use of the men who are called to the colors by the bill.

I appreciate the fact that this amendment goes some distance in conferring powers to assure the cooperation of industry; but I cannot understand what circumstance or what facts could have moved the conference committee to take these two relatively simple propositions, approved, I believe, by each House of the Congress by the largest vote of any amendment or any provision that was agreed to in the bill, and, by restrictions and limitations, to sap some of the vitality of the amendment, cause confusion in its operation, and create grave doubt as to whether or not any industry or the head thereof can ever be prosecuted under the criminal provisions of the act.

My position is not dictated by any pride of having been identified with the amendment which was adopted by the Senate. When the provision approved by the House was brought forward, I immediately stated that, in my judgment, that provision was far superior to that which the Senate had approved, and expressed the hope that the House provision would be adopted and would be written into such act as might finally be passed.

In order that we may see wherein the conference committee has transgressed the provisions adopted by both the House and the Senate, I desire to make a brief reference to those provisions.

In the amendment adopted by the Senate it was provided that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy should determine that a plant was necessary in the national defense before proceeding to condemn it for public use. In the provision adopted by the House not even that determination was required.

The House amendment, which was adopted by a vote of 339 to 83 on a yea-and-nay vote in the House, empowered the President, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any person in the United States who was manufacturing or whose plant was capable of manufacturing goods necessary for the armed forces, and make the filling of the order compulsory. If the plant or person refused to comply with the order, the plant could be taken over and operated by the War Department or by the Navy Department in the production of such goods and stores.

As I have stated, the House provision went further, and contained a criminal clause. In the Senate provision there was necessary only a declaration that the action was necessary to provide for the national defense. Under the House provision no declaration whatever was necessary. It is merely an extension of the method of procurement already provided by existing law.

The conferees reached up into thin air, beyond the language of either provision, to bring back, with those two simple provisions before them, a requirement that it be determined and certified by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy that the public necessity is immediate, and the emergency in the public service is imperative, and such as will not admit of resort to any other source of supply, before the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy can proceed to require that contracts for essential munitions of war be supplied by those engaged in industry.

Mr. President, it has often been charged during the consideration of this amendment that it was political in its inception, that those who favored such a proposition in the law were resorting to demagoguery, and that such a provision was unnecessary. When the amendment was first presented to the Senate during the consideration of the selective-service bill, I stated that, in my opinion, the overwhelming majority of the industries of this country were willing to cooperate in the rearmament program. I stated that the Government should have some means of dealing with the small percentage who were recalcitrant and who sought to gouge the Government by extorting unwarranted profits. I reiterate that statement today. I resent the idea, to which voice has been given so often, that any legislation which requires anything whatever of industry is demagoguery when we are engaged in passing the most momentous bill, affecting the lives of thousands and tens of thousands of young men of our country, that has ever been considered by the Congress of the United States at a time when the Nation was not at war.

The principle embodied in all three amendments, circumscribed as it is by the action of the conferees, who went without the bounds of the provisions approved on roll call votes in both Houses, is a principle which has been recognized and supported in this Nation to my certain knowledge ever since the last World War. The members of the American Legion, on returning from the trenches in France, immediately pronounced that it was one of their settled principles that no person in this country should seize upon a future emergency involving our international relations to milk the Treasury of huge and unwarranted profits. Practically every veterans' or other patriotic organization has subscribed to that very principle. The platforms of both the major parties have time after time voiced the proposition which now is assailed as demagoguery, that all profit should be wiped out in the next war or national emergency. Nearly every newspaper supported this principle editorially. However, it seems to be one of those things it is pleasant to talk about but which is violently opposed when someone attempts to do anything about it.

The Congress of the United States, in taking the first faltering step in that direction, finds that the attempt on the part of both Houses has been confused and circumscribed by the action of the conference committee in dealing with the proposition.

Mr. President, the conference committee states in its report that the clear and definite penal provision of the House amendment, imposing a penalty of 3 years or a fine up to $50,000 for failure or refusal to comply with the terms of the measure, has been stricken because it was covered by the general penal clause carried in the bill. I hope the courts will determine that contention to be correct; but I wish to state that, in my opinion, it is very doubtful whether any person whatever, in the most flagrant case of refusing to assist in the great national effort to rearm America, can be subjected to any penalty of the criminal law under the bill as it is brought back from the conference. The conferees rely on the language which was carried in the Senate bill at the time of the adoption of the original amendment, with which I was in some degree identified. It does not specifically define the crime and punishment as does the House amendment.

It has been said that that amendment was not discussed upon the floor. The Members of the Senate know that it was under consideration in the Senate for more than 2 hours. It was opposed by able lawyers. No one ever contended that the amendment carried any criminal provision; but if the conference report carries a criminal provision, the original amendment which was adopted by the Senate carried a criminal provision.

It is an elementary rule of criminal law that crimes are not created by implication, and that all criminal statutes are strictly construed in favor of the person who is charged with a criminal offense. The committee have recognized this principle insofar as they deal with the young men who are to be called into the service under the draft. They spelled out line by line and word by word the criminal penalty of 5 years, or a fine of $10,000, in the case of some ignorant boy who might seek willfully to evade any of the provisions of the act.

This is dealt with at great length, and any attempt whatever to defeat any of the provisions of the act as to registration or a fair selection of the registrants, or to comply with the required training, is clearly defined as a felony. But the conference report does not clearly and distinctly set forth any penal provision for those who might violate the terms of the section affecting the use of industry in national defense. Nowhere does it state clearly and distinctly that failure to comply in the furnishing of the munitions of war by any industry is a crime.

These munitions are just as important in preparing our national defense as men. The House provision clearly and distinctly declares that any person guilty of refusing to cooperate with the War and Navy Departments in the matter of supplying munitions and implements of war is guilty of a felony, and in this respect it is far preferable to the vague implications of the conference report. There should be no doubt that an industry failing to do its part in this emergency, and the responsible heads thereof, should be equally guilty and as severely punished as the ignorant youth who seeks to defeat the provisions of this act.

I am glad that the underlying basic principle which was involved in both of the amendments has been adopted, but I regret exceedingly that the conferees have cast this shadow of doubt and confusion upon this important section, while making clearer every other provision of the bill which related to the individuals who might be affected.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have not had an opportunity to study the conference report, and I do not believe other Members of the Senate have had such opportunity, so as to know what has been done by the conference. As I understood from the reading by the Senator from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if I understood him correctly, it would be impossible for the Government to take over any industry unless it could make a showing that it would not be possible for the Government to get the article in question at any other place.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Secretary of the Department affected, either the War Department or the Navy Department, must make a solemn certificate that such is his determination.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me, on the face of it, that is an impossibility, because as to only a comparatively few articles could it be said that the Government of the United States could not get a particular article somewhere else, either in the United States or in some other country. I do not care what piece of machinery was needed, if the manufacturer merely said, "I will not make it," or "I will not make it until I get an exorbitant price," under the provision in the conference report, the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War would have to go all over the country to ascertain whether or not it was possible for some other manufacturer to make the article, whether he was engaged in that particular industry or not; and it might result in delay. I am not sure that I understand the provision correctly, but if I do, it completely nullifies the intent, and makes the provision worthless as a practical matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope that the conference provision does not go so far as to absolutely nullify the expressed intent of Congress. The amendment does have the virtue of recognizing that industry does have some responsibility to cooperate in this vast program, but it is not as clear or definite as either the original Senate provision or the House amendment. There is no doubt in my mind that it will cause important delays in obtaining the necessary guns, armament, tanks, ammunition, aircraft, and other supplies which are so essential.

The conferees have gone out of their way to find restrictions and limitations on the power of the Government to force industry to cooperate, and it is my opinion that the conference provision will tend to defeat the intent of Congress and cause great confusion. They have exceeded the powers of conferees under the rules of both bodies.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is correct, and I think he is, then the conference report, under the rules of the Senate, is subject to a point of order. Why does not the Senator make a point of order?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska was present a few days ago when a similar point of order was made, and it has been clearly determined here by a majority vote that where all after the enacting clause of a measure is stricken out and another measure is substituted, the conferees have great latitude. That was done in this bill.

I might say to the Senator from Nebraska that I consulted those who would be responsible for the parliamentary ruling which would be made in the event I made a point of order, and have been assured that the point of order would be overruled. For that reason I am not submitting a point of order. I do not wish to cause any useless delay. There are other ways to correct the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has just made a statement which makes it quite apparent, from the reading of the conference report, that the conferees have put into the conference bill things which were not in the bill which passed the Senate and were not in the bill which passed the House. Is not the Senator convinced that under clause 2 of rule XXVII of the Senate that makes the conference report subject to a point of order?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, under a strict interpretation of rule XXVII, which was debated at some length in connection with another conference report in this Chamber during the last 2 weeks, it probably would be subject to a point of order; but the Senate—the Senator from Georgia unfortunately voting with the majority—held that where all after the enacting clause was stricken and an entirely new bill was substituted it was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the Senator's statement is absolutely accurate, that the Senate refused to sustain a point of order made on the grounds I have indicated, and I think it did it in the face of the rule. But does not the Senator think—or does he think—that the Senate, having done that a few days ago, might have some pangs of conscience by this time and feel as though it should enforce its own rule, and that it might be well to try again?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senate of course has that right.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not subscribe to the interpretation which was put on the action taken a few days ago. My contention was that in the matter we then had before us there was a difference between the bill as passed by the Senate and the bill as passed by the House, and that even though there had not been precedents established along the line the Senator has suggested, we were fully within our rights under the rules of the Senate. I appreciate that other Senators took a different position than I did in reference to the question, but I am quite sure that my interpretation of the bill and what we did was correct, notwithstanding what my friend, the Senator from Nebraska, has said.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if it be true, as I believe, that the Senate threw a rule of its own out the window the other day, yet it is quite clear, I think, that there were Senators who thought that particular conference report was not responsive to a point of order. Assume that certain Senators did not agree to that, does the Senator know anyone who holds in this particular case that the conferees have not exceeded their authority under the rule, and, if that be true, would it not be proper to invoke the rule now, even though we disagree as to the justice of the Senate's decision the other day?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, under the Senate's rules all points of order of this nature involve mixed questions of law and of fact, as it appears from the conference report in the instant case, and undoubtedly Senators are as much influenced in their votes by their opinions on the facts in each case as by the letter of the law.

I have conferred with the Parliamentarian on this subject, however, and I am advised that on this question the report is not subject to a point of order under the precedents recently established by the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to bring the discussion back from the unsatisfactory realm of parliamentary law to the very important question which the Senator is raising, namely, that the conference report in effect nullifies the express desire of the Senate and of the House.

In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Georgia has stated that he hopes that the language in the conference report would not have the realistic effect of nullifying the power of the Government of the United States to take plants when necessary in the public defense. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator did. I may say further, Mr. President, for I wish to be frank in this matter, that I do not think this provision absolutely nullifies the power to whip industry into line where it will not cooperate. I think it so circumscribes it that it will hamper the War and the Navy Departments in its application at a time when the War and Navy Departments may seek to apply this law in the case of recalcitrant industries that refuse to cooperate in any manner in the defense act. One rule is applied to securing the men for the Army, and another and more complicated rule is applied to industry when it becomes necessary to secure clothing and guns for the men.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It seems to me the Senator is stating it mildly. I have just read the language of the conference report, and I cannot understand how the conference committee could have agreed to present it, having in mind the express will of the Senate and of the House.

May I take the Senator's time to read the language and to ask him for his interpretation of its effect? I read from page 9 of the conference report as presented to the House by Representative MAY, the second paragraph on page 9, being the clause which describes the prerequisite before the President may take over a plant—the terms which must go into the certificate. It is provided—

If the public necessity is immediate—

Of course, we would not be passing this bill at all if the public necessity were not now immediate. We would not be refusing to extend the draft for 60 days for men if the public necessity were not immediate—and the emergency in the public service is imperative—

How can anyone question that the emergency in the public service is now imperative? Why should we be gathered here at all to be considering a conscription bill, a military-service bill, if the emergency in the public service were not imperative?

Then we have the third clause, and this is the clause which seems to me to destroy the whole purpose of the provision—and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply.

Observe the use of the word "resort." It is not provided that the circumstances must be such as will not admit of the procurement of supplies from any other source. It is provided merely that the circumstances must be found to be such as not to require "a resort to any other source of supply." Delivery means nothing under this language.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the time element is all important when it comes to the question of men, but the time element is almost disregarded by the conferees in this unusual requirement of circumstances that "will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply." There is no time fixed for the finding and the certificate. There is no rule fixed to guide the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in deciding how much search must be made to determine that an order is "such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply." No such remarkable provision is found in either the House or the Senate bill, and I am glad that I do not have to construe this language.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The conference report will absolutely place industry upon a voluntary basis, while putting men upon the basis of conscription, and it seems to me it is utterly inconceivable that a committee of the Senate and of the House should present such a report.

There is just another point to which I wish to call attention—

And if such circumstances—

All three that I have just outlined—are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

Therefore, under this language, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy must make a certificate as to all three of the particular circumstances set forth in the three clauses.

Then there follows, after the word "Navy"—

And to require the exercise of the power hereby created in respect of the property to be taken over.

To what does that phrase attach itself? To what does it relate? Is it part of the requirement as to certification? It hangs in the air attached to nothing, meaning nothing, but it is a clause to which a clever lawyer may attach a case to prevent the taking over of a plant when the emergency requires.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not only to prevent the taking over of a plant, but in the case of any prosecution, in the event the general penal clause of the bill should be held to apply to this provision, the defendant could raise all three of the defenses that are set forth in the report of the conference committee which goes beyond the language contained in the House bill and the Senate bill. A defendant charged with refusing to do his duty and furnish supplies could undertake to prove that the public necessity was not immediate; he could undertake to prove that the emergency in the public service was not imperative; he could undertake to prove that the Government could go to Shanghai or Patagonia to secure the material that was needed, and thereby use all three requirements to defeat any conviction under a criminal prosecution in such case. Indeed, it might be contended under this language that the Government was charged with the proof of all of these contentions.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Under all the circumstances could those questions be raised? I take it the Senator assumes that an injunction suit might be brought to prevent this sort of action by the Government. Discretion is committed, by the legislation, to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. That cannot be inquired into in any injunction suit which might be brought, if one could be brought. There is no authorization for bringing such a suit against the Government. One cannot sue the Government unless he is authorized to do so.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is expressly authorized to be done in this case by the language of the committee report.

Mr. MINTON. No; we only authorize a suit for one purpose, and that is to get more money in case the operators of a plant think the Government has not offered them enough, and that is all. One cannot sue the Government without the Government's consent. An injunction suit could be started, but even if that were done, there could be no inquiry into the matter of the discretion committed by the legislation to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. If that discretion were to be exercised it could not be inquired into in any injunction suit that might be brought.

If the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy were to abuse the discretion committed to them, the only remedy an industry would have would be an action for damages against the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. I think that is a question of law that should be perfectly clear.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Indiana was a member of the conference committee. Will he tell the Senate why this language was put in the conference report? If it does not mean anything, why did the conferees place it in the bill and go beyond the action taken by the Senate and by the House in a measure adopted in the Senate by a vote of 69 to 16, and in a measure adopted in the House by a vote of 330 to 83? If the language is absolutely meaningless, why was it placed in the report?

Mr. MINTON. I did not say it is meaningless. I say the language is in definition of what we all believe to exist before the property is taken, namely, an emergency. The clauses which have been read merely define a condition which we think should be precedent before this extraordinary power is exercised. If there were not an emergency, as the Senator from Wyoming has said, we would not be here. If it were not immediate we should not be considering these measures. It it were not imperative we should not be considering them.

So far as the other clause "such as will not admit of resort to any other source of supply," is concerned, in my opinion that is simply an appeal to the judgment of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as to whether or not he can actually get the supplies somewhere else. If he decides that he cannot, in his own judgment, he makes the certificate. The Government may not be enjoined for the exercise of the discretion of one of its officers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is the meaning of the next clause?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. There would be no suit against the Government. Under the Constitution of the United States my property may not be taken without due process of law. No officer of the Government, merely because he makes a certificate, may come in and take my property and say, "I am going to run it." One would not obtain an injunction against the United States but against the particular individual who might try to take over his property without any right of law. There is no question about that. Injunction suits are brought every day against various officers of the Government. The Government may not be sued, but one may obtain an injunction against the Secretary of State, or any other Government officer. One may obtain an injunction or a mandamus against the Secretary of State, the sheriff, or anybody else who is doing something in violation of law. Of course, if one wanted to sue the Government for a claim, he would have to have authority to sue the Government, but he may obtain an injunction. If a citizen could not obtain an injunction to restrain a Government officer from taking over his property without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution, in what position would a citizen of the United States be? There is no question about that law. There never has been. Suits have been brought every day against officers of the Government.

When I was a United States district attorney any number of suits were brought against various Indian agents and Government representatives. A Government officer may not come in and take my property without making a showing. I can obtain an injunction against the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, or anyone else, to prevent him from taking my property unlawfully. I may say, in the first place, that the public necessity is not immediate. How is the Government to show that the public necessity is immediate? Secondly, I may say that it is possible to resort to other sources of supply.

Take copper, lead, zinc, or any of the materials which are necessary; suppose the officials of a copper company should say, "We will not furnish copper. You can get it down in Brazil, in Chile, in Africa, or somewhere else." In the case of lead, the officials of the company might say, "You can get it all over the world." The same thing applies to manganese and to many other raw materials. These provisions absolutely nullify the express provisions in both the Senate and House bills and, as a practical matter, absolutely prevent the Government of the United States from taking over any industry in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to take the Senator's time——

Mr. RUSSELL. I intended to speak very briefly on this subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted to ask the Senator if he had thought about the interpretation of this language in connection with such a situation as has been described. I have been attempting to interpret it to my own satisfaction since it was written into the language of the conference report yesterday and was brought to my attention. Under the terms of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] the criterion under which the President, the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy was empowered to take over plants was that they were necessary in the national defense. That, of course, was an elastitc term. The bill did not attempt to go into what constitutes necessity; but, of course, it must be presumed that, in view of all the circumstances, it is necessary to take over the plant, and that it is impossible to arrive at an agreement as to the price of the plant or facility, or whatever it is which is to be taken over. The House provided, in section 11——

Mr. RUSSELL. Under the terms of the House provision no determination whatever was necessary. The House provision simply vested in the President an additional power or method of procurement of war supplies.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language in section 9 (a) is:

The President is empowered, whenever he determines that it is necessary for the common defense, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any person for such products or materials as may be required, and which are of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such person. .

Compliance with such an order is mandatory.

Mr. RUSSELL. But the House provision called for absolutely no determination or certificate. As I stated at the outset of my remarks, I think the House provision is much better than the Senate provision, because it requires no determination by anyone, but is merely an additional grant of power, which I think is necessary to accompany the draft of men—a law to accomplish which we are on the eve of enacting.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted to get the Senator's interpretation of this language, in view of that thought. The conference report authorizes the President to give orders for certain materials and goods. Subsection (b) of section 9 makes it mandatory upon the person or corporation to comply with the order. Then subsection (c) provides:

If any person who owns or operates any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, or who owns or operates any manufacturing plant which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, is capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or the Navy—

And so forth.

Mr. RUSSELL. We might as well be frank about it. The language of the conference provision is the House provision slightly transposed, with limitations imposed which did not appear in either the House or the Senate provisions.

Mr. BARKLEY. We must interpret all that in view of the meaning of the word "necessity." The language provides that if any such person shall refuse to do certain things—

Then, in either such case, if the public necessity is immediate—

Otherwise it might not be a necessity—

and the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply—

And so forth. Does not that mean that although there may be an infinite source of supply somewhere else, either in this country or outside the country, if the circumstances are such as not to make it possible or wise to resort to such source of supply, then in addition to his other powers the President may proceed to take over the plant and produce the article which is necessary?

Mr. RUSSELL. I regret that I cannot accept the construction of the Senator from Kentucky, able lawyer though he be. Mr. President, this language was put in the bill for some purpose. It was not intended to be mere meaningless language, which could be waived aside with one motion of the hand. It was put in for some purpose. Let us hear the purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I presume that with respect to both the Senate amendment and the House provision it was expected that the Government would need the particular facility or product because it could not obtain it elsewhere. If there were an ample supply of anything in this country, either under the Senator's amendment or under the House provision, it might legally and properly be interpreted that there is no necessity to take over the plant or facility.

I have been in sympathy with the Senator's attitude; and, as he knows, I conferred with him with respect to the matter. As the conferees first wrote this provision, day before yesterday, it was utterly unacceptable to all those who are in sympathy with the Senator's amendment; but in trying to interpret it in full sympathy with the Senator's fears on the subject it seems to me to mean that, notwithstanding the quantity of a given product anywhere in this country or elsewhere, if the conditions were such that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy could certify that because of lack of time, or distance, or for any other reason resort could not be had to that supply, then he would have authority to take over the plant. In that case, if that is to be the interpretation—and I have arrived at it only by my own feeble processes—it is really a liberalization of the word "necessity" which was in the original amendment, under which the President, the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy might take over plants for the manufacture of products necessary to the national defense.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish I could view the matter in so casual a light. As I construe the conference language, it does three things. In the first place, it gives to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy three additional duties or responsibilities before they may proceed against any industry which does not cooperate in the defense program. They must make some kind of investigation and determination to find out how immediate is the public necessity, how imperative is the emergency, and whether or not the goods needed can be obtained anywhere else. There is no time limit established.

Then they must certify. What does the word "certify" imply? It implies an investigation and consideration before the certificate is made. The Secretary must certify that the public necessity is immediate, and that the emergency is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply. That is the first thing which the language does.

The second thing it does is to give three grounds for an injunction which might be sought by an industry which wished to defeat the operation of the act. It adds three defenses which may be pleaded by any person prosecuted under the terms of the act. I cannot view the language in so casual a light.

Mr. President, I have been told that this provision was put into the bill in order to make it constitutional. Nothing could be further from the established law of decisions in this country. Under the Constitution——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am sure the Senator from Georgia takes the position that in time of war or impending public danger we do not even need statutory authority to take private property.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course. That is a constitutional right. It is older than the Constitution. It is as old as any law. The Senator's conference committee undertook to write into the bill the requirements of the common law and restrict the act of 1916. The conference report is in derogation of powers already existing.

Mr. MINTON. What we did was simply to define a set of circumstances in an emergency in peacetime, under which this extraordinary power may be exercised.

Mr. RUSSELL. Extraordinary power?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Talk about extraordinary power.

Mr. MINTON. It is extraordinary power.

Mr. RUSSELL. Senators talk about extraordinary power, in dealing with an industry which says to Uncle Sam, "Go jump in the lake. We will not accept a contract which allows us only 8 or 12 percent profit." We talk about extraordinary power as applied to industry when we are taking a million men into the service whether they want to go or not. This is a day of invoking extraordinary power. I refute the statement that there is anything extraordinary in these powers. It is milder than the treatment accorded human beings.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I use the term only in the legal sense that the courts say that the exercise of the power to take another person's property, whether by eminent domain or in the face of an emergency, is the exercise of an extraordinary power. That is all I mean—the exercise of a sovereign power.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if we disregard the human element and go to the legal issues involved, I say it is the exercise of an extraordinary power to conscript men in time of peace.

It is not necessary to go to the long line of decisions which have been rendered by the Supreme Court in cases of this character arising under the act of 1916 which the action of the conference committee would in effect repeal. Under the act of 1916 the President had the right to exercise every power contained in the amendment adopted by the House.

The Government of the United States had the right to proceed, as prescribed in the House amendment, to prosecute any person who refused to comply with any of the provisions of that amendment and furnish necessary supplies. This conference proposition would modify the act of 1916. The House provision eliminated the provision in that act that war had to be imminent before the power to take over could be exercised, and adds the powers of the act of 1916 to the general methods of acquisition of necessary military supplies; but the conference report would take away from the act of 1916, which is on the statute books today, some of the powers which are vested in the President at a time when war is imminent.

Under the act of 1916 it has been held by the Supreme Court that the Government had a right not only to priority of orders but to go so far as to seize a power plant, and to divert the electric current generated there from those who held the contract for its delivery, and to use it for plants constructed for national-defense purposes.

The power in the Congress which was referred to as something extraordinary is not anything unusual in the light of past history and decisions. In time of war, without any statute, the Government has a right to seize private property for the public use. The first decision on that subject which I have found was written by Chief Justice Taney after the Mexican War. The same rule was followed after the War between the States. It is an inherent power not only conferred by the Constitution but existing under the common law in time of war to seize any property which may be necessary and essential in the conduct of the war. The Constitution of the United States gives the Congress ample power to legislate on this subject. These powers are express, not implied. It is not only the power but it is the definite duty of Congress to raise and equip armies, and any power may be invoked by statute to provide the equipment necessary for the men.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution enumerates the powers of the Congress. It says the Congress has the power—

To * * * provide for the common defense.

It has the power—

To raise and support armies.

It has the power—

To provide and maintain a navy.

It has the power—

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States.

There is no lack of constitutional power for the Congress to pass any Act which it deems wise to assure that men may be equipped when they are called into the service of the armed forces of the United States.

What does the language "To provide and maintain a navy" mean? Of what avail would be a million sailors if ships could not be provided for them to operate? Certainly Congress has the power in time of peace, and even if another war is never fought, to legislate on this subject as fully as it deems wise, always, of course, guided by the rule of reason.

My attention was first directed to the necessity for legislation on this subject by an actual case in my own State which forcefully brought home to me the duty of the Congress to equalize the duties and responsibilities of every person, whether natural or artificial, in the existing emergency.

The Government of the United States is going into my State and acquiring an enormous area of land in order to establish an antiaircraft firing range. Something like 400,000 acres of land is involved. This land is located in the southern section of my State, in an area which has been settled for over 200 years; and it is peopled today by the direct descendants of those who first opened up and settled that part of the country. These people are patriotic. They have fought in every war in which this country has been engaged, and they have fought bravely.

They have a high sense of the duties and obligations which they owe to their country. No section has people who are willing to make greater contributions to the maintenance of our country, nor who have greater reverence for our institutions. These people and their forebears have lived in that section for more than two centuries. They are attached to the land and to their surroundings. It was hard to understand why it was necessary to have an area which was large enough on every side to take care of the 17-mile range of the antiaircraft guns. A delegation of them came to Washington to see if this project could not be located elsewhere, and if the necessity for removing them could be avoided.

It is an old custom in my State—a custom which I love—for families which live on one place for some length of time to have what is called a family cemetery, and to inter their loved ones in a little plot which is usually somewhere adjacent to the dwelling house. There are people living on lands there today who will be moved to make room for this antiaircraft range who have seven generations of their ancestors sleeping on the premises from which they will be evicted. The women who trim the hedges and work the gardens of those farms have seen their grandmothers trim the same hedges and work the same gardens; yet in the interest of national defense the Government cannot heed the protests submitted by those people. It has been decided that it is necessary to take up six or seven thousand families by the roots and move them to other areas because their land is essential for use for an antiaircraft firing range.

Mr. President, when that is being done we hear no complaint from the metropolitan press that we are sovietizing America. No man of great prominence in the political life of the country rises up and says, "what are you going to draft the men to defend if you are going to take those homes?" This statement was made when the Senate adopted this amendment which provided for the compulsory use of industries in preparing our national defense. There is no provision here which requires the Secretary of War to certify that he cannot get land anywhere else before he takes over the homes and the farms of my constituency as the conference report requires in case of industry. There is no provision in the conference report which would waive the penal provisions and the conviction and penal servitude of any person living there if he should resist the United States marshal who comes to serve the writ of eviction. In the interest of the common defense these people must leave their lands. They must move and begin life anew. They will not receive any profits as in the case of industry. They will receive nothing for the intrinsic value of their lands that comes through their association with that soil through several generations. They will only get the fair market value of their lands.

Those people who are being moved have sons. Those sons today are going to recruiting offices and enlisting. They are not seeking out the marriage license bureaus in order to try to secure exemption as is the case in some sections. Georgia has a fine record of enlistments. But there will be some of those sons who will not desire to go when their numbers are reached in the draft. There will be some of them who think they should remain at home to look after the old folks. There will be a few of them who have started little businesses and who do not desire to go. But when their number is reached, if they do not go, they will fall under the criminal provisions of the act, and they will be subject to 5 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary as felons, or to a fine of $10,000, if they do not respond immediately to the provisions of the law.

There is no provision here, Mr. President, as there is as to industry in the conference report, that the Secretary of War must issue a certificate that he cannot get another man anywhere else. Any man who is needed and whose number is reached is the man who is taken. There is no provision here which relieves him of any criminal prosecution. He will be prosecuted and convicted if he does not go.

Mr. President, let us assume that the men who are called, who are taken by compulsion of law, are assigned to an antiaircraft unit, and are stationed on this antiaircraft training ground from which the owner has been evicted. What condition do we then find? The drafted soldier goes out and asks, "Where is my antiaircraft gun, this delicate machine with which I am to train in order to equip myself to play my part in my country's defense?" He must be told, if responsible officers of this Government may be believed when they testified before the Committee on Appropriations, "We cannot furnish you an antiaircraft gun, because there are some little subcontractors who are quibbling about the profits on their devices."

We cannot proceed to make the antiaircraft gun and furnish it to the man who has been drafted for this training because some subcontractor does not want to manufacture for the Government the roller bearings which are necessary, and other little devices which the subcontractors are refusing to supply. You have land seized by the Government, a man drafted by the Government, and that same Government helpless to furnish the gun. And yet we are told that legislation affecting industry is socialistic and we will be sovietized if we compel industry to furnish that gun. I am willing to submit this illustration to the American people to let them decide whether it is fair and democratic to permit such a condition. On this I rest the justice of my contention that all industry must also be required to do its part.

Mr. President, that is not a fanciful story. That is an actual case. Here are the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, when a responsible officer of the Government stated that they could not secure the antiaircraft guns, and he read into the record telegrams from the subcontractors refusing to proceed because they were allowed only 8-percent profit.

Let those who wish charge that it is demagoguery to take the position that where the Government is taking homes without the consent of the owner, when they have taken a man over the protest of the man himself, we should not hesitate to deal with any industry which holds back and says "I demand my last dime of profit before I will give that man an antiaircraft gun to be used on the land the Government has taken against the consent of the owner." That might be demagoguery to some people, but to me it is democracy, and if we do not enact some provision of law with teeth in it which will require these people to go along with the program, equal rights to all and special privileges to none will be a hollow mockery in this country.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. While referring to the record, the Senator also recalls that, in addition to the telegrams read into the record, there were one or two which were not printed. Certainly there was one presented to the committee by Admiral Furlong which read substantially like this:

We are not interested in the business.

I think that there may be some man in the country who might say that he was not interested in the business when he was drafted; and if he does make that statement, I can imagine what will happen to him. When a subcontractor advises the Navy, as to an order for the manufacture of antiaircraft guns, "We are not interested in the business," it gives some justification for the consideration by Congress of some means to take over the plant and see that that plant is run in the interest of national defense.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator from South Carolina. I will read from the record another telegram that was read into the record at the hearing. Remember, we are trying to get antiaircraft guns, all important under conditions of modern war, delicate and intricate pieces of machinery, the production of which requires the cooperation of a dozen subcontractors in addition to the steel companies. The Congress had already appropriated the money. I read from the hearing:

Admiral FURLONG. This is one from South Bend, Ind., a bearing company, with reference to gun-mount bearings, with equipment special.

"We prefer not to operate under the Vinson Act."

That act limited profits to 8 percent.

Mr. President, we are not going to ask the drafted men whether they are satisfied with their pay. We may certainly ask these industries to accept 8 percent profit on their business. We are not asking the men whether they are satisfied with their mess, or the terms and conditions under which they are forced to train. To be fair and just to all citizens and under all democratic principles it is necessary that we have clear and definite power to deal with any group which is disposed to delay or defeat the armament program.

I say that it would be undemocratic, it would be destructive of the fundamental ideals of this country and of the faith of our people in their Government to declare in the terms of the conference report that we are going to equivocate in dealing with these industries, the small minority of the industries, I wish to reiterate, who are standing in the way and blocking the efforts of the Government to provide the machinery of war for these men.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator point out the difference between the language of the conference report in this particular section and the wording of the House bill which went to conference?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will undertake to do that. I am sorry that I have not been able to make myself clear. I undertook once before to differentiate between the propositions.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want the Senator to repeat something he has gone over, but I thought the Senator was pointing out the difference between the Senate bill and the conference report.

Mr. RUSSELL. I stated the difference between House provision and the one adopted by the Senate as compared with the conference report. Under the Senate bill it was necessary for the Secretary of War to declare that the use of the factory was necessary to the national defense. The House bill did not contain any requirement, but under the constitutional power, nay, not only the power, but the duty of the Congress of the United States, to maintain and equip armies, it empowered the President, when terms could not be arrived at for the manufacture of essential implements of war, to take the property without any declaration whatever.

The conference report brings in language providing that no proceeding can be had, that no single industry, however recalcitrant it may be, can be proceeded against, unless the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, certifies that "the public necessity is immediate, and that the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply, and if such circumstances are certified to" which require the exercise of the power hereby granted in respect of the property to be taken over. That language is outside the action of the House, it is outside the action of the Senate. It is a definite restriction and a limitation on the power of the President that was adopted by the conference committee, and I contend the conference committee exceeded its right in defeating the evident intent of the House and the Senate in adopting the provision.

I realize that time is of the essence in this matter. I had intended to address a few remarks to the Senate when the original universal selective service bill was pending before the Senate, but I refrained from doing so because the debate was drawn out for so long. But I cannot let pass this opportunity to express my profound regret that in this case special preference has been shown one class of American citizens, or one segment of American life, in writing a bill to provide for the national defense. In our haste we should not create rank discriminations between American citizens, neither should we neglect to do everything that is necessary to assure a national defense that will protect us from any enemy or combination of enemies. The section relating to the use of industry should not be disregarded and weakened on account of a short delay, if this will enable us to more fairly and equitably distribute the obligations and responsibilities between every group and class to do their full and fair share in the cause of our common country.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana——

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to be recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair undertook to recognize the Senator from Louisiana, since he understands the Senator from Louisiana is coauthor of the provision under discussion, and desires to say a few words in regard to it.

Mr. LEE. I wish to be recognized, as I had asked to be, earlier in the day.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I will state to the Senate and to the Senator from Oklahoma that I do not expect to take more than 3 or 4 minutes.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the Senator that I do not expect to take more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, does the Chair see my name on the list which lies on the desk, as applying for recognition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does.

Mr. LEE. Does the Chair see the name of the Senator from Louisiana above my name, applying for recognition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. As the Chair stated, I am one of the coauthors of the amendment which was adopted by the Senate. I wish to say that I agree with a great deal of what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I agree with him in the statement that the House amendment was equally as good, if not preferable, to the Senate amendment. It has been erroneously stated that the Senate amendment would require the acquisition in fee simple of the property. The Senate amendment would authorize either the acquisition in fee simple or the acquisition of the use of the property, because the Senate amendment would authorize the condemnation of the property. The greater includes the lesser, and, therefore, there could be a condemnation of the temporary use of the plant instead of an acquisition of the plant. That would be optional with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the President.

Mr. President, I do not, however, agree with certain interpretations which have been made in respect to the conference report. I do not agree with the interpretation which has been placed on the penal clause with respect to drafting manufacturing plants engaged in the production of munitions of war. There are two distinct phases of that provision in the conference report. One deals with the penalty. The other deals with the appropriation of the property. The two are separate and distinct. The one is enforcible without the other.

Section 9, paragraphs (a) and (b), of the conference report makes it obligatory upon the owner of a plant to comply preferentially with the order of the War Department and the Navy Department. It makes it the duty of the owner to comply with the order given to him by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

That is one proposition. It is clear and distinct. In order that there may be no doubt about it I will read into the RECORD paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. (a) The President is empowered, whenever he determines that it is necessary for the common defense, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any person for such products or materials as may be required, and which are of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such person.

(b) Compliance with all such orders for products or materials shall be obligatory upon the person with whom such orders are placed, and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore or thereafter placed with such person.

I will not read all the penal clause, section 11 of conference report. I will read the portions which are applicable to the duty which is imposed upon the owner of a manufacturing plant to comply with an order issued by the heads of the War or Navy Departments. It declares:

Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying out any of the provisions of this act, or the rules or regulations made or directions given thereunder, who shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform such duty * * * or who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under or in the execution of this act—

Omitting a portion and coming to the penalty provision—shall upon conviction * * * be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment. * * *

Does not the conference report impose the duty upon the person owning the manufacturing plant to comply with the order, and does not the penal clause provide that any person who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any act required of him in the execution of this act shall be subject to this penalty?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me the Senator is correct in assuming that the penalty clause does apply to anyone who fails or refuses to perform any duty, or to comply with any requirements. That applies to any officer of the Government. It applies to the manager of any factory who refuses to go ahead with an order for munitions the President, through the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, issues to that concern at a price which has been fixed upon by the Government, with the provision that if the price is not satisfactory they can later go into court and adjust it. But is there not a difference between applying the penalty to a factory which refuses to carry out an order, and applying the penalty to a draftee who gets on the train and leaves, and tries to escape being called into service? He may escape entirely. The plant cannot escape. The Government can take it over instantly, whereas it cannot take over an individual who is seeking to escape service, and who may go into another State or into another country. The Government can take over the plant, whereas it cannot take over the individual if he escapes.

Mr. OVERTON. There is no "Bergdoll" plant.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition, it then inflicts a penalty on the plant which fails to carry out orders, just as a penalty can be inflicted on the person who tries to escape service in the Army.

Mr. OVERTON. There is no doubt that the penalty can be readily enforced against a plant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Kentucky has made what I regard to be a remarkable statement, that under the bill the Government could instantly take over a plant. It is precisely because the Government cannot do that that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has made the criticism which has been voiced here this afternoon, and it is precisely because of that that I joined in that criticism.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, we are not discussing that now. We are discussing the penal clause.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. We are discussing the penal clause.

Mr. OVERTON. I will read the other clause in a moment. The penal clause is seperate and distinct from the condemnation or appropriation clause.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should be glad to point out to the Senator from Louisiana how, in my judgment, the penal clause, which is in section 11 of the bill, cannot by any possibility apply to the so-called industrial draft section.

Mr. OVERTON. Oh, well, I differ entirely with the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Therefore, the killing of the penalty clause, which was in the House bill, is a grant of a special privilege to industrial plants that is taken away from draftees.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me at that point?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Wyoming has "jumped on" my use of the word "instantly." Of course, that means that if the company refuses to carry out the order, and the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy issues the certificate called for by the bill, and the conditions called for have been complied with, then the Government can take over the plant. It might not be in 5 minutes, but it certainly would be "instantly" as soon as the certificates were issued showing that the conditions set forth had been complied with.

Mr. OVERTON. I think we ought to keep clearly in mind that the conference report deals with two phases of enforcement. One is through the penalty clause, which is separate and distinct from the appropriation clause——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it the intention of the conference report that the officers of a corporation should be liable to the criminal penalty if the corporation should refuse to comply with an order given by the Government?

Mr. OVERTON. Anyone in authority over a corporation would be subject to the penalty.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the point in which I am interested. Would the criminal penalty apply only to one person, or to all the officers? If the penalty is limited to one person, I am wondering whether or not it was the intention to limit the criminal responsibility to a particular individual, such as a general manager, and exempt the other executive officers of the corporation. What prompted the inquiry is the language in section 9 (b):

> Compliance with all such orders for products or materials shall be obligatory upon the person with whom such orders are placed.

I wondered if the Senator would construe that language to be sufficiently broad to authorize criminal prosecution against any other than one particular officer who might receive the order from the Government.

Mr. OVERTON. Anyone violating the provisions of the act would be subject to the penalty. On page 9 of the conference report, in section 9, subparagraph (f) contains the definition of "persons":

> For the purpose of this section, the term "person" includes any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, and organized manufacturing industry.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I was particularly concerned with section 11, wherein the criminal penalty is prescribed. Reference is made to a person who might not discharge the duty imposed upon him. Would the Senator construe the president, or the chairman of the board of directors, or the general manager of a corporation as being the one who would be liable to the criminal penalty in the case the corporation should refuse to comply?

Mr. OVERTON. Anyone in a position to fill an order, who refuses to do so, would be subject to the penalty. If the president of a manufacturing concern is in charge of the plant—as he necessarily would be—and he should not fill the order, he would be subject to the penalty, as would the manager, or anyone else in authority. That is my interpretation.

Mr. PEPPER. What leaves some doubt in my mind as to the accuracy of the able Senator's interpretation is that section 9 (b) does not say that the executive head of any corporation which fails to comply shall be liable to the criminal penalty imposed. It says "obligatory upon the person with whom such orders are placed."

Mr. OVERTON. The term "person" is described in the penal section, which says that any person who shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform such duty shall be subject to the penalty. Therefore, I think it would cover not only the corporation, which could be fined, but also the president or anyone in charge of a corporation, who could be imprisoned under the statutory provisions.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield for a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator be good enough to point out the provision in the bill, as now reported by the conferees, which places any obligation whatsoever upon any manufacturer to accept an order?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly. I have just read it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let us read it again.

Mr. OVERTON. Section 9, subparagraphs (a) and (b). Subparagraph (a), without repeating it, authorizes the President to place an order with any person for products and materials. The term "person" is defined later, as I have just pointed out, to mean any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

With respect to the penal clause, if the learned Senator from Wyoming will refer to section 11, without reading it, he will observe that it declares that any person who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under any section of the act shall be subject to the penalty. So it is perfectly clear that the duty is imposed upon the person, as defined in that section, to carry out the order given to him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to the provision which he has just read. Of course, the Senator is aware that those of us who are not on the Military Affairs Committee and who have not served on the conference committee are now reading this document for the first time.

Mr. OVERTON. I am not on the Military Affairs Committee, and I was not a member of the conference committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the Senator was coauthor of the original amendment, and therefore was very much concerned about it. As the Senator from Florida has been pointing out, there appears to be nothing in the penalty clause which places a penalty upon the head of the responsible official of a corporation which refuses to carry out an order; and that was clearly done in the language of the House provision, which read as follows:

> And any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years, and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

The point which appeals to me is that in both the Senate and the House a clear and successful attempt was made to place upon corporate entities the same obligation to serve the Nation which we are placing upon the natural persons whom we are taking into the Army. For some strange reason which has not been explained on this floor, the conferees have gone altogether outside any language which was transmitted to them, and have brought in a complex, complicated, and ungrammatical amendment which it would be impossible to enforce. Not only that, but they have utterly removed the personal responsibility and personal liability which were written into this bill as it passed the House.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the observation just made, though I do not entirely agree with the Senator from Wyoming.

I shall detain the Senate only a few minutes longer.

I think the appropriation clause has been sufficiently discussed to make fairly clear what is intended. I should have preferred not to have had the additional qualifications to the exercise of the authority agreed upon in conference; but to say that they nullify the appropriation of property, or that they nullify either the Senate provision or the House provision, I think is untenable. The public necessity is now immediate. The emergency is now imperative. The further certificate must be that the circumstances are such that a resort to any other source of supply is not available. That does not mean, as has been suggested, that if the Secretary of War could go to Shanghai or to Honolulu or to France or to any other place and obtain supplies, he would have to do so before the Government could undertake to appropriate the plant.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. OVERTON. I will yield in a moment. I place a different interpretation, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] apparently does, upon the word "resort." The language is that the circumstances must be such that—

The emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply.

That means that if the Government needed certain supplies immediately, there could not properly be a resort to a source of supply where they could not be immediately obtained. If they could not be obtained at the proper place, that would not be an available source of supply to which a resort could be had. I think this language ought to be construed in a practical sense, namely, that there is no practical way of immediately obtaining the required supplies.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield and, if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us take this illustration, and see whether or not the Senator agrees with me:

Suppose a munitions plant, located in New Jersey, were producing a certain commodity which the Government needed, as contemplated in this provision; suppose there were another plant in California or in St. Louis, Mo.; it might be that two of those plants, or any one of them, could produce an adequate supply if it were in the right place, but let us suppose that the New Jersey plant refused to carry out the order which the President had given. It seems to me this amendment means that the President would not have to go to California or to St. Louis, although there might be an adequate supply in those places, but he would not be compelled to resort to those places for the necessary supplies if the circumstances were such that they were not available, and it would involve delay and even greater expenditure, and that under those conditions he might take over the plant in New Jersey.

Mr. OVERTON. I agree with the Senator. I think he is entirely correct.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield first to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to this provision about "resort to any other source of supply," saying it would not be necessary to go to California for supplies. I do not subscribe to that idea at all, and I think the language cannot properly be given that interpretation.

Mr. OVERTON. It is necessary to take into consideration all the circumstances. The report so provides.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no. It simply says, first, that if the person owning or operating the plant refuses to give to the United States such preference in the execution of the orders so placed, or refuses to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or refuses to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, then, in either case, if the public necessity is immediate, and the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to other sources of supply, the property may be taken.

If it was simply meant that there should not be a resort to other sources, there would not be any excuse for not writing into that language what is meant by "resort to other sources"; but under this language a friendly judge could very readily say, and I think properly so, that the President first had to resort to the other sources of supply in this country, or he might say that he had to resort to sources of supply somewhere else.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me say to the Senator from Montana that this is not my language. I am sorry it is in the report, but I am trying to place on it a construction which I think is proper and which does not nullify the power placed in the President of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator from Louisiana is too good a lawyer not to recognize the fact that the language of the report is so imperfect and so subject to various interpretations that it is extremely unfortunate. When we were drafting the boys and the youth of the country, we were not only meticulous in writing the language with reference to drafting them but considered the language used in the penal provision with reference to aiding or abetting or advising a boy as to whether or not he should register.

Mr. OVERTON. I agree thoroughly with the Senator; he is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. Take the case of a person who, on account of religious reasons, says, "I ought to be exempt." Suppose he should come to the Senator from Louisiana and say, "I am a conscientious objector," and suppose the Senator should say, "If you are a conscientious objector, you ought not to go into the Army." Under this act the Senator would be subject to a fine and imprisonment for the slightest advice of that kind. Then, too, the courts, in times of hysteria, lean backward to pick out and send to the penitentiary some unfortunate fellow who has inadvertently advised a friend, perhaps ignorantly; yet we leave the clause with reference to industries open to legal interpretation, providing a thousand ways to let a court by interpretation throw a manufacturer out and say, "You do not come within the provisions of the act."

Mr. OVERTON. I agree with the Senator; and I said practically the same thing when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and I offered this amendment on the floor of the Senate. We undertook to make it very simple. We simply said that when a manufacturing plant or facility is necessary for the national defense, and no working agreement can be entered into between the owner of the plant and the Government, the Government may step in and take the plant by condemnation proceedings. That was simple. Anybody could understand that. There could be no question about it. I regret that all this language is used in the conference report, but I do not think it nullifies the provision.

Also, an interpretation was placed on the language by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to which I do not exactly agree.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. OVERTON. Not now. That is with reference to injunctions by the courts. The Senator from Montana is a much abler lawyer than I am, but I very seriously doubt that the courts will go back of the certificate of the Secretary in order to ascertain the facts.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, suppose the Secretary of War, in time of peace, should say that a national emergency existed when everybody recognized that there was not any national emergency; and when he made a certificate that the national emergency existed, although everybody recognized that there was not any national emergency, suppose he went over and took the property of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and said, "This property is necessary."

Mr. OVERTON. And Congress had authorized him to do it.

Mr. WHEELER. And Congress had authorized him to do it. I say he would be acting capriciously, and under the rules laid down here the court could say, "You are acting capriciously, in that you could have resorted to some other place to get that property. You have acted capriciously, in that there was not any national emergency. You have acted capriciously, in that it was not absolutely and immediately necessary." So we have given the court three reasons to act, and three opportunities to say that he acted capriciously; and if manufacturers showed that he acted capriciously, that there might have been a resort to other sources of supply, I say to the Senator that a court would be justified in enjoining his action. If that cannot be done under the law, tell me what protection a citizen of this country has against some departmental head who acts capriciously.

I have seen cases, not in times of emergency but under the law, in which agents of the Government have taken property and done this and done that, and I have seen injunctions sustained under those conditions.

Now the question is whether or not the Secretary acts capriciously. If he acts capriciously, it is not necessary to wait until after the damage has been done; and the Senator knows that the manufacturers would not only go into court with the ablest lawyers in the land on a question of this kind, but many times they would go before friendly judges.

Mr. OVERTON. But what happens? The Secretary issues the certificate, and immediately the Government takes the property under the statute.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no!

Mr. OVERTON. Yes, it does. The certificate is issued. The President, through the Secretary of War, is authorized to take immediate possession of the property.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator mean to say that before the manufacturer would have a chance to go into court and ask for an injunction, the property would be taken?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator's theory about the matter is correct, then private citizens have no right whatever, under this proposed act, to protect themselves against the capriciousness of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. OVERTON. I merely wish to point out that the provision is stronger against the industrial plant than the Senator from Montana considers it to be.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot agree with the Senator at all. I cannot conceive of the courts of the United States permitting anything of that kind to be done. The Government might, under the Senator's theory, take an apple orchard and say, "This is necessary for national defense," when it would have nothing to do with national defense. They might say they want the Senator's automobile, the food in his house, or anything he has, and does the Senator tell me that he would not have any right to ask for an injunction in an effort to prevent that sort of thing being done on the part of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. OVERTON. I am not contending that the owner of a plant will not possibly have some remedy in court. But I say that what we are writing into the law is a provision under which, as soon as a certificate is issued, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, can step in and take immediate possession of a plant. What the owner can do after that is another question, and, in my opinion, no court will ever be called upon to decide it. Under this provision, the law will be used as a club held over plants, and I do not think any of them will undertake, if the President authorizes the seizure of a plant, to go to court. I think they will comply with the order.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not catch what the Senator said about a club.

Mr. OVERTON. I said this can operate as a club over the heads of recalcitrant owners.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator sufficiently believes in democracy, and in the ownership of private property, to know that we should not find it necessary to hold a club over any American citizen. What I said with reference to the bill, however, some days ago, was that by this conscription bill a club is being held over the heads of all the men who are registered, a club over the heads of perhaps 12,000,000 or 15,000,000 men, and they are being told, "You had better be good or you will go into the Army, in peacetime."

Mr. OVERTON. We went into all of that during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to suggest a thought in support of the Senator's position on the legal question as to whether the court could go back of the decision of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy in an injunction suit or a lawsuit, let me say that when we commit to the discretion of an executive or administrative officer the finding of certain facts as a predicate upon which to exercise the sovereign right of the Government, when the Government itself is involved, then it is not possible to go into court and enjoin the executive or administrative officer in the exercise of his discretion, for the very simple reason that, if that were possible, we would be substituting the judgment of a court for the judgment of the executive or administrative officer.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we cannot even have a review of an administrative officer's decision.

Mr. MINTON. Absolutely not.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator puts his finger right on the point. We are vesting a tribunal, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, with the authority to make an investigation and submit the facts to the President, under a certificate, and then the President issues the order. The matter is submitted to a tribunal which has jurisdiction. We would have the right to exclude the jurisdiction of any court absolutely, and impliedly we do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There cannot be any higher exercise of the sovereign power under the Government of the United States, that is, constitutional power, than the exercise of the power of taxation. We are all very familiar with the actions continually brought in the nature of injunction proceedings to enjoin the collection of a tax. That is a very familiar example of a case in which a court of competent jurisdiction may, and frequently does, enjoin an officer of the Government from exercising a sovereign power of the Government because it is held to be unconstitutional or illegal, or for some other reason.

Mr. OVERTON. But not under a statute containing provisions similar to those of the conference report, which vests the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy with the duty and the discretion of making an inquiry and a determination. He is the tribunal which has the jurisdiction.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. I agree with the Senator that it would not be possible to go back of the certificate, but what bothers me is this: Suppose the certificate is signed, and the President attempts to take possession of the plant, and the owner says, "You cannot take it." It seems to me then that, under our Constitution, it would be necessary to get a writ of possession, or some other legal process, in order to take the plant. I wonder why there could not have been put into the measure a provision to the effect that upon the signing of the certificate the Government would be entitled to a writ of possession. I do not think under our Constitution it is possible to give any individual the right to grab someone else's property without a judicial order of some kind.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not know that I agree entirely with the able Senator. Evidently that is the function of the provision which authorizes the President to take immediate possession, and then to proceed, through the proper branch or bureau, to manufacture the product in question in the plant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I am about to yield the floor, because I rose for only a few minutes to explain my attitude on the conference report. I shall be very glad if the Senator will speak in his own time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My only purpose in rising was to ask a question. The Senator referred to something I had stated, and I desire to clarify it.

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator challenged the interpretation I had placed upon the language which has been brought in by the conferees. I desire to read the language to which I alluded. I think it is worth while to read it over and over again. I doubt whether there is any member of the conference who can explain, either logically or grammatically, what it means. Of course, we are all familiar with the old practice of inserting into a law, or into a document, or into a contract, language which is difficult of interpretation.

Mr. OVERTON. I agree with the Senator that the word "and" after the word "Navy" should not be in the report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. Of course, the Senator is agreeing now to the interpretation which I placed on the language, and withdraws the challenge he made a moment ago.

Mr. OVERTON. No; I do not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. OVERTON. I did not challenge the Senator. I merely disagreed with him, and I still disagree with what he originally stated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I in the Senator's time read the language again?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I read:

If the public necessity is immediate, and—

He has to find something else besides that—

and the emergency in the public service is imperative—

What is the difference between the two? Why should these two different clauses have been written into this provision?

If the public necessity is immediate—

That seems to my mind to describe a condition which admits of no delay at all, "if the public necessity is immediate." But we must not be content with that, we must go further, and the Secretary must find—and the emergency in the public service is imperative.

"Imperative" is something more than immediate, one would judge, in the minds of the conferees, or they would not have used these two clauses. But these two are not sufficient. Then—and such—

The public necessity must be immediate, the emergency must be imperative, then it says—

And such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply.

What is the meaning of that? Does it mean that in the minds of the conferees the conditions which the Secretary finds must be of such great and imperious gravity that the materials are needed immediately, are needed instantly, and that before any recourse may be had to the provisions of this section the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy must find that there is imperious, grave, immediate, emergent necessity, and if it is anything less than that nothing can be done? Does the Senator agree with that interpretation of mine?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I would have to undertake a further consideration of this provision and become involved in a further argument on it, not only with the Senator from Wyoming but with other Senators, and I do not wish to do that. The country at large is anxious that the bill be enacted into law. I rose to say only a few words. I am sorry I have taken so much of the time of the Senate. It was not altogether my fault. I simply rose to say that, while I am not in thorough accord with the provisions of the conference report, and while, if I had had the authority to write its provisions, I would have written this power of appropriation in different language and in different terms and qualifications, yet I do not think that the difference between the provisions of the conference report, and the Senate amendment and the House amendment, are such as should retard the progress of this legislation.

Mr. LEE obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment to make a statement?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Many Senators are inquiring whether we hope to dispose of this conference report tonight. I wish to say that we hope to do so, and I hope Senators will remain here. The House is waiting for us to send the conference report to them. I do not offer that as any reason why any Senator should forego the particular duty, if he feels it is such, to speak on the conference report, but I do feel that the Senate ought to act as speedily as possible so we may send the conference report to the other House. I ask Senators to remain here until we dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Oklahoma will permit, the Chair would like to make a statement before he proceeds. The Chair does so because he does not wish the Senator from Oklahoma to think that he desired to be discourteous to him when he announced that he recognized the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

The Senator from Oklahoma referred to the list which lies on the Presiding Officer's desk, and called attention to the fact that the name of the Senator from Oklahoma was next on that list. The Chair wishes to say that the rules of the Senate expressly provide that the Senator who first addresses the Chair shall be recognized.

As the Chair said, we are in the habit of keeping on the desk a list of those who desire to speak. That practice very frequently makes for orderly procedure. The present occupant of the Chair attempts to follow that method. Yet when a Senator rises and addresses the Chair before the Senator whose name is next on the list rises, of course the list must succumb to the rule of the Senate.

In the particular case in question the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] rose and addressed the Chair before the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] took his seat, or he did it while the Senator from Georgia was taking his seat. The Chair felt that the Senator from Louisiana was addressing himself to the subject of the discussion and intended to ask a question. As a matter of fact, what the Chair did at the moment is what he thought was right.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, it was not in any way necessary for the Chair to make the statement he has made to assure the junior Senator from Oklahoma of the uniform fairness and courtesy of the President pro tempore. It so happened that on two other occasions, when the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair, but some other Presiding Officer was in the chair, the same thing happened. When a thing happens once, that is an accident; when it happens twice, that is a coincidence; when it happens three times, it might become a habit. [Laughter.]

I know that what the President pro tempore has said is true, and I appreciated it at the time he made the ruling.

I wanted to speak on the conference report. Near the 10 kilometer post at Chateau Thierry there is a marker on which the name George Anderson is inscribed. I used to sit in the bleachers at the University of Oklahoma and watch George Anderson hit the football line with all the enthusiasm of a good football player. Then the war came, and George Anderson hit the Von Hindenberg line with the same enthusiasm. He never questioned what his pay would be when he joined the colors. His mother lived at Ardmore for a while. The American Legion named the local post for George Anderson.

On one occasion I visited the American Legion Hospital at Sulphur, a hospital for the tubercular and gassed soldiers of the World War. As I passed along the aisles by those white cots I heard the labored breathing of the boys whose lungs were eaten out by gas. One of them tried to say something to me. I leaned over, and in that husky whisper of the gas-eaten lung he said, "Carry on, Josh, carry on." I went on to Norman, my home town. Located there is a State hospital in which there is a separate ward for the shell-shocked boys of the World War. I have visited that hospital. I have visited the ward where they keep the boys whose bodies came back but whose minds did not. I began 20 years ago preaching the doctrine of drafting everything that is necessary in case of war. I do not care how many call me a demagogue for that. I believe it with every atom of my soul.

Of course, Hugh Johnson has called me everything he can think of. In four different, separate columns he has devoted to attacking me personally because I advocate the drafting of everything that is necessary in case of war. Hugh Johnson has been called a cream-puff soldier. He is the kind of patriot who would give my life for his country. [Laughter.] He was loud in his clamor for us to draft men, but the day we passed the Russell-Overton amendment to require the same cooperation of industry he began denouncing the different Members of the Senate who supported that provision; indeed, there went up from all over the Nation, from the same newspapers which had been loud in their clamor for us to draft men, a call, a cry that we were now all wrong, that we were making a mistake, and we were accused of being demagogues because we wanted a full cooperation of everything that is necessary to win war—men, money, and materials.

Machiavelli once said in his instructions to the prince, "Prince, you can murder their fathers, you can send their sons off to war to be killed, you can steal their wives, you can outrage their daughters, but do not touch their money."

The same day we passed the Russell-Overton amendment Mr. Wendell Willkie started singing that familiar song of his, "I did not raise my dollar to be a soldier."

His home may be on the banks of the Wabash, but his heart is in the banks of Wall Street. [Laughter.] He denounced us for our action, when by a vote of 69 to 16 we expressed our belief that if we are to take the boys we ought to take industry.

Have there been any cases of industries refusing to cooperate? I gave the Senate a brief word picture of what happened to some of the boys who came back. Now let me give a few instances——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with what the Senator said about the expression of Mr. Willkie with reference to conscripting industry as well as blood; but does not the Senator think that the conference report substantially follows the dictates of Mr. Willkie? It seems to me that if the Senate should adopt the conference report, it would be noticeably yielding to the outcries of Mr. Willkie against the principle which is involved in the Russell-Overton amendment as it was adopted by the Senate, and the House provision as it was adopted by the House.

Mr. LEE. I think the conference report has greatly modified and reduced the effect of the Russell-Overton amendment, or the Smith amendment in the House. The teeth have been pulled out of the provision. We once had a toothless old dog, who could bite, but it did not hurt much. [Laughter.] That is about the way with this provision. It can bite, but it will not hurt much. It is a gun behind the door, but the gun is empty. It is a club over the head, but the club is made of rubber—and soft rubber at that. There is no amelioration or softening of the calling out of men; but there certainly is a softening with respect to industry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A motion to recommit is in order in the Senate, because the conference report has not been acted upon by the House. If a motion to recommit were made, either with instructions to the conferees to adhere to and insist upon the Senate provision, or with instructions to agree to the House provision, some teeth would be put back in the old dog, would they not?

Mr. LEE. I think so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. At least the teeth he has left would be sharpened. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEE. I do not believe that such a course would require very much time. Mr. President, I am embarrassed at speaking at this time, when we want to complete action on the bill. However, I cannot vote for the conference report as it is without speaking. I cannot square it with my conscience; I cannot square it with my past record; I cannot square or justify such action with my past pronouncements and declarations from many rostrums in this country. The conferees have brought in a report, and we all realize that time is of the essence. If I must vote on the conference report as it is, I shall be compelled to vote for it because I believe I should be justified in voting for it in order to save time. However, I do not want to do it that way. I see no reason why we should be compelled to do it that way.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment to have the Clerk state a motion which is lying on the desk, and which I propose to make as soon as I can be recognized? I ask that it be stated now, because the Senator is speaking in behalf of my motion, and I should like to have him continue to speak along the same line.

Mr. LEE. I hope the Senator will permit me to conclude. I have almost finished.

In order to demonstrate why such a provision is needed, I should like to give three examples of industries which have not shown the proper spirit. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that next month, in the October term, there will come before the Supreme Court of the United States the case of United States against the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. This case grew out of the World War. The United States ordered some ships. The Government officials had no way of knowing what the ships would cost. They were not conversant with the costs. But the men who represented the shipbuilding company, Mr. Powell and Mr. Brown, were very well informed.

Furthermore, the United States Government had no choice. This one concern was the only company which could build the ships, and it had a virtual monopoly. So the Government was at the mercy of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. The representatives of the company, according to their own testimony, padded the estimates. They made a large allowance, first, for a decrease in efficiency; second, for an increase in freight rates and delivery costs; third, for an increase in the price of materials; and fourth, for extraordinary contingencies. The resulting figures represented a substantial increase in the cost, as was admitted, for "trading purposes."

Before the company would accept the contract the Government had to agree to certain terms:

First. That all costs would be borne by the Government, and that the company would take no risk whatever as to cost.

Second. That about 10 percent of the cost should go to the company as profit.

Third. That one-half the amount saved as between the estimated cost and the actual cost should go to the company as a bonus.

When the Government entered into the contract it had no choice, because, to use the language which the judge himself used, the corporation said, "Take it or leave it." The Government took it. It had no alternative. The men were already going to camps, just as this bill will have them going soon, and the Government will be "over the barrel," so to speak, as we are now "over the barrel" on the conference report. If we oppose it, we are in the position of delaying the enactment of the bill. I am conscious of that, and I am sensitive of it. I do not like it. It is a case of having to choose between two evils and having to take the lesser of the two.

The estimated cost was $120,000,000. The actual cost was $93,000,000. The corporation had a claim for half the difference between the estimated cost and the actual cost. There was an implied agreement that the company would be paid that extra bonus in return for extra efficiency. There was no evidence of any extra efficiency. The great difference between the actual cost and the estimated cost arose because of the high estimated cost, which resulted from the fact that the shipbuilding-company representatives knew what the costs were, because the company had been building such ships right along.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. A moment ago the Senator said that he did not wish to delay consideration of the conference report. I understand that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is about to make a motion to recommit the report to the conference committee, with instructions to adopt the House provision or the Senate provision. If that should be done, there need be no delay, because the House Members would be bound by the vote of the House, and the report could be brought back tomorrow. Certainly a day's delay in this matter would not affect in the slightest degree the induction of men into the service.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the Senator that I think the House conferees are here. They were here a while ago. They could step outside in a conference room while we act on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to another bill and bring back a report tonight, and we could act on it.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly; they could bring it back tonight or tomorrow morning, and we could vote on it tomorrow; so there would be no delay.

Mr. LEE. I will say further to the Senator that perhaps a delay of 1 night might save us many days of delay in dealing with some recalcitrant industrial company. There is evidence in the hearings before the Nye committee, investigating munitions profits, showing that one company delayed for 2 months accepting a contract to build a powder plant at Old Hickory; so 1 night's delay might save a great deal of time later.

I desire to read the words of Judge Dickinson with reference to this case to indicate what bold, brazen arrogance is shown by industrial leaders who tell us to "take it or leave it," and the attitude they have while we are requiring of the men patriotism. I quote from Judge Dickinson, of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, with reference to this case. He says:

It is pointed out by the United States that, in the instant case, the contractor had no reason to bargain for large profits to offset a risk of loss, because this contractor under this contract took no risk whatever.

The exaction of inordinate profits—

Says the judge—

is thus viewed by the United States as an advantage taken of the pressing needs of the Government. As wartime is to other citizens a time of sacrifice, it seems unholy and sinful to make of the calamity of the people a source of inordinate gain. As before stated, however, we are dealing with a matter of contract and not sentiment, patriotic or otherwise.

That is the statement of a judge who had to carry out a law. He admitted in his statement that he could not deal with patriotism; he had to follow the letter of the law. Why not give him a law that has teeth in it, that he can follow?

Let us see one other paragraph of this opinion. This judge, speaking, says:

This is a charge of actual fraud perpetrated by deception. The master has found against this charge of actual fraud and under all the evidence he could not have found otherwise.

The judge says there was no fraud because these men like bold robbers, he said, admitted that they were making unconscionable profits, and said, "What are you going to do about it? Take it or leave it."

To continue the quotation:

The managers for the contractor adopted a famous Rob Roy distinction—

Said the judge—

who admitted he was a robber but proudly proclaimed that he was no thief. The contractor boldly and openly fixed the figures in the estimated cost so high as to give them the promise of large bonus profits. The managers for the Fleet Corporation knew that the estimate was high and why it was made high and so protested it. The reply of the contractor's managers was, "We will take the contract with this promise of bonus profits incorporated in it but not otherwise. You take it or leave it." Whatever wrong there was in this may have been the wrong in a daylight robbery but there was no element of deception. The contract, although without any element of fraudulent deception in its making, in its performance results in profits to the contractor so inordinately large as to be extortionate and to render the contract unconscionable and thus unenforceable in equity or in law.

That is what the court held 23 years after that happened. The matter is coming up in court now. There was a company that held the whole Government at bay and said, "Take it or leave it." The company had every advantage, because their experts knew the cost of building ships. They had been building ships like that. They said, "We are no thief. We may be a robber. Yes; we are bold about it. Take it or leave it, though." There was nowhere else for the Government to go. They had to take it, and the profit was 27 percent, and in equity the company was granted about 25 percent, or $25,000,000.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. During the investigation of the committee of the Senate, investigating the Department of Justice, of which committee I was a member, the Department talked about bringing suit against the manufacturers afterward and getting the money back. The evidence showed that these concerns had repeatedly robbed the Government during the war, and claims were filed by the Government, investigations were made by the War Department, and investigations were made by others; and then it was shown that contributions were turned in to certain persons supposedly, or so it was claimed, for the Republican national campaign. As a result of that the suits were either dropped or never prosecuted, or, if they were prosecuted, they were improperly handled, and no recovery was ever made. So, as a matter of fact, notwithstanding the Government had the evidence, suits were not brought because of political pressure by various influential persons. That evidence is in the record time in and time out during the investigation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. LEE. There is the case of the Standard Aero Co. The Standard Aero Co., and one other company with it, were overpaid. The Government audit showed that they were overpaid $6,500,000. They immediately went into liquidation, and the Government did not have any chance to get back that money; and when the truth was discovered it was found that those two companies were owned by the Japanese house of Mitsui & Co., who at one time were paymasters to the Mikado of Japan.

Sometimes I wish I were permitted to use the eloquence of a top sergeant when I am talking about the inordinate profits, the unconscionable profits, of so-called captains of industry.

I have always heard it said, and I have been told when I have been battling for this cause for 20 years, "Josh, you will never get a draft of industry. You will never get a draft of capital." I said, "Well, you cannot shoot a man for trying." They said, "They will always give you a curve." I see now what they mean. I offered the other day an amendment so that we might have a vote on a draft of capital. Instead, I got a vote on a point of order. In this case both Houses passed a direct draft of industry, so plain that he who runs may read, so clear that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein; and we have here before us an intricate change of both those provisions which makes it very doubtful whether an unpatriotic captain of industry could be brought to book in time to do any good.

Yes; I see what they mean. They say, "You will never be able to draft industry. You will never be able to draft capital, because they will give you a curve. They will not oppose you directly; they do not dare do that, because the people will not stand for it; but you will get language that can be explained away," and that is what we have in this conference report—language that can be explained away, language that permits of delay; and justice delayed is justice denied.

I have before me an article from today's newspaper. We sit here helpless, powerful enough to take the manpower of the country and mould it into a fighting unit, but we have not power as the matter now stands to go to this company and make it make lenses for telescopes, for periscopes, for bombsights. Listen: I read from an article by Frank C. Waldrop in today's Times-Herald. He says:

You wouldn't believe, would you, that an American manufacturer right now could be so deeply involved in an iron-clad, legal contract with a German manufacturing concern that he cannot make for the United States Army one of its commonest and most important weapons, without first getting permission from the Germans and telling them how much of the stuff he wants to make for his own country?

Well, that is just one of many such involvements.

They were entered into in all innocence, so far as the average American manufacturer was concerned, away back in the piping twenties when nobody in this country was thinking of war.

The famous case of Bausch & Lomb, the optical-glass makers who were under license to Carl Zeiss in Jena, Germany, so that they were revealing, through royalty statements, how much of certain very important and secret devices our Army and Navy were buying, is a typical example of this kind of thing.

Bausch & Lomb made their first agreement with Zeiss back in 1923, and revised it again in 1926. Who, in those days, would have believed that we would be in our present predicament?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I might say to the Senator that I offered a resolution a few days ago providing for an investigation of some of the very contracts which have been made between American manufacturers and German concerns and other concerns which vitally affect our national defense. I did that with the idea of cooperating with the Department of Justice, as Mr. Waldrop suggested in the article. I feel very keenly that some committee of the Senate should investigate these matters, not with the idea of hindering the national defense, but with the idea of helping national defense. I think it would not only help national defense, but would help the Government of the United States and be a retarding influence against corporations which are seeking to rob the Government during this period. I think if a strong committee of the Senate should be set up it would have a very deterrent effect upon some of the outfits which want to gouge the Government. I think it would help the legitimate businessman who does not want to gouge the Government, but it would get hold of the chiselers and the group who are seeking to hold up the Government in the sale of their products.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator. Listen to this article from PM of July 31. This shows the attitude of the businessman at the very time when we are demanding patriotic service of the boys:

Among the 120 big plants operated by the United States Steel Corporation is 1 of the 3 mills in the United States of America that can produce heavy armor plate for battleships. The capacity of those mills falls far short of what will be needed in the next 4 or 5 years to equip the 2-ocean Navy.

To meet its share of the administration's defense program, United States Steel has been planning to expand its armor-plate plant. But it also wants Congress to pass a bill permitting the cost of those facilities to be written off against profits within 4 or 5 years, thus reducing income taxes.

Listen to this:

"We've delayed buying additional equipment for our armor-plate program until the bill is passed," said Irving S. Olds, new chairman of Big Steel. This corporation, he explained, had expected Congress to vote for rapid write-offs of new arms output facilities several weeks ago. He didn't know what had caused the delay; perhaps it was only that Congress always needed a long time to pass tax laws. In the meantime, United States Steel is on the side lines.

What is the bottleneck that is holding us up? It is not lack of men, it is lack of machines. We all know that.

I have gone a long way when I have agreed to vote for the draft of men, and I have done it only because of the great emergency which threatens our country, and which I think threatens liberty itself. That is the only way I can justify my vote to take flesh and blood, and when we are taking flesh and blood, how can we split hairs over having to prove all kinds of things that are written into this conference report before we can take a factory? It burns me to a cinder.

Mr. President, I am willing to vote for a motion to recommit the report with instructions. If the conference report comes to a vote as it is, I shall be compelled to vote for it because of the time element, but I certainly will do so under protest, and I make this statement in order to clear my record, and to let it be known that my fight on this question is not over.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk state a motion in writing which is on his desk, and which I now submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I move that the report be recommitted to the conference committee with instructions to the conferees on the part of the Senate to insist that in lieu of the language contained in section 9 of the conference report relating to taking over manufacturing plants by the President the language or the substance of the language contained in section 12 of the House amendment be inserted and that they report back to the Senate at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is it necessary that the Senate insist on the House provision? It seems to me that the motion would be in somewhat better form, if the Senator will pardon the criticism, if it should provide that the Senate conferees shall accept the House provision. In that way there would be absolutely no loss of time. The conferees could go out and adopt the House provision, which is infinitely preferable to the provision of the conference report, and the House could not go back on its own provision, which was adopted overwhelmingly in the House.

Mr. NEELY. My response to that timely observation is that conferees have been known to abandon with enthusiasm provisions which they had been appointed to defend and help to translate into law.

Mr. RUSSELL. In a case where the other House was willing to accept it?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if to anyone who is in favor of my motion it seems important to amend it to the effect that the conferees shall accept and, if necessary, insist upon the adoption of the language contained in the House amendment, I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator modify his motion to that effect?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I do so amend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator modifies his motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator is familiar with many instances, and I have personally been familiar with instances, in which amendments were inserted in the Senate, and even before the conferees had met, the Senate conferees announced that they intended to recede from a particular provision, before the House conferees had ever had a chance to ask them to do them. I do think that if we are to recommit the conference report at all it should be with very definite instructions. No one wants delay.

I say very frankly that I am opposed to the principle of the legislation, and I am going to vote against the conference report, although I do think it would be very much improved by the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. I think the motion should be strong enough to instruct the conferees not to bring a conference report back without the provision which the House inserted. If the House conferees then want to take the burden of refusing to agree to a conference report concerning a provision adopted by their own House, of course, that is their responsibility, but I think the Senator's motion should be strong enough, if it is to accomplish what I know is in his mind and heart, to instruct the conferees not to bring back a conference report unless it contains the House provision.

Mr. NEELY. My personal knowledge of conferees having failed to fight valiantly for the provisions or principles which they were supposed to champion is responsible for my having used the word "insist" instead of "accept." Let me assure the most honorable Senate conferees that the statement just made is not intended as a reflection on them. In my opinion, not one of them could be induced to shirk a duty or betray a trust.

Mr. President, I am supporting the bill. I have voted for the conscription of one of my own boys for military training in time of peace; and if necessary, to march against tanks and machine guns and cannon and possibly lose his life on some bloody field of battle.

In authorizing the conscription of our sons we did not provide that they should not be called to duty until after the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy had certified that no other persons could be found to do their training or fighting for them. The President is authorized to call them when they are needed and, if necessary, to compel them to obey. Our flesh and blood will enjoy no privilege of negotiating with draft boards for handsome profits, or compensation for loss of opportunities, or damages for loss of life or limb. No; the right to draft men to sacrifice their bodies on the altar of their country is as unconditional as the multiplication table and as unlimited as space.

In the circumstances patriotism, conscience, and parental affection imperatively demand that we clothe the Government with the absolute right to conscript any manufacturing plant that may refuse to cooperate with the proper military and naval officials in providing for the defense of this hemisphere against invasion.

I abhor demagoguery regardless of its form or disguise. I shall certainly not indulge in it on this important and solemn occasion. I am wholeheartedly in favor of the protection of every legitimate industry and the promotion of its welfare. In my opinion, all persons and corporations are entitled to reasonable compensation for their services to their government whether rendered in time of peace or war. But if it be demagoguery for me to insist that the property of any corporation or person that may be needed for the purposes of national defense in time of danger be drafted as freely as my boy is conscripted to defend American liberty, then I shall uncomplainingly endure whatever condemnation may be pronounced against me either for making the pending motion or urging its favorable consideration upon the Senate.

The great Lincoln once said, in effect: "I am for the man and the dollar, but in a contest between the man whom God made and the dollar which man made, put me down on the side of the God-made man every time." Fortunately we can, by adopting the motion now before the Senate, demonstrate of record that we are for both the man and the dollar as well as the plant or the property which the dollar builds or buys.

Apparently time is of great importance in the translation of the conference report into a law of the land. A month's delay might be equivalent to the difference between security and disaster. But if the motion prevails, the Senate conferees can within a few hours perform the required services and submit an amended report—the terms of which will not provide greater immunity for our inanimate property than it provides for our boys who are in the morning time of life and to whom every door of opportunity is open wide and who soon may be called upon, under the conscription law, to make the supreme sacrifice for you and me.

The adoption of the motion will mean that there will be teeth in the law that can be effectually invoked against any slacker who refuses a proper demand that he utilize his property in the defense of the Nation. It will assure the millions of boys who will be conscripted that no manufacturer of war material can refuse to satisfy their necessities for bombing planes and tanks and guns without becoming a criminal and serving a term in a penitentiary.

If I were to vote against the motion to recommit the conference report and, there should later be an invasion of this country and my son should lose his life, some manufacturer refused to cooperate with the Government in providing adequate means of defense, I should forever feel that the blood of my child was upon my hands.

On the approaching roll call, my vote shall be for my country and my boy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I feel like apologizing to the Senate for taking any time at all, but I wish to say a very few words. The issue before the Senate is not the issue of whether we think more of a boy than we do of a dollar. On any such issue, when it is presented, I do not believe there is a Member of this body who would vote to subject any boy, any man's son, to any greater obligation or requirement than we would subject any man's dollar or any man's property representing dollars. I realize that in some newspapers suggestions have been made about demagoguery. No one here on the floor has charged anyone with it. We waste a great deal of time here fighting windmills concerning what someone outside the Senate has said. I do not believe the Senate is under any obligation or necessity continuously to defend itself from all the fool statements which are made about it elsewhere.

In the first place, it will not be as easy a matter for the conferees to compose this situation as is indicated here today. In the next place, if the motion of the Senator from West Virginia is adopted, it must be messaged back to the House of Representatives. It may be true that one or two of the conferees on the part of the House are sitting around here waiting for us to determine what we will do, so they may go back to their Chamber. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] cannot assemble the conferees until the action of the Senate is messaged to the House.

If the motion of the Senator from West Virginia shall be adopted it will open up the entire conference report. We cannot bind the House conferees.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. It was stated on the floor of the Senate within the last hour that the House is still in session, waiting for action by the Senate. I submit, if the House is still in session——

Mr. BARKLEY. It is in recess at this hour, and will be called back into session when the Senate shall have acted. If we agreed to the Senator's motion and message it back to the House, there is no power in the Senate to keep the House in session all night, or for any length of time. We cannot bind the House conferees.

The truth of the matter is that, while I think the language of the House provision is probably somewhat of an improvement on the language of the Senate provision, it is very imperfect in itself. If we instruct our conferees to agree to the House amendment, we instruct them to agree to it verbatim, and I think if the Senator were to consult the House conferees, he would find that they would themselves agree that the House amendment ought to be revised.

Mr. NEELY. I hope the Senator will pardon me, but my motion provides that they shall adopt the language or the substance of the language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from West Virginia had modified his motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not understand that the Senator from West Virginia modified it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The RECORD will show that the Senator from West Virginia modified his motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have been sitting here listening very attentively to the Senator from West Virginia. He stated that he modified his motion to provide that it should read that the Senate conferees should accept, and if necessary insist upon, the substance of the House provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of that, Mr. President, we can not bind the House conferees, and we cannot assemble them in the cloakroom in a rump session in order to rewrite the conference report. If the motion of the Senator from West Virginia should be adopted, the entire conference report would be open. If the conferees were required to go back into conference the bill would be open for further consideration. No one can tell when it would come back. The conferees could bring it back tomorrow. They might not bring it back until next week. We could not compel them to bring it back at any time.

That may not be a good reason why the motion should be rejected, but I am offering it as a circumstance of which we ought to be advised when we vote on the motion. I may be entirely mistaken, Mr. President, but I have the feeling that the American people are not very much concerned about the technical interpretation of the language in the conference report. Under the terms of the Senate provision, if a plant or facility were necessary for national defense, the President could institute condemnation proceedings, find out how much it is worth, and take it over.

What is the real difference between the rewriting of that provision by the House and the provision in the conference report? The first part of it is almost identical. It is contained in section 12 of the House amendment. It reads as follows:

The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry—

And so forth.

That is the first paragraph of section 9 of the conference report. The language is almost identical. So there is no trouble on that score. The President may place an order with any firm, corporation, or association for war materials. The conference report authorizes him to do the same thing, in almost the identical language. Under the terms of the House amendment, it is obligatory and mandatory that the person comply with the order. In the House amendment I think there was a provision for a reasonable price, but that has been stricken out. The President may place an order for goods through the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy and himself fix the price; and it is mandatory that the person, corporation, or association comply with the order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Evidently the Senator from Kentucky has not read the original House provision. The language in the original House provision permitted the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to fix the price at which the goods should be manufactured.

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe such a provision is in the Senate language.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is in the House amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where is it?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will look in section 12, I shall read the language to the Senator. I shall not read all of it, but it says:

Any person * * * who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment * * * at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be——

Mr. BARKLEY. That language is stricken out in the conference report.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is transposed.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not in section 9 in the conference report.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall read it to the Senator:

The compensation to be paid——

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I know about that. It refers to compensation, but the words "reasonable price" do not appear. The language is:

The compensation to be paid shall be fixed—

And so forth. If the person is not satisfied he may go into court.

Mr. RUSSELL. I insist that it is a mere transposition of language. If the Senator will yield, I shall read the provision in the conference report:

The compensation to be paid to any such person for its products or materials, or as rental for any manufacturing plant of which possession is so taken while it is used by the United States, shall be fair and just, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be.

If the Senator wishes to quibble about the difference between a fair and just price and a reasonable price, he may do so. I say that the two provisions mean essentially the same thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not quibble with the Senator over that, because it is not important anyhow. The point is that the President is authorized to place orders with manufacturing concerns, and that compliance with the orders of the President is mandatory, under both the House amendment and the conference report.

We now come to the language which is in controversy:

If any person who owns or operates any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition—

And so forth. If such person does one of three things—refuses to give the necessary preference; refuses to manufacture the kind, quantity, and quality of arms or ammunition desired; or refuses to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition or other supplies or equipment—

Then, in either such case, if the public necessity is immediate, and the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply—

The bill contains, in the very first paragraph, a declaration of the policy of Congress:

That (a) the Congress hereby declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

So the whole philosophy of the bill is based upon an imperative necessity, and that imperative necessity is carried throughout the entire bill. As I see it, it is carried through the conference report.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LEE. In this case the Government would have to prove that the necessity is immediate; that is, over and above the necessity which causes us to pass this bill. Then it would have to prove that the emergency in the public service is imperative. If the Government should wish to order a hundred raincoats, a good lawyer could go into court and demand that the Government prove that the weather conditions were expected to be such that the raincoats would be needed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator could go even beyond that——

Mr. LEE. Lawyers do such things.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator could go even beyond that, and say that if the Government should desire to take over a screen-door factory in order to supply screens to keep flies out of the mess halls because it was a necessity, the Government could be called upon to prove that it is necessary to have a screen door in order to keep flies out of a mess hall. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have just listened with much interest to the recitation by the Senator from Kentucky of the three conditions in the conference report which call into action the power of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to recommend to the President that plants be taken over. I am glad the Senator has mentioned those three conditions.

Now let us read them again:

(1) refuses to give to the United States such preference in the execution of the orders so placed with such persons, or

(2) refuses to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or

(3) refuses to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment.

It is obvious from reading these three provisions that the purpose is to deal not with those manufacturers who accept but with those who refuse to accept the orders of the Government of the United States; and provisions brought in to us by the conferees, intended to throw protection around those who refuse to serve, are drafted in such language that it is impossible for any member of the conferees to stand here and explain—not one, and I say the Senator from Kentucky cannot explain—why the Senate of the United States should tonight be asked to grant concessions and relief and consideration to those who refuse to do any of these things.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I am not responsible for the language of the conference report. I was not a member of the conference. I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee. I have been trying in my limited way to interpret it to myself. I do not interpret the conference report, and these three subsections which set out the conditions, as any effort to protect or throw a shield around any concern in the United States. They are, in effect, a rewriting of the conditions of the House amendment under which the President may proceed to take over these plants.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a moment. Let me read what the House bill says.

After going on and saying what the President may do, after stipulating in another paragraph, which is not numbered, that compliance with these orders is obligatory and mandatory, and so forth, the House bill says, at the top of page 52:

Any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment, who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference—

Which has been previously provided for, and which is contained in the conference report—in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition—

That is carried out in these subsections—

or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment—

Which is part of the three subsections to which I have referred. Then there is a provision that a reasonable price, as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall be offered. Then and in those events, in any one of those cases—which are almost identical, although not divided into subsections as the conference report divides them, with the provisions of the conference report—

The President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement—

Which is in the conference report—

is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

I say that the division of these requirements and these conditions as the conferees have gone into one, two, and three subsections of paragraph (c) of section 9 of the conference report, which is the equivalent of section 12 of the House bill, is almost identical. It is a little rewritten; it is a change of language, but it means the same thing; and I cannot remember a single thing set out as a requirement on page 52 and over at the top of page 53 that is not set out in these subsections.

Then the language of the conference report goes on to say, which seems to be the cause of some confusion here:

Then, in either such case, if the public necessity is immediate—

Well, we think it is. If it were not immediate we would not be here with this legislation. We would not have already passed appropriations of $15,000,000,000. If it were not immediate we would not have done all these things, although we did not have to have any certification of its immediate imminency in order to enable us to do it; but we did it because we thought it was necessary and because it was immediate.

Now:

and the emergency in the public service is imperative—

The theory of this whole bill is that it is imperative. The statement that it is imperative is in the first paragraph of the bill. That is hooked up with what follows:

and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply—

It seems that that is the clause in the conference report which has created all this trouble, "resort to any other source of supply," although I do not think that is all that is in the mind of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I think the conference report repeals the previous provisions of the House bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree with the Senator. That is a matter of interpretation, however.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand; but the Senator stated a few moments ago, when he started reading and comparing the bill and the conference report, if I correctly understood him, that there was little difference between the conditions imposed in the House amendment and those imposed in the conference report. Now the Senator from Kentucky has read, and I have stood and patiently listened, the main provisions of the House amendment; and I challenge him to show a single condition which is imposed on the President or the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy other than a refusal on the part of industry to manufacture. There is no condition there. The conditions did not come into the case until the conference report came in including these three conditions.

Mr. BARKLEY. The provisions of the conference report are the same in substance, though not in language.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not say provisions.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, the President may make the order, and it is obligatory; but if the manufacturers refuse to provide the quantity or the quality of the goods on which the President has issued an order, then he may proceed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; but the Senator from Kentucky is knocking down a straw man with that statement. Nobody challenged any comparison of the essential language, other than the conditions imposed on the President and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. When we compare the provision of the conference report with the original House provision it will be found that they are practically the same, and I so stated today; but then the conferees, in violation of rule XXVII, went further and wrote the conditions which the Senator has just read, which did not appear in either the House bill or the Senate bill; and no man can tell how the courts will construe the requirement put in the conference report that the War Department and the Navy Department must certify and establish that the goods cannot be obtained by a resort to any other source of supply.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not accept that interpretation. The only difference, the only language, the only substance that has been written in by the conference committee, has been the suggestion that the refusal on the part of the organization is, in No. 1, to give preference to the execution of Government orders. That is No. 1.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is in the House bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is in the House bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is no condition.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. 2 is that the organization refuses to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, and so forth. That is in the House bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is no condition.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. 3 is that the organization refuses to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment. That is in the House bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is still not a condition.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the same condition which is in the House bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is the same provision, but it is not a condition or limitation on the power of the President or the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, such as is found in the language that was superimposed on the House amendment by the conference committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only addition is that the conditions under which these three things exist create an immediate situation, an immediate emergency, and that in that immediate emergency the situation is such that it will not admit of resort to other supplies.

What is the meaning of that? Webster's International Dictionary says that "resort" as a verb means "To go; to repair; to betake one's self; to have recourse; to apply."

It merely means that although there might be an adequate supply somewhere else in the United States, if the emergency is so important, and the circumstances where it exists are such as to make it inadmissible that the Government should resort to California, or to Illinois, or to Missouri, to get a thing needed in New Jersey or New York or in Georgia, it has a right to go in and commandeer the plant.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator well states the principal objection to the provision. Suppose the Government tomorrow were to go into the market to purchase a million suits of knit underwear with which to clothe against the coming winter the men who are to be called. A similar case arose under the act of 1916, which the conference committee provision emasculates, and in effect repeals.

The Government did not go to one manufacturer and say, "You have to devote all your time and all of your plant to fulfilling this one contract with the War Department or the Navy Department," as the case may have been. They went to one manufacturer and said, "You must make 50,000 undershirts," or to another and told him he must make a hundred thousand. Under the act of 1916 it was obligatory; and under the House provision, before it fell into the hands of the conference committee, the Government could have gone to each manufacturer and told him how many garments it expected him to make.

Under the provision defended by the Senator from Kentucky, the recalcitrant industry, the one which refuses to cooperate, could say to the Government purchasing agent, "I will not make a hundred thousand undershirts for you because I would rather manufacture them for the private trade, and I can make more profit out of it." What, then, would happen? The patriotic industry, which was willing to cooperate, which was willing to go along and make its contribution to national defense, would have dumped on it another order for a hundred thousand undershirts it would have to make for less profit, perhaps, than it could get for manufacturing goods for the private trade.

So any way we look at it, whether from the standpoint of the Government or anyone else, the conference committee provision creates a privileged class, an exempt class, in industry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us take the same situation under the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia which was adopted by the Senate. Under that amendment it would have to be demonstrated that the taking over of a plant was necessary for national defense. That is all there was—that it was necessary.

Mr. RUSSELL. It did not require any certificate, it did not require any findings. All the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy had to do was to say that it was necessary to the national defense. It did not require a certificate. It required a declaration only on the part of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, and there is much difference between a declaration that a thing is necessary in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy for the national defense, and requiring him to go scouting around over the country to find out whether he could have the articles manufactured somewhere else if one manufacturer refused to make them.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no substantial difference between a declaration and a certificate. A declaration does not mean that an interview in a newspaper will be used. It means an official declaration on which someone can act, just as we require the Chief of Naval Operations to certify that certain boats are not necessary to national defense before the President can do what he did a few days ago in the exchange of boats for bases. It is the same sort of declaration or certificate, I do not care what it is called.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator cannot see any difference between a simple declaration or proclamation on the part of the War Department or the Navy Department that a certain commodity is necessary in the national defense, and a certificate from the Secretary of War, after investigation, that he cannot secure certain commodities from any other source, not limited to the United States of America, I fear our constructions of this amendment are so much at variance that any further expression of my views would not illuminate his discussion.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. It seems to me there has been a good deal of unnecessary confusion about the language used by the conferees. I was in favor of the amendment offered by the Senators from Georgia and Louisiana. It seemed to me satisfactory. When the House inserted their provision I thought that was a little better, and today when I studied the provision of the conferees it seemed to me that was still better, because properly interpreted, all it does is to place practically unfettered discretion in the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to say that a particular plant, either the product or the plant itself, must be taken over.

But the Senators say there are certain limitations and conditions. To my mind, from a reading, it seems very clear that before the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy would ever state to Mr. A, "We have not been getting along with you, and we want your plant," the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case might be, would have already made up his mind on the three conditions which are set out, and he would be ready instantly, upon refusal, to give the certificate required. Otherwise, there would be no purpose. If the goods could be bought just as well and just as conveniently somewhere else, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy would not be bothering with the certain individual we are discussing at all. The very fact that they are coming to deadlocks with him would indicate that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy was ready at that moment to make a certificate covering all these conditions.

It seems to me, I say again, that there is here practically unfettered discretion in the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to take over plants. Who can question it? The Senator from Oklahoma says the Government must prove this and the Government must prove that. The Government would not have to prove a single thing. Congress has said to the Secretaries, "You have discretion when you make your certificate to the effect that these conditions are present," and that is the end of it. The only time the court would ever have anything to say about the matter at all, the only time the Government would ever have to make any proof in the slightest degree, would be in the matter of compensation if there were a disagreement.

It seems to me that we have unnecessarily spent much time on the matter. I am sure that as the language of the conference report which has been carefully written is better than even the House provision, which I thought was better than the Senate provision. I think the motion of the Senator from West Virginia should be voted down, and that we should proceed to adopt the report.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky indulge me one more time that I may ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska, and then I assure the Senator I shall not trespass further on his time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Nebraska is one of the ablest lawyers who has been in this body for many years, and I regret very much to find myself at such wide variance with him in his interpretation of the language adopted by the conferees. But I should like to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, the effect of the action of the conferees does not repeal the penal clause that was carried in the House amendment.

Mr. BURKE. Unless the penal clause in the bill applied to the Russell-Overton amendment as it left the Senate—I would say the Senate penal provision written into the House amendment is certainly out now—and unless the general penal clause in the bill applied to the Russell-Overton amendment, it does not apply now, in my judgment. When we were considering the amendment, while I do not recall that the question was argued, I did not consider that the penal clause applied. I did not think it was necessary, and I do not think it is necessary now.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was seeking the opinion, not the views, of the Senator and asked the question in an effort to draw on his experience and great ability.

Mr. BURKE. Let me respond by asking the Senator from Georgia whether, when he and the Senator from Louisiana offered the Russell-Overton amendment, he considered that the general penal clause in the bill applied to the provisions of the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not, and I do not think they apply in the case of the conference committee's substitute.

Mr. BURKE. I think if the Senator's first proposition was correct, certainly it would be correct now, and if the Senator, in urging his amendment originally, did not think it necessary to have the penal clauses included, I do not see why he has changed his mind now and thinks we should delay this very necessary action, possibly until next week, in order to write in a penal clause which will never be necessary and have no place in the bill anyway.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will refer to the RECORD—if he did not do me the honor to listen to me when I presented the amendment—he will find that I stated it did not go so far as I should like it to go, but I thought it embraced as much territory as I thought I could get the Senate to cover at that time.

Mr. BURKE. Did the Senator have in mind then that he would like to include jail sentences, but did not do so because he thought the Senate would not agree to it?

Mr. RUSSELL. I did. I felt that the Senate was not prepared to take that step at that time, and I was delighted when the House went so far as to reenact the act of 1917.

Mr. BURKE. What has happened to make the Senator wish to do that now?

Mr. RUSSELL. The vote that was taken in the House.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator is sure there has not been a little political discussion outside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Senators are calling for a vote——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that both the Senate and the House, by a large vote, have declared their position that industrial recalcitrants shall not be in a better position than individual recalcitrants, under this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, and I voted for that principle.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the Senator did.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think there is anything in the conference report which violates that principle.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Nebraska, in his colloquy with the Senator from Georgia, was speaking a moment ago about the essential necessity of having the bill passed. Of course, it is necessary to have the bill passed. It ought to be passed without delay. But the bill as presented to us by the conference committee admits of no delay upon the part of the individual who is called upon to leave his business and enter the Army, whereas it clothes the industrial recalcitrant with all sorts of protection, so that he may delay his response when he refuses to act under clause No. 1, when he refuses to act under No. 2, or when he refuses to act under No. 3 of the clauses I have read.

Mr. BURKE. The only delay that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor. Senators will proceed in an orderly manner.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska once more, but I will not yield to any Senators who wish to make speeches now. They may make speeches in their own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair again requests Senators to proceed in an orderly manner. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Kentucky has already yielded to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he did not hear the Senator say he yielded.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did yield, however.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Wyoming says there would be greater delay in the case of the reluctant industry than in the case of the reluctant individual who might be selected under the draft.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is that not written in the provision?

Mr. BURKE. No.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me read the provision to the Senator. The Senator obviously has not read it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not yield further to a controversy between Senators.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may finish what I had started to say?

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator from Wyoming will permit me to finish my statement I should like to do so. He does not need to read the provision in question any more. He has already read it 6 times today, and it has been read at least 20 times by other Senators.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is exaggerating.

Mr. BURKE. I myself have read it and have studied it. The point I was making is—and that is all I wish to say about it—that the only delay in the case of the reluctant industry would be the time it would take the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War to sign his name to a certificate, he having already determined as to the necessity for action, and that the necessary conditions were present, before he would proceed. That delay would not be materially different than in the case of the reluctant trainee who did not want to go to camp.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator this one time, and this is the last.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It all boils down to this, in view of what the Senator from Nebraska has just said: We have before us a conference report which is not only open to the criticism that has been made of it by the Senator from Georgia and by the Senator from West Virginia and myself, but is obviously upon its face completely ungrammatical.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is one of the chief objections that was registered against the House amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Well, I have not observed that yet.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a sentence two pages long, whereas the conference report has tried to divide it into three subsections into which it naturally divides itself.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator from Kentucky be good enough to tell me how he would construe this provision? I read now from page 9——

Mr. BARKLEY. Proceed. I should like to follow the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Kentucky does not have his eyeglasses.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish the Senator would get a copy of the report. If the conferees of the Senate and the House are unable to write into a conscription law language which will meet the test of grammar, I do not know what they should be required to do. I read on page 9 of the report presented to the House by Representative MAY. Has the Senator obtained a copy of it?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have borrowed some eyeglasses.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At the top of page 9 the Senator will find three clauses defining the category of industrial manufacturers to whom this provision applies. It only applies to those who refuse to do three things which are very simple. It goes on—

Then in either such case—

That is in the case of any such refusal—

if the public necessity is immediate, and—

The use of the word "and" means that something different is being said—and the emergency in the public service is imperative and such as will not admit of a resort to any other source of supply, and if such circumstances—

That is to say the three which have just been mentioned—

if such circumstances are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy—

And now we come to the ungrammatical portion—and to require the exercise of the power hereby created in respect of the property to be taken over—

May I ask the Senator from Kentucky what that means—to require?

Is that part of the certificate? Is it one of the circumstances? How is it to be interpreted? What is the subject of the verb "to require"?

Mr. BARKLEY. I must get a better pair of glasses so I can read it. I have lost mine.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator should get another report, because that one is very hard to explain.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, a man can explain language which he himself reads better than he can explain language which someone else reads.

If any one of these three situations are created by the refusal of these concerns, either to give preference to the United States or——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the Senator will agree that the public necessity is immediate now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do. If it were not immediate we would not be passing this legislation, and we would not be authorizing the President to take the action proposed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. Then why did the conferees write this into the bill—that is the second phrase—

And the emergency in the public service is imperative.

Mr. BYRNES. Is the objection of the Senator to the inclusion of the word "to"?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; but the clause—

To require the exercise of the power hereby created in respect to the property to be taken over—is hung up in the air; it is attached to nothing; it means nothing. It has no interpretation except that it gives to an attorney who wants to prevent the acquisition of plants in the case of these three refusals the opportunity to make his plea in the courts.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The word "and" evidently is a misprint for "as." It should read—

As to require the exercise of the power hereby created.

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President would so interpret it.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no doubt about that. The word "and" ought to be "as." The context shows that to be correct. It should read—

And if such circumstances are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as to require the exercise of the power hereby created—

There is undoubtedly a misprint, and it is easily understood.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take any more time. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that the language liberalizes the power of the President. Under this language he is not required to go anywhere else in the United States, or outside the United States, to obtain a supply if he needs a supply in a particular part of the United States; and under those conditions he may take over plants. I do not see how it would be possible for the conferees to rewrite the provision so as to guarantee to liberalize and broaden the authority of the President to any greater extent than is done by this language. There is danger that recommitting the bill to conference might open up other difficulties which might be more bothersome and troublesome than is this particular language. The difficulty seems to revolve around the word "resort."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Evidently it was intended that the certificate should provide that "if such circumstances are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as to require the exercise of the power," it may be exercised.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. Instead of that, the language reads:

And if such circumstances are certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy and to require the exercise of the power hereby created—

It does not make sense.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not make sense.

Mr. BYRNES. The words should have been:

Certified to by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as to require the exercise of the power hereby created.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt that in the original copy from which the print was made the word is "as."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not the Senator aware that in passing upon the language a court would read the whole context of the paragraph, and would readily conclude that what was meant was that if circumstances are such as to require the exercise of the power it may be exercised?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely. A court would interpret the language in the light of the entire section. Certainly a court would not render its decision on the word "and."

Mr. CONNALLY. A court must read the whole paragraph and interpret the intent of Congress. A court would not segregate one word in a sentence and exclude all the rest of the section. It is perfectly clear that what was intended is what has been stated.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I was about to say that I do not intend to yield to anybody.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield to me before he begins?

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot yield before I begin. [Laughter.]

From my observation of what has been going on in the Senate in the past hour or two I realize that if I should begin to yield I should be here until midnight. I heard the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], with the best intentions in this world, announce that he had only a few words to say. That was about an hour ago. The more he debated the more other Senators wanted to debate. I am anxious, as I know other Senators are, to conclude the consideration of the conference report.

It is with considerable embarrassment that I undertake to say anything on this motion, because as Senators all know, I opposed, as strongly as I could, the passage of the conscription bill. I am opposed to it now more than ever. I am opposed to the conference report. I am opposed to anything in the way of a conference report which carries out the idea of conscription in time of peace.

However, I hope the Senate will realize that, while I rise to speak on the motion and while I am opposed to the legislation, nevertheless I still want to do anything I can to make the legislation workable, and to get as good a bill as possible.

Mr. President, we have had a yea-and-nay vote in the Senate, and there has been a vote in the House by roll call. By almost a unanimous vote in each branch of Congress we have gone on record in favor of applying the same rule of conscription to property as is applied to human life. I think we are practically all in favor of that principle, as our votes show. We are in favor of that kind of legislation.

The House bill contained section 12, which I believe goes further in carrying out the idea than did the Senate provision. The author of the Senate amendment agrees with that principle. He wanted the conferees to accept it; and I think those who are in favor of drafting property as well as human life should be willing to accept it.

Mr. President, I hope that what I shall say will not be discounted. Having announced that I intend to vote against the conference report, whatever it may be, I shall try to improve it if I can, and shall vote with those who are trying to improve it.

In the first place, I think the conferees went far beyond their jurisdiction. Laying that aside, the conference report does not go so far in the conscription of property as it does in the conscription and drafting of human beings. If we are to have a bill to force our boys into the Army in time of peace, and put our country in that dilemma, I should like to see property drafted as well as men. Because the conference report does not do that, because the conference report does not go nearly so far as does the House amendment in section 12, I am in favor of the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

As I see it—and I hold nothing against any Senator who does not see the matter as I do—and as I conceive my duty at this time, it comes to me in this way: "Do you want to draft property as well as human beings? If you do, you ought to vote for the motion of the Senator from West Virginia."

Believing as I do, that that is the question now before the Senate, I am in favor of the motion. It does not mean delay—at least not to exceed a day. If we wished to stay in session tonight, we could get through with it tonight. I have seen similar things happen in the Senate, when Congress was about to adjourn. We have stayed in session and have rejected conference reports, and they have come back in 10 minutes, rectifying mistakes which the Senate thought were made in the conference reports. There is no difficulty about changing the conference report, and accepting, instead of rejecting, a certain clause.

While it is often said that we cannot control the House, we are willing to assume and believe that the House is composed of honorable men, such as we ourselves claim to be. They have passed a bill incorporating section 12; and we simply say, "We agree to what you have done by this action."

That is all there is to it. There is nothing else to it. There cannot be any trouble on the part of the House. We are simpy instructing our conferees to accept a provision which the House has already passed.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if we believe we want to draft property in the same way we draft human life, there is but one thing to do, and that is to vote for the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I shall occupy only a moment or two.

I have followed these amendments back to the Appropriations Committee. The Overton-Russell amendment was submitted substantially because of the agreement that the existing law which permitted the Navy Department to take property, and to allow the Secretary of the Navy to fix the compensation, was an unconstitutional provision; so it was suggested by the authors of this provision that they would put the matter upon the basis of condemnation, so that there would be due process of law. Then the matter was passed by the Senate in that form.

I heard this evening with great distress that if any of us should vote for the conference report we should be voting for dollars as against life. I wanted to ask some of the lawyers in this body whether or not they will really accomplish what they wish by adopting the House provisions. The Constitution still remains. The Constitution still provides that property shall not be taken without due process of law and just compensation. The House provision which this amendment would adopt has within it simply the bald declaration that the President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department, to place orders, not tied to wartime, not tied to times of emergency, not tied to times of stress; and then it provides that the orders must be filled at prices to be fixed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. In other words, without due process of law it is proposed to order the manufacturer to turn over his property, to fix his price, and then to declare him to be a felon, subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. I desire to ask the Senator if the Constitution does not also provide in the thirteenth amendment that involuntary servitude shall not exist in the United States; if it does not also provide that there shall be freedom of speech and freedom in other ways; and also if, when we take a soldier under the provisions of this act, we do not temporarily suspend a number of liberties which are guaranteed to him under the Constitution.

We deprive him of the right of contract. He has nothing to say about how much he is to receive or where he is to go. We deprive him of liberty of locomotion by putting him in a camp. We deprive him of the right of free press by censoring his letters. We deprive him of freedom of speech. By limiting him to a camp we deprive him of liberty; and if war comes, if he is sent to war, he is deprived of life itself. Then how can the Senator say that the Constitution would prevent us from enacting the part of this amendment that applies to property, and not prevent us from enacting the part that applies to the conscription of men?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say that the Senator knows that in the discussion I supported the Russell-Overton amendment because I believed that since we are conscripting men we should go as far as was necessary to do the same thing to industry; and I supported the amendment upon that basis. I ask the Senator, however—good lawyer that he is, student of history and of constitutional history—whether he thinks the Congress of the United States may pass in peacetime a section of an act by which the President may suppress free speech, by which he may suppress the press, by which he may deny jury trials, by which he may deny the right of indictment, by which he may disregard all the provisions of the Bill of Rights. Mind you, there is no provision in the act I am talking about limiting his power to wartime, or to time of emergency.

Mr. LEE. The Senator a while ago questioned the power of the Government under this act to take property without due process of law and just compensation.

Mr. ADAMS. And, of course, the Senator from Oklahoma does not believe that that provision of the Constitution applies any more.

Mr. LEE. Let me read this language:

> If necessary, property can be taken for public use without any compensation. For example, if a building stands in the path of a fire, and it is believed that the destruction of the building may stop the fire, the building may be destroyed by public authority without any compensation.

That is from the case of Bowditch v. Boston (101 U. S. 16).

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator mean to say that if the Government decides it wants the building, it may take the building and pay nothing for it and not resort to due process of law? The cases cited by the Senator have nothing to do with this question. Of course property may be taken in order to stop the spread of fire or to stop the spread of epidemic.

Mr. LEE. Is not the passage of this bill predicated on an impending emergency?

Mr. ADAMS. The idea I am unsuccessfully trying to convey to the Senator is that the section of the House bill makes no such provision. All I am saying is that I am afraid that if we adopt the provision of the House bill we shall open it to the very attack from lawyers that has been challenged here. We are told that if we adopt the conference report it will be attacked. I say that I am fearful that if we take the House provision as it is, we shall open the way to a challenge of the very thing that we want; and I am wondering, if we adopt the House language, if we shall not defeat our very purpose.

I want to go just as far as the Senator from Oklahoma wants to go in providing that the material resources of the country shall go along with the boys. If I wanted to defeat that purpose I should want to keep the House language in the law. That language will go a long way to defeat the very purpose we have in mind.

Mr. LEE. I do not believe the Court has ever passed on the question of the power of the Government to conscript men in time of peace; but they did pass on it in time of war, on the basis that the public welfare demanded it.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator and I are not debating that question. I mean to say, there may be a question as to that. The courts have upheld the right to draft in time of war and in time of national emergency. That is as far as the courts have gone. That question went to the Supreme Court of the United States twice, and the limitation was of that kind. The Senator is quite right in saying that there is no adjudication of the right of the Federal Government to take boys into the Army in time of quietude and peace; but we are assuming that the draft is rightful, that the basis of this argument is there. I say that we ought to put in the same emergency provision to justify what we are doing, rather than to leave it out; and I say to the Senator that when we provide that the compensation to be paid under the House amendment shall be as fixed by the Secretary of War, we are jeopardizing the validity of the provision.

I am not objecting to the purpose. I am in accord with the purpose. I am merely saying to those of us who are urging one as against the other that perhaps they are jeopardizing the validity of the enactment.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado made the same argument so persuasively in the Committee on Appropriations that it was a notable contribution to the condemnation feature which was specifically written into the so-called Russell-Overton amendment. However, at that time I had not had an opportunity to examine all the decisions of the Supreme Court on this question.

In time of peace, in 1916, the Congress enacted a law which is practically identical in its phraseology with the amendment adopted by the House. As a matter of fact, the House amendment was lifted bodily from the act of 1916, even as to the penal section, with the exception that the House amendment struck out "in time of war, or when war is imminent."

In construing that act, which contains some phraseology which the Senator from Colorado says endangers the constitutionality of the House provision, the Supreme Court held in a number of cases that that was the exercise of the power of eminent domain by the Federal Government, as to use of the plant or as to the order of the specific commodity that was ordered, and that the act was valid, but did not shut off the person against whom the Government moved from suing for any value which might not have been included in that fixed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

That did not depend on the war powers. I apprehend the Senator was about to argue that that depended on the war powers, but it depended on the construction of the law of eminent domain and not on the war powers. I think that is very clear from the decisions of some of the courts, the Supreme Court and circuit courts of appeal. I do not think there is any question about the constitutionality of the House provision.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not concerned as between the two provisions. I want the one adopted which is the most effective to accomplish the purpose we have in mind. I am merely suggesting that I am apprehensive that the House provision opens the way for an attack upon constitutional grounds, which the provision in the conference report perhaps does not. I have no particular concern with it. I happen to be one of those who voted against the draft. I happen to be one of those who do not think that present conditions justify the draft. I am merely saying that the Congress having decided in favor of the draft, I want an effective provision to insure that the necessary equipment, the necessary machinery, the necessary munitions and ordnance, shall be provided.

In the conference report there is an item which I think is of more consequence than the one now in question, which has been entirely overlooked. An amendment was put into the bill in the Senate imposing a 12-percent limit on the profits which manufacturers of ordnance and munitions should be permitted to receive, and the conference report takes that out, and leaves the producers of ordnance utterly unlimited. Senators are greatly disturbed over provisions which probably never will have to be invoked. I do not imagine there is a man or factory or plant in the United States which will not comply with any request the War Department may make. We have said to all of them, "Go ahead. We are going to limit you to 12 percent." Some of them said, "We must have at least 12 percent." We are taking off the limit of 12 percent which the Senate imposed, leaving them foot-loose, and at the same time making a great to do here about conscripting capital and making capital respond. Yet, it is desired that we take off the restrictions on the profits which capital may make. The only answer made is that in an excess-profits tax bill somehow we are going to get it back. How much? Not to exceed, at the outside, 50 percent of the excess profits.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as the excess-profits tax bill, which is now under consideration, temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the conference report, is concerned, I think the Senator from Colorado is already well advised that it does not provide a bona fide excess-profits tax at all. It is estimated by the Treasury officially that the excess-profits feature of that bill will raise only $115,000,000, and $115,000,000 at a time when we are spending $15,000,000,000 a year is so small a proportion that it is not worth even considering. Yet we are swallowing such provisions as the one to which the Senator has referred, in the conference report, and the one in the tax bill, taking off every restriction on profits, on the theory that we are going to compensate the Government for them by $115,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; we are saying that the Government can force the factories to produce the goods, and we are for it, but we are also saying they may produce the goods at a profit which may be unlimited, being unwilling to put a 12-percent limit on the manufacturer of guns.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as the bill which is now pending before the Senate is concerned, that is, the Senate version of the tax bill, I can say to the Senator from Colorado after 3 weeks of hearings and meetings of the Finance Committee that there is not one single line in the tax bill—embodying, as it does, the authorization to these companies to amortize at the rate of 20 percent a year—there is not a line in the Senate bill, because it has stricken out the provisions of the House bill, to protect any interest of the Government and of the purchasing public whatever.

Mr. ADAMS. If we remove the limit on profit even though the Treasury should get some of it back, which may be doubtful, it would increase the cost hundreds of millions of dollars.

As I have said, I am merely pointing out, so far as the immediate controversy over the report is concerned, what I think is a cautionary suggestion. I think the conference committee report is preferable to the original amendment, for which I voted, and I think the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Louisiana are inclined to the same view.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, with all the limitations and restrictions around any contract the Government might undertake to make, and all the conditions present——

Mr. ADAMS. I do not desire to misrepresent the position of the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. In my opinion, we would be better off if the Senate had receded from its amendment and if the House had receded from its amendment than to adopt the conference report provision, which takes away the vitality of the act of 1916, which is now on the statute books but which is modified by the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. If the distinguished Senators who have studied the legal phases of this matter are willing to certify to the constitutionality of the provisions of the House bill, of course, as a country lawyer, I am willing to acquiesce.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has raised what I conceive to be a very serious question with respect to the action of the conferees in eliminating the provision of the Senate bill which placed a limit upon the profits to be made by the manufacturer of ordnance. Those of us who do not have the advantage of being on either committee, of course, are not thoroughly familiar with all the provisions of either of the bills, and the explanation for this long debate has been that we are trying to find out what is in the bill.

I think that the question raised by the Senator should be discussed at length, but that, of course, is not the point upon which he attacked the motion which is now pending, the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not attacking it; I am merely asking the Senators from Wyoming and Georgia and other States their judgment as to the question of constitutionality, so that I may be guided by the light they may shed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would feel complimented if I thought I could shed any light for the Senator from Colorado. I have known him too long and too well to be under any illusion about that. The Senator knows what is going on all the time, and I bask in his light and do not attempt to shed any for him.

I raised this question: In criticizing the House provision the Senator said that it authorized the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to fix the prices.

Mr. ADAMS. It says the prices shall be fair and just. That is the point the Senator is coming to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I knew I could not throw any light upon the Senator. The language is——

Mr. ADAMS. The point I have in mind is that they are being forced to give the order——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At a reasonable price.

Mr. ADAMS. Without due process of law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask does the Senator believe that the power and authority granted by the House provision is strictly limited to the fixing of reasonable prices? If the Senator believes that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy should not fix a reasonable price, does the Senator not believe that the courts would be open to the individual who may complain?

Mr. ADAMS. To reach that conclusion, I would have to say that the law was not valid to a certain extent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Ah, Mr. President, the great mistake which has been made in the analysis of this bill or this provision is that many of the Senators who attack it do so upon the basis of thinking that it applies to all manufacturers, that it applies to all industries. It does not; it applies only to those who by a positive refusal have placed themselves in a certain category. The attack which has been made upon the House amendment prompts me to ask the Members of the Senate to indulge me while I read the provisions of the amendment. I have found that it is very helpful in any argument, if we are trying to determine what the facts are, to read the provisions of the proposed law or contract by which we are to fix our judgment. Now let us read the provisions of the House amendment which by the motion of the Senator from West Virginia we would write into the bill.

Mr. President, there are a great many Members of the Senate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order and the occupants of the galleries will please maintain order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wish to say that the galleries are not at fault. The only conversation which is going on here is that which is being indulged in by Members of the Senate and by the guests of the Senate who are now on the floor. This is really an important bill; those of us who are trying to present some points of view upon it, I think, are entitled to the undivided attention of the Members of the Senate, and I believe that the guests of the Senate should refrain from interrupting the proceedings.

Section 12 of the House bill reads as follows:

SEC. 12. The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required, and which is of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

It is obvious that those who drafted the House provision in using this language were taking care to provide that no great burden should be imposed upon any industry. The provision continues:

Compliance with all such orders for products or material shall be obligatory on any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof—

Observe how the drafters of the House amendment referred over and over again to the responsible head or heads of the artificial units which carry on the manufacturing industry in America. That is a provision which was eliminated by the conference committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Senator to permit me to read it to the conclusion.

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I continue reading from the House amendment—and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition—

Observe it is limited to those plants which are equipped for the manufacture—of what? Of arms and ammunition, the arms and ammunition which the boys we are proposing to draft will have to carry and use—or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads therof owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment—

Now comes the important language—

who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment, at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, then, and in either such case, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement—

Observe, "in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement"— is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

Obviously this whole provision is directed to those who refuse to perform a reasonable act in defense of the democracy of the United States. Why, then, were the conferees so interested in drawing about firms and corporations, associations, and individuals who refuse their cooperation the protection which is to be found in the complicated, complex, and ungrammatical language contained in the conference report?

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator let me throw a little added protection about it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will throw some light on it, I will yield to him.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Georgia has submitted to me the case of the United States against McFarland, a case reported in Fifteenth Federal, second series, page 823, having to do with the 1916 act which has been referred to. In that case the court says:

> The President was given certain powers to fix prices of various commodities, of which it does not appear that in the spring of 1918 wool was one. Whether this could be constitutionally done we need not now stop to inquire. The Supreme Court has expressly reserved the question whether Congress may lawfully authorize the President, even in wartime, to fix conclusively the maximum prices at which one individual may sell to another. * * * It would, however, now seem clear that none of the statutes empowering the President or other executive agencies to fix prices authorized him or them finally to say what anyone must take for any property of his wanted by the Government for its own use. * * * The constitutional requirement that the Government must pay just compensation for what it takes is one which war does not suspend. * * * In the absence of agreement between the owner and the Government, what is just compensation is a judicial question, to be decided by the courts, and not by the Executive.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will yield in a moment. I know the Senator has the cases before him, but I think the language of the House amendment is rather apropos, in view of what the Senator from Colorado has just said. It proceeds:

> The compensation to be paid to any individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for its products or material, or as rental for use of any manufacturing firm while used by the United States, shall be fair and just: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in such plant.

Obviously this entire provision is pointed only at those who shall refuse to give preference to the United States, who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quality, and quantity of arms, ammunition, or the parts thereof, as may be necessary, or who shall refuse to furnish arms or munitions or parts of munitions.

Mr. President, it seems to me that in these circumstances there can be no basis for any resistance to the provisions contained in the House amendment; nor can I see any basis whatsoever for the action of the conferees in weakening and modifying that proposal, and seeking to make it easier for those who would refuse to cooperate in furnishing supplies that are necessary for the men whom we compel to go into the Army.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the question presented by the motion of the Senator from West Virginia is an exceedingly simple one which has been passed upon by both the Senate and the House of Representatives heretofore. It is the question whether industry should be to some small degree conscripted in the same way as are the blood and brawn of the young men of America. That question was resolved in the Senate by a vote of 69 to 16, and in the House of Representatives by a vote of 330 to 83. The only dissenting voice of any importance that I heard of in the United States to the action of the Senate and the House when the bill was under consideration in the two bodies of the Congress, was that of Mr. Wendell Willkie, and apparently the conferees have gone out of their way to reconcile the differences between the two distinguished Republican members of the conference committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] with their Presidential nominee. I believe that two such exceedingly decisive votes as 69 to 16 in the Senate, and 330 to 83 in the House, should not be overridden by the action of a few conferees.

Mr. President, any Senator could speak for hours, giving examples, but the reason for the Russell-Overton amendment may be very simply illustrated. Everyone knows that there were a great many war millionaires as the result of the last war. Everyone knows that the President of the United States has publicly proclaimed and addressed the American people saying that he was opposed to the creation of war millionaires out of this war. But, Mr. President, we are about to pass a tax bill which does not contain any restriction whatever; which grants to the corporations engaged in munitions manufacturing, amortization advantages which will enable them to have, at the end of a period of 5 years, a brand-new plant, geared up to efficiency by 5 years' practice, without it having cost them a cent.

The Senator from Colorado has very pertinently pointed out that the conference report also relieves the munitions manufacturers of any limitation whatever on profits—that is, the 12-percent limitation which has hitherto been imposed by law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. To complete the record, this bill to conscript the youth of the country repeals a law which has been on the statute books since 1934, putting a limit on the profits of munitions makers, and in addition we have passed a law doing away with competitive bidding, and awarding contracts at any figure the munitions makers may name, which is agreed to by the Army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts, who has had much experience in this matter. I repeat that when all those circumstances are put together—the amortization under the pending tax bill, the repeal of the Vinson-Trammell Act, the repeal, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, of any requirement whatever for competitive bidding, and then free munitions manufacturers, as in my opinion the conference report does, of any compulsory power on the part of the Government, to my mind it seems to leave the Government and likewise the public in an entirely helpless position.

My position is exactly that which was so eloquently and ably expressed by the Senator from Nebraska. I am opposed to the whole principle of a conscription act in time of peace. I intend to vote against the conference report, no matter what is in it, but I insist, Mr. President, that if we are going to conscript the young men of the country, and not give them any option whatever as to whether they shall be called to the colors, we ought to do something so far as we can equivalent to that process with respect to the industry of the country.

Mr. President, I have mentioned before on the floor the matter to which I am about to refer, and I will mention it again simply by way of illustration. In the last war—and I am referring to records of a Senate investigating committee—there happened to be one corporation in the United States, the Du Pont Powder Corporation, which knew better than anyone else how to manufacture powder. It had had years of experience in that work. It had, as a matter of fact, been supported for years by Government contracts. As a matter of fact, it owed its existence to the Government contracts which it had received.

But when the United States entered the war, in spite of the fact that that corporation had already made enough out of the war by supplying powder and munitions of various sorts to France and Great Britain to buy the control of the General Motors Co., one of the leading corporations in the United States, when the United States Government asked the company for the use of its services in constructing a Government powder plant, the company haggled with the Government for 7 or 8 months, during a time of great crisis during the war, during part of which time it seemed as though the Germans might break through. When American troops were in France and needed the ammunition to be supplied, the company haggled as to the compensation which the executives of the company were to receive, the bonuses which the executives of the company were to receive, and the bonuses which the laborers of the company should receive. If Congress should adopt the policy of drafting men, I do not think such instances as that should again be permitted to occur.

I cite another instance, Mr. President. Representatives of the Bethlehem Steel Co. appeared before the munitions committee. Mr. Eugene G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., after testifying at some length as to the tremendous profits made by the Bethlehem Steel Co. during the last war, was asked by my friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] whether or not he favored the payment of a bonus to the veterans of that war. Mr. Grace replied with great feeling that he thought that even the suggestion of the payment of a bonus to men who had been drafted only to do their duty was a reflection on anybody who advocated it and a repudiation of the fundamental principles of the Republic. Then I asked Mr. Grace, "How much of a bonus did you receive for making steel at a very safe place at Bethlehem, Pa., during the 2 years the United States was engaged in the war, in comparison with the men who went through barbed-wire entanglements, faced mustard gas, artillery fire, and everything else?"

Mr. Grace said he could not tell me at the moment how much he had received. He could not even remember. It was such a large figure that it had slipped his mind; but he said he would furnish me a statement. When he said that, I asked him to furnish me at the same time a statement with respect to the other important members of the Bethlehem Steel Co. This is what I found:

For the year 1917, in addition to a princely salary for the safe job of making steel at Bethlehem, Pa., Mr. Eugene Grace received a bonus of $1,501,532.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. How many years did that cover?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That covered the year 1917.

Mr. WALSH. Only 1 year?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One year. I shall read the figures for 1918 in a moment.

Mr. B. H. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Bethlehem Steel Co., in addition to receiving a princely salary for the safe business of making steel at Bethlehem, Pa., received a bonus of $250,255.

Mr. F. A. Shick, comptroller, received a bonus of $200,205.

Mr. H. S. Snyder, vice president, received a bonus of $350,357.

In addition, certain other bonuses were paid that year. Mr. W. M. Tobias, purchasing agent, received a bonus. Mind you, he was only purchasing supplies to be sold to the Government at a tremendous profit. The supplies were being sold to the Government at prices which made possible the payment of these tremendous bonuses. Mr. W. M. Tobias, purchasing agent, received a bonus of $150,153. Mr. J. W. Powell, vice president, received a bonus of $70,798. Mr. S. W. Wakeman, general manager of a subsidiary, received a bonus of $4,279. Mr. H. G. Smith, manager of one of the subsidiary corporations, received a bonus of $18,492. Mr. H. Brown, technical manager, received a bonus of $15,028.

The Senator has asked me what period that covered. I shall give the figures for the next year, 1918. I asked only for the figures for the 2 years the United States was engaged in the war, at a time when men who had been drafted were crawling through rusty barbed wire, facing mustard gas, artillery fire, mortars, Flammenwerfers, and everything else, at $1.25 a day.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that the exposures which the Senator's committee made, indicating the excessive profits and the large bonuses paid during the World War, led to the enactment of the act of 1934, which we are repealing tonight?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think there is any doubt whatever on that subject. The thing I am now protesting against is that not only are we wiping out every protection of the Government of the United States which has been put into the law since the last war, but by the adoption of the conference report, unless the motion to recommit shall be agreed to, we shall be wiping out any possibility of the Government of the United States protecting itself by taking over property.

A moment ago the Senator from Massachusetts asked me how long a period I was covering. In the last figures I gave I was covering only the calendar year 1917. I shall now read the figures for 1918, from Mr. Grace's own testimony.

Mr. Eugene G. Grace, president, received a bonus of $1,386,193, making a total during the 2 years that the United States was engaged in war of $2,887,725. This was the man who asserted to a Senate committee that men who were drafted were doing no more than their duty when they went through the barbed wire or under a barrage to an attack. He said that they were doing no more than their duty; and that it was a disgrace for them, or for anybody in their behalf, to ask for the payment of a bonus.

Mr. H. S. Snyder, vice president, received a bonus of $323,445 in 1918. Mr. B. H. Jones, secretary-treasurer, received a bonus of $231,032.

F. A. Shick, comptroller, $184,826.

R. E. McMath, assistant secretary—here was a man who was only assistant secretary of the Bethlehem Steel Co. I do not know anything about the man, but he was probably young enough to have been a good soldier. He was only an assistant secretary; but R. E. McMath, assistant secretary, got a bonus of $6,187.

E. B. Hill, treasurer, got a bonus of $46,206.

H. E. Lewis, vice president, got a bonus of $323,445.

J. M. Larkin, assistant to the president, got a bonus of $9,113.

J. W. Powell, vice president, got a bonus of $323,445.

A. Foster, assistant secretary and treasurer, got a bonus of $36,714.

S. W. Wakeman, general manager, got a bonus of $49,142.

H. G. Smith, manager—he has been mentioned before, but here he comes again—got a bonus of $112,628.

This is all in 1 year, mind you.

H. Brown, technical manager, got a bonus of $112,628.

A. W. Christian, manager of materials, got a bonus of $7,884.

H. P. Phelps, standardization of plants—mind you, these are all bonuses in addition to very liberal salaries—got a bonus of $11,263.

R. Warriner, chief engineer, got a bonus of $28,157.

H. P. Frear, naval architect, got a bonus of $28,157.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. That is the same company which has a case pending before the Supreme Court which is to be heard next month, and the same company which is trying to collect 27 percent on its contracts during the World War, and the same company which said—let me read the words of the judge:

> We will take the contract with this promise of bonus profits incorporated in it but not otherwise. You take it or leave it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, that is the same company; and it is in the same class with another company which I read about within the past month or 6 weeks, the United States Steel Corporation, when I read that the chairman of the board had said that if the Government did not permit them to amortize, not only for tax purposes but through the sales price——

Mr. LEE. It was Mr. Olds who said that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To amortize in 3 years, the United States Steel Corporation would refuse to make armor plate for the Government.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I do not intend to vote for this conference report anyway, because I am essentially, fundamentally, and irrevocably opposed to the principle of conscription in time of peace. I am particularly opposed to it at a time when the President of the United States is arrogating to himself, without submission to Congress, the power to give away a seventh of the United States Navy, and when it is being projected in the newspapers, as it was before the destroyer deal, that we shall send the few tanks we have to be used by foreign powers, and that the United States shall give up the tremendous airships known as flying fortresses. But, Mr. President, irrespective of that, I think this question is an extremely essential one, irrespective of the decision of any Senator on the ultimate question of whether conscription in time of peace shall be adopted in the United States, because I think that to adopt the principle of conscripting boys, the blood and brawn of the United States, without at the same time making industry assume some obligation to the Government of the United States is little short of treason.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I shall not long detain the Senate; but, because I am one of the few who resisted the so-called Russell-Overton amendment when this subject was earlier under discussion in the Senate, I should like to make the RECORD, and my own position, clear.

I should like to associate myself with the latest stand so ably taken by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. It seemed to me that the Russell-Overton amendment, which it now is admitted was hastily drawn, went so very far that it was a horrible mistake to adopt it. It seemed to me that under the so-called Russell-Overton amendment the language very clearly provided that any facility, including the press of the country and the radio of the country, might be taken over by either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Does the Senator realize that the President today has authority to take over every radio station in the United States?

Mr. MALONEY. I do recognize that fact.

Mr. OVERTON. Has the Senator read the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia and myself in connection with the provisions of the act which it amends? If so, I am quite sure he is bound to arrive at the conclusion that it refers only to manufacturers and facilities engaged in the production of war matériel.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to remind the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, very able lawyer that he is, that the language of his amendment read "manufacturing plant or facility," and not "manufacturing plant and facility." The matter was very definitely discussed at that time in the Senate; and, as I recall, at least one Senator made it clear that so far as he was concerned he believed, and I do not recall that it was challenged by any one, that it included the radio and the press. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I do not want to attribute that statement to the sponsors of the amendment, but I seem to recall that that language was used at the time the amendment was under discussion.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

Mr. MALONEY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood a Senator to state that that power should exist, but I did not hear any Senator assert on the floor that that power was contained in the amendment. If it had been so stated, I should have immediately stated my view that no such power could conceivably have been conferred by the amendment. The statement was made that that power should exist.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

I disagree with the interpretation of the Senator from Georgia on his own amendment. I should like to read it. It provides:

> Whenever the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy determines that any existing manufacturing plant or facility is necessary for the national defense and is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of such plant or facility for its use or operation by the War Department or the Navy Department—

And so forth. I quite understand that it was never the intention of the sponsors of this amendment to include the radio and the press. I know them well enough to know that they would resist such a confiscatory attempt so long as they were able to resist it; but it seems to me that interpretation was placed upon the language, and it further seems to me, so far as the language itself is concerned, that it might, by not too great a stretch of the imagination, include the press and the radio.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President——

Mr. MALONEY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Of course the Senator is referring to a statement which I made. I desire to say that I never had any intention of being a party to passing legislation to give the President peacetime power to take over the press. I did not make any statement of that kind. The Senator from Georgia said that the power should exist. He is correct with one addition—in wartime.

In that regard I wish to read from the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States against Macintosh, in which the Court said:

> From its very nature the war power, when necessity calls for its exercise, tolerates no qualifications or limitations, unless found in the Constitution or its applicable principles of international law. In the words of John Quincy Adams, "This power is tremendous; it is strictly constitutional; but it breaks down every barrier so anxiously erected for the protection of liberty, property, and of life."
> To the end that war may not result in defeat, freedom of speech may, by act of Congress, be curtailed or denied so that the morale of the people and the spirit of the Army may not be broken by seditious utterances; freedom of the press curtailed to preserve our military plans and movements from the knowledge of the enemy; deserters and spies put to death without indictment or trial by jury; ships and supplies requisitioned; property of alien enemies, theretofore under the protection of the Constitution, seized without process and converted to the public use without compensation and without due process of law in the ordinary sense of that term; prices of food and other necessities of life fixed or regulated; railways taken over and operated by the Government; and other drastic powers, wholly inadmissible in time of peace, exercised to meet the emergencies of war.

I believe every Senator means to be fair. I repeated each time the matter was referred to that my statement applied only in case the United States were actually in war. I said that power should exist. It does exist. My saying it would not change it. Congress could not change it. It has existed since the time of Adams.

Let me make a further statement: It is because I want to preserve freedom of the press and freedom of speech and all other liberties which we enjoy in this country that I am doing everything I can to promote a preparedness program to prevent us from every having to live in a Nazi-dominated world.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am very certain that is the noble purpose and intent of the Senator from Oklahoma; and while I have no desire to criticize him or anything he has said, I should like to remark that it seems to me that if he would go about it in that way he would take a very strange and uncertain road.

Mr. President, I wish to express myself in agreement with the statements of those here who have expressed the belief that the conferees have gone too far and have exceeded their power. I am completely in accord with the language adopted by the House, for the reason that it would treat a recalcitrant industrial plant exactly as it would treat young men under the law.

We were not confronted with that issue under the Russell-Overton amendment. That amendment meant a conscription of such plants for all time, and under such a procedure it seemed to me conscription of labor was inevitable. But the House, having the benefit of the study and experience of the conscientious sponsors of the Senate amendment, and greater time for thought, prepared a much better and a fair amendment, and because it is completely within the Constitution, because it was certainly the overwhelming desire of the Senate that some such language should be in the bill, and because it was the desire of the House, I hope that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suppose the action just taken automatically brings the tax bill back before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the La Follette amendment to the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. BARKLEY. The request is that during the further consideration of the La Follette amendment no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 10413, the revenue bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table. The purpose of the amendment is to provide for the drafting of capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRINCIPLES GOVERNING NATIONAL DEFENSE ADVISORY COMMISSION IN THE LETTING OF DEFENSE CONTRACTS—LABOR POLICY (H. DOC. NO. 950)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

To the Congress of the United States:

The National Defense Advisory Commission on September 6, 1940, unanimously agreed to and adopted general principles governing the letting of national-defense contracts. On August 31 the Commission also unanimously adopted a statement of labor requirements as a guide for contractors who have received national-defense orders from the United States Government.

I consider these two documents to be of such importance as to justify my sending them to the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives as a matter of information. The values of these policies and principles to the Government, to industry, agriculture, labor, and to the country, sectionally and as a whole, will be seen at once.

The general principles governing the letting of defense contracts follow:

The essence of the preparedness program is the getting of an adequate supply of materials of the proper quality in the shortest space of time possible. Considerations of price alone are highly important, but in the emergency are not governing.

1. Speed of delivery of all items on the defense program is essential. This means:

(a) That orders should be placed in such a manner as to insure the most efficient use of each particular facility from the point of view of the program as a whole;

(b) That proper consideration should be given to contributory industries, such as the machine-tool industry, to avoid creating underlying bottlenecks;

(c) That once delivery dates are fixed, assurance be given that they will be met by the supplier.

2. Proper quality is also of prime importance. It is therefore necessary to determine, first of all, whether or not the supplier can meet the quality requirements as specified. There should be a willingness on the part of both the Army and the Navy, on the one hand, and of the supplier, on the other, to adjust specifications on a cooperative basis in order that such specifications may come as near as possible to meeting commercial standards while at the same time fulfilling the military requirements.

3. Price, while not the sole consideration, is of outstanding significance, and every effort must be made to secure a fair price. This must take recognition, among other things, of determination of proper cost factors.

4. The impact of the defense program upon the consumers must be recognized. This relates to such factors as—

(a) Due regard to the necessity of protecting civilian needs and morale;

(b) Proper health and housing conditions among employees;

(c) Consideration to possible off-season production in order to dovetail the military program into production for civilian requirements. Off-season production should also lead to lower overhead and consequently to lower prices for both the consumers and the Government.

5. Adequate consideration must be given to labor. This means compliance with the principles on this subject stated by the Commission in its release of August 31, copy of which is attached hereto.

6. Undue geographic concentration of orders should be avoided, both as to procurement districts and as to industrial sections within any such procurement district. Reasons for such decentralization relate to factors of military strategy, as well as avoiding congestion that will slow down production.

7. Financial responsibility of the supplier should be examined. Ability to post a bond does not necessarily dispose of this problem. The probability should exist that the supplier will be able to continue in business, at least long enough to complete his contract satisfactorily. Further, an ability to finance himself through private sources should take preference over necessity for securing Government aid.

8. The avoidance of congestion of transportation facilities should be sought. The same applies to warehousing facilities.

9. Due consideration should be given to the adequacy of power facilities, particularly where furnished by public utilities.

10. A general preference should be given to firms having experience with so-called educational orders.

11. The moral responsibility of the supplier is important, and in some respects fundamental. There should be evidence of honest and sincere desire to cooperate with the Army and Navy in producing what is called for, and on time, without profiteering; to assume some risks himself rather than attempting to shift all such risks to the Government; and to furnish a correct statement as to his capacity and his experience. The supplier's general standing and reputation among reputable businessmen (as distinct from his financial rating) is one index of such qualifications.

12. The Commission recognizes that competitive bidding is the better procedure in certain types of industry and circumstances. However, it is often impossible to make sure that the principles outlined above are followed when contracts are placed on the basis of price alone and are let to the lowest bidder. Therefore, in cases where competitive bidding will not fulfill the above-stated needs of national defense, the Commission recommends that the use of the negotiated contract be authorized where necessary in order that these objectives be obtained in making defense purchases.

Following is the statement of labor policy adopted by the National Defense Advisory Commission:

Primary among the objectives of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense is the increase in production of materials required by our armed forces and the assurance of adequate future supply of such materials with the least possible disturbance to production of supplies for the civilian population. The scope of our present program entails bringing into production many of our unused resources of agriculture, manufacturing, and manpower.

This program can be used in the public interest as a vehicle to reduce unemployment and otherwise strengthen the human fiber of our Nation. In the selection of plant locations for new production, in the interest of national defense, great weight must be given to this factor.

In order that surplus and unemployed labor may be absorbed in the defense program, all reasonable efforts should be made to avoid hours in excess of 40 per week. However, in emergencies or where the needs of the national defense cannot otherwise be met, exceptions to this standard should be permitted. When the requirements of the defense program make it necessary to work in excess of these hours, or where work is required on Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays, overtime should be paid in accordance with the local recognized practices.

All work carried on as part of the defense program should comply with Federal statutory provisions affecting labor wherever such provisions are applicable. This applies to the Walsh-Healey Act, Fair Labor Standards Act, the National Labor Relations Act, etc. There should also be compliance with State and local statutes affecting labor relations, hours of work, wages, workmen's compensation, safety, sanitation, etc.

Adequate provision should be made for the health and safety of employees;

As far as possible, the local employment or other agencies designated by the United States Employment Service should be utilized;

Workers should not be discriminated against because of age, sex, race, or color;

Adequate housing facilities should be made available for employees.

The Commission reaffirms the principles enunciated by the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army, during the World War, in his order of November 15, 1917, relative to the relation of labor standards to efficient production:

"In view of the urgent necessity for a prompt increase in the volume of production * * *, vigilance is demanded of all those in any way associated with industry lest the safeguards with which the people of this country have sought to protect labor should be unwisely and unnecessarily broken down. It is a fair assumption that for the most part these safeguards are the mechanisms of efficiency. Industrial history proves that reasonable hours, fair working conditions, and a proper wage scale are essential to high production. * * * Every attempt should be made to conserve in every way possible all of our achievements in the way of social betterment. But the pressing argument for maintaining industrial safeguards in the present emergency is that they actually contribute to efficiency."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN].

The Reverend William Andrew Keese, pastor, Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, judge of the nations, and our own God, help us, we beseech Thee, to behold Thee high and lifted up, yet not far from any one of us. Above the confusion of our own times, let us feel Thy perfect calm. Above the noise of strife, let us hear Thy still small voice. Above the counsels of despair, let us know Thine everlasting hope. We thank Thee for Thy favor upon our Nation, that in an age of tyranny our ancient liberties are still unimpaired and in a year of war we are still at peace. Teach us to guard our heritage, to secure justice, and promote brotherhood. Give us the spirit of unity, that we may remain "one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Endow us with generosity to relieve the suffering of our brothers of other lands and to succor all the innocent victims of war. Above all, grant us courage that we may have the strength to do what we ought and to endure what we must. And while the kingdoms of earth totter into dust, may we never lose the vision of the kingdom which shall never perish, whose foundation is in truth and righteousness. We pray in the spirit of Jesus the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be excused from service as a conferee on the part of the House in the conference on the bill (H. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] as a member of the conference on the bill referred to, and the Clerk will notify the Senate thereof

EXPLOSION AT KENVIL, N. J.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member of this House joins me in feelings of profound sympathy for the sufferers and their sorrowing families, so suddenly and tragically stricken by the terrific explosion which occurred yesterday in Kenvil, N. J., in my district.

As yet it has been impossible to determine the full extent of the disaster in dead and injured, nor to fix the blame. In response to my request for an immediate and searching investigation, the Federal Bureau of Investigation advises me that its men are now on the spot investigating for possible sabotage. The Intelligence Department of the Army is sending its experts to find, if they can, any technical causes of the tragedy. The work of both these agencies is made difficult by the fact that an explosion of this magnitude always destroys the evidence as to its immediate cause.

The national importance of this disaster is stressed by the fact that it occurred only a few miles from our great Picatinny Arsenal and from the Naval Ammunition Depot at Lake Denmark.

Mr. Speaker, these are dangerous and difficult times. It is the duty of every loyal citizen to be vigilant in preventing accidents through carelessness, and especially in unmasking every subversive agency whose purpose it is to destroy American life and property and thus weaken our national defense. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the appendix of the RECORD by incorporating a memorandum showing the awarding of contracts on September 9.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXCHANGE OF DESTROYERS FOR BASES IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I present a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 593

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to inform the House of Representatives forthwith whether any American citizens, officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy manned one or more of the destroyers exchanged for bases in the Western Hemisphere and sailed upon such vessels into a combat area and into a port of a belligerent nation, and, if so, upon what authority of law.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Under Secretary of the Navy may be read.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the letter, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 13, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: House Resolution 593 "calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information whether exchanged destroyers were manned and sailed into a combat area or port of a belligerent by American citizens, officers, and men of the United States Navy" was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with request for comment and recommendation.

None of the destroyers exchanged for bases in the Western Hemisphere have sailed or will sail, while manned by United States naval forces, into a combat area so designated by the President in accordance with section 3 of Public Resolution No. 54, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved November 4, 1939.

The destroyers in question manned by officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy have sailed or will sail into a Canadian port, where the personnel will be detached for return to the United States.

There is no known law prohibiting United States naval vessels from visiting any foreign port, belligerent or neutral.

The Navy Department interposes no objection to the passage of this resolution.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL, Acting.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I understand the letter of the Under Secretary of the Navy contains the information called for in the resolution. I therefore move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LATE JOHN R. CONNELLY, OF KANSAS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce the death of Hon. John R. Connelly, a former Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Connelly represented the Sixth Congressional District of Kansas during the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, and Sixty-fifth Congresses. As a Member of the World War Congress he was one of a group of 50 who voted against the entry of the United States into that war. This vote typifies that he was a man of convictions, and he was not afraid to take a stand, even when its popularity was questioned. The intervening twenty-some years since that vote was cast have convinced most everyone that our entry into that war was responsible for the misery and serious economic condition which has faced this country ever since. It is interesting to note that at present there are only 2 Members in Congress who were here and cast their votes against entry into the World War. They are the Honorable GEORGE H. NORRIS, Senator from Nebraska, and Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, Representative from Minnesota. The late Honorable Ernest L. Lundeen, Senator from Minnesota, who met his death in the tragic airplane accident 2 weeks ago, was another member of that group.

Mr. Connelly was born in Brown County, Ill., on February 27, 1870, and moved to Thomas County, Kans., in 1888, where he lived until his death. Mr. Connelly was an educator, having served as county superintendent of schools in his home county. Later he became editor and owner of the Colby Free Press, and through these mediums he influenced the growth and development of western Kansas. His ideals and vision have been transplanted to that section, and we who are younger will continue to benefit from his sojourn there.

Mr. Connelly is survived by his widow, three sons, and two daughters.

Under the rules of the House it is not permissible to extend remarks at this point by including extraneous matter, and therefore I am extending my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and giving a list of those who were here in the Sixty-fifth Congress and voted against our entry into the World War. The list also includes the names of those Members who are still living.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a list of names submitted by Mr. Wold, of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an editorial appearing in the New York Times this morning entitled "St. Paul's," referring to St. Paul's Cathedral in London, which may be at this very minute a mass of mortar and stone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXPLOSION AT KENVIL, N. J.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, it was my unhappy privilege yesterday to view the great disaster at Kenvil, N. J., where the Hercules Powder Plant was destroyed by an explosion. I cannot tell you the effect it had upon me. If we expect the cooperation of industry and of workers in this Nation, we must take every precaution to see that there is no recurrence of this awful holocaust that occurred there yesterday. It is certainly in order to demand that every appropriate branch of our Government investigate carefully the details of the accident that occurred and to see that in the future in all other plants cooperating in the dangerous tasks of national defense that we safeguard the industrial workers of this Nation against enemies within our gates and against mechanical carelessness and mechanical faults. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, September 17, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CELLER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PILOT-TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today's papers report that Administrator Donald H. Connolly announced yesterday that future candidates for the C. A. A. pilot-training program must pledge themselves to enter the military air services of the United States, if qualified.

When the pilot-training bill was before the House April 18, 1939, I offered an amendment that no student should be accepted until he consented in writing to serve in the armed forces of the United States, which was defeated 2 to 1, and this law was enacted without a single requirement for carrying out its pretended purpose—to form a reservoir of pilots for national defense. For over a year there has been no legal requirement to prevent cuties, playboys, slackers, spies, and conscientious objectors from securing subsidized instructions in the sport of flying, with no national-defense obligations whatsoever. We had better start writing national-defense requirements into all these bills we are passing in the name of national defense rather than have some administrative official decide to do it a year from now. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by my intimate friend, J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein the remarks of Mr. Millard W. Rice, national legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CHURCH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two addresses, one an address I made at the quadrennial convention of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union, and the other an address I delivered before the Tennessee Farm Bureau Federation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and in one to include remarks before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and in the other to include a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I have been consistently against conscription because, in my opinion, it will lead to nothing less than complete regimentation of all our lives and all our activities. To substantiate my position I noticed in the paper yesterday that they have appointed a Democratic boss of Philadelphia, a Mr. Kelly, to direct physical culture in the United States. This is right smack down the road of Hitlerism, exactly the way Germany has gone. [Applause.] The so-called New Deal, is the old deal of Hitler and Stalin.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SUGAR-BEET GROWERS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CRAWFORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

RELIEF EXPENDITURES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the Treasury statement that is available this morning the expenditures for N. Y. A., C. C. C., and the W. P. A. are now running at a rate higher than a year ago, in spite of the fact that employment figures went up net in June 250,000, in July 100,000, and in August 250,000. This is absolutely a breach of faith with the public. If we are going to get into debt day after day on this account, we are going to go up the flue and not be able to take care of national defense. At the present time I understand they are trying to frame the thing up so that these three incompetent outfits can be a refuge for all draft dodgers. I think it is time the Congress woke up on this performance. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

"YELLOW DOG" CONTRACTS REINSTATED BY THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in his Wednesday night political bid for the support of labor, Candidate Roosevelt declared there would be no retreat on his social legislation, so-called.

To get organized labor's support in the coming election, the President implied that, at the expense of everyone else, he intended to grant special privileges to organized labor. Just as he secured the support of the C. I. O. and its Communist allies by letting them carry on their sit-down strikes to buttress their drive to ruin the A. F. of L., the President now tells organized labor, as a whole, that, notwithstanding the necessity for national defense, he intends to see to it that labor has special privileges.

Labor, to a large extent, is to be exempted from the draft. It is to have a monopoly on jobs at high wages in industrial plants engaged on Government contracts, while the draftee will serve where the President may send him, and at $30 per month. This special privilege the President is to bring about by insisting upon a closed-shop policy in industries working on Government contracts.

To express the thought in another way, the President insists upon conscription of men for national defense. You do not need to be a union man to fight in defense of your country; but, according to the President's policy, if you are to stay at home and have a job, you must join a union.

Whether the President's bait will catch the A. F. of L. is a question. The A. F. of L. should remember that, whenever the show-down came, the President has backed the C. I. O. Organized labor should not be fooled.

September 10, last Tuesday, Fisher Body Plant No. 1 of the Buick Division of General Motors at Flint was closed, and 6,800 men thrown out of work—not because of difficulty between the employees and the employer, but because of the fight between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L.

For more than 2 years the President backed the Labor Board in its effort to aid the C. I. O. in its drive to disorganize and disrupt the A. F. of L. When William Green, president of the A. F. of L., complained, Roosevelt turned a deaf ear, and down to this moment he has refused to do anything to rebuke the Board; and his adherents in the Senate are refusing to amend the Wagner law, as asked by the A. F. of L.

First, the President promoted strife between employer and employee. Now his Labor Board is continuing to promote strife between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., although the President poses as holding out the olive branch to organized labor.

Intent on denying to all American citizens, other than those belonging to labor unions, the right to work for wages on the defense program, the President carries the closed-shop idea into his drive for a third term.

Prior to 1932 employers refused, by virtue of what was known as the "yellow dog" contract, to employ men who belonged to a union. A Republican administration outlawed the "yellow dog" contract by the passage of the Norris-La-Guardia act in March 1932.

Today the President is intent on aiding those who would establish the doctrine that no man can work, although he may be drafted to fight for his country, on a Government contract unless he belongs to a union—the exact opposite of the former situation.

While before a man could not work if he belonged to a union, today the drive is to establish the rule that no man can work unless he belongs to a union.

But the President has gone one step farther. He is attempting to establish a closed shop doctrine as to the Presidency. He now not only does not deny, but boldly asserts, that he is the only man capable of being President of the United States.

He saddled the Democratic Party with a closed-shop contract. Now he would like to apply it to the Nation as a whole. He has a "yellow dog" contract of his own, under which no one but a Roosevelt is to be eligible to a job as President.

The "yellow dog" contract was the abomination of the laboring man. The Republican Party outlawed it. Roosevelt reinstated it. He would bar all Americans except himself from the highest paying job the Nation has to offer—the Presidency of the United States.

He goes the selfish employers he has so often condemned one step farther and proclaims not only that no Republican is fit to be President, but that he is the only Democrat—in fact, the only man in the Nation—qualified for the job.

He, assuming to speak for the people, lays down the rule that there is no one in this great American Union who can work for the Nation except himself.

Laboring men will find their only safe refuge in the Republican Party, under Republican doctrine and principles, which will preserve the rights given them under the Constitution.

Labor, in backing Roosevelt, if he is successful, will find that they have voted themselves into a dictatorship, where the Government—Roosevelt—will tell them when and where and at what wages they may work.

Having once established himself as a dictator over labor, Roosevelt will treat it as he has treated practically all of those who have ever been his friends and supporters. They will be thrown into the discard. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include in one of the extensions an editorial and in the other a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSCRIPTION

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have always been for volunteers in the American Army. I may be prejudiced in favor of volunteering, because Andrew Keller, German revolutionary in 1848, was run out of Germany, because he fought to make Germany a republic. He came to America and at the age of 54 entered the Union Army, with five sons the youngest, Andrew Jr., being only 13 years of age. At the headstone of each of these six is a Government marker reciting simply the company and regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, to which each belonged. Following that fine family tradition I myself volunteered twice for service in the Army of my country. I voted to give the volunteer spirit a chance, in keeping with my personal sentiment. However, I do not believe conscription will do any of the hurtful things which many of my colleagues seem to fear. It will not bring a dictator, nor get us into war. Thorough preparedness is the one thing which will most certainly keep us out of war, and the assumed fear of a dictator in America is pure nonsense.

Our first duty is to prepare against outside aggression. The way to do that is to cooperate to push preparedness as thoroughly and as quickly as possible. I am, therefore, going to vote for the preparedness program when it comes from the conference committee. I am not going to stand in the way of majority opinion when the vital interests of my country are at stake as they are at the present moment. I think that is good sportsmanship and good patriotism.

I am going to do that.

I also want to suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], that the Senate has about as much chance going along with the House amendments to the Wagner Act as they have of flying back to Illinois this morning, and no greater chance. I understand what a great friend of labor the gentleman from Michigan is, and, of course, I know exactly what he means when he makes such a talk as he did this morning. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

DEFENSE CONTRACTS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 950)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The National Defense Advisory Commission on September 6, 1940, unanimously agreed to and adopted general principles governing the letting of national-defense contracts. On August 31 the Commission also unanimously adopted a statement of labor requirements as a guide for contractors who have received national-defense orders from the United States Government.

I consider these two documents to be of such importance as to justify my sending them to the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives as a matter of information. The values of these policies and principles to the Government, to industry, agriculture, labor, and to the country, sectionally and as a whole, will be seen at once.

The general principles governing the letting of defense contracts follow:

The essence of the preparedness program is the getting of an adequate supply of materials of the proper quality in the shortest space of time possible. Considerations of price alone are highly important, but in the emergency are not governing.

1. Speed of delivery of all items on the defense program is essential. This means:

(a) That orders should be placed in such a manner as to insure the most efficient use of each particular facility from the point of view of the program as a whole;

(b) That proper consideration should be given to contributory industries, such as the machine-tool industry, to avoid creating underlying bottle necks;

(c) That once delivery dates are fixed, assurance be given that they will be met by the supplier.

2. Proper quality is also of prime importance. It is therefore necessary to determine first of all whether or not the supplier can meet the quality requirements, as specified. There should be a willingness on the part of both the Army and Navy, on the one hand, and of the supplier on the other, to adjust specifications on a cooperative basis in order that such specifications may come as near as possible to meeting commercial standards while at the same time fulfilling the military requirements.

3. Price, while not the sole consideration, is of outstanding significance, and every effort must be made to secure a fair price.

This must take recognition, among other things, of determination of proper cost factors.

4. The impact of the defense program upon the consumers must be recognized. This relates to such factors as—

(a) Due regard to the necessity of protecting civilian needs and morale;

(b) Proper health and housing conditions among employees;

(c) Consideration to possible off-season production in order to dovetail the military program into production for civilian requirements. Off-season production should also lead to lower overhead and consequently to lower prices for both the consumers and the Government.

5. Adequate consideration must be given to labor. This means compliance with the principles on this subject stated by the Commission in its release of August 31, copy of which is attached hereto.

6. Undue geographic concentration of orders should be avoided, both as to procurement districts and as to industrial sections within any such procurement district. Reasons for such decentralization relate to factors of military strategy, as well as avoiding congestion that will slow down production.

7. Financial responsibility of the supplier should be examined. Ability to post a bond does not necessarily dispose of this problem. The probability should exist that the supplier will be able to continue in business, at least long enough to complete his contract satisfactorily. Further, an ability to finance himself through private sources should take preference over necessity for securing Government aid.

8. The avoidance of congestion of transportation facilities should be sought. The same applies to warehousing facilities.

9. Due consideration should be given to the adequacy of power facilities, particularly where furnished by public utilities.

10. A general preference should be given to firms having experience with so-called educational orders.

11. The moral responsibility of the supplier is important, and in some respects, fundamental. There should be evidence of honest and sincere desire to cooperate with the Army and Navy in producing what is called for, and on time, without profiteering; to assume some risks himself rather than attempting to shift all such risks to the Government; and to furnish a correct statement as to his capacity and his experience. The supplier's general standing and reputation among reputable businessmen (as distinct from his financial rating) is one index of such qualifications.

12. The Commission recognizes that competitive bidding is the better procedure in certain types of industry and circumstances. However, it is often impossible to make sure that the principles outlined above are followed when contracts are placed on the basis of price alone and are let to the lowest bidder. Therefore, in cases where competitive bidding will not fulfill the above-stated needs of national defense, the Commission recommends that the use of the negotiated contract be authorized where necessary in order that these objectives be obtained in making defense purchases.

Following is the statement of labor policy adopted by the National Defense Advisory Commission:

Primary among the objectives of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense is the increase in production of materials required by our armed forces and the assurance of adequate future supply of such materials with the least possible disturbance to production of supplies for the civilian population. The scope of our present program entails bringing into production many of our unused resources of agriculture, manufacturing, and manpower.

This program can be used in the public interest as a vehicle to reduce unemployment and otherwise strengthen the human fiber of our Nation. In the selection of plant locations for new production, in the interest of national defense, great weight must be given to this factor.

In order that surplus and unemployed labor may be absorbed in the defense program, all reasonable efforts should be made to avoid hours in excess of 40 per week. However, in emergencies or where the needs of the national defense cannot otherwise be met, exceptions to this standard should be permitted. When the requirements of the defense program make it necessary to work in excess of these hours, or where work is required on Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays, overtime should be paid in accordance with the local recognized practices.

All work carried on as part of the defense program should comply with Federal statutory provisions affecting labor wherever such provisions are applicable. This applies to the Walsh-Healey Act, Fair Labor Standards Act, the National Labor Relations Act, etc. There should also be compliance with State and local statutes affecting labor relations, hours of work, wages, workmen's compensation, safety, sanitation, etc.

Adequate provision should be made for the health and safety of employees;

As far as possible, the local employment or other agencies designated by the United States Employment Service should be utilized;

Workers should not be discriminated against because of age, sex, race, or color;

Adequate housing facilities should be made available for employees.

The Commission reaffirms the principles enunciated by the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army, during the World War, in his order of November 15, 1917, relative to the relation of labor standards to efficient production:

In view of the urgent necessity for a prompt increase in the volume of production * * * vigilance is demanded of all those in any way associated with industry lest the safeguards with which the people of this country have sought to protect labor should be unwisely and unnecessarily broken down. It is a fair assumption that for the most part these safeguards are the mechanisms of efficiency. Industrial history proves that reasonable hours, fair working conditions, and a proper wage scale are essential to high production. * * * every attempt should be made to conserve in every way possible all of our achievements in the way of social betterment. But the pressing argument for maintaining industrial safeguards in the present emergency is that they actually contribute to efficiency.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 13, 1940.

MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BEAM moves to discharge the House conferees on the bill S. 326.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, on July 8, 1940, Senate bill 326, commonly designated as the Mexican Claims Commission bill, was recommitted by the House of Representatives to the Committee on Foreign Affairs by a vote of 197 to 124. It subsequently passed the House with the following amendment attached:

After these sums have been deposited with the United States Treasury by the Government of Mexico.

Subsequently, a conference was asked on July 10 by the Senate and conferees were designated and duly appointed by the Vice President of the United States.

On July 11 conferees were asked by the chairman of the House committee, Mr. BLOOM, and on July 11 conferees were duly appointed by the Speaker of the House.

Up to and including September 12, 1940, no conference report has ever been filed with the House on this bill. Consequently I have made this motion in conformity with rule 28, paragraph 1½ (a), subsection 910, which is as follows:

After House conferees on any bill or resolution in conference between the House and Senate shall have been appointed for 20 calendar days and shall have failed to make a report, it is hereby declared to be a motion of the highest privilege to move to discharge said House conferees and to appoint new conferees, or to instruct said House conferees; and, further, during the last 6 days of any session of Congress, it shall be a privileged motion to move to discharge, appoint, or instruct House conferees after House conferees shall have been appointed 36 hours without having made a report.

Mr. Speaker, in compliance with the regulations and rules and the parliamentary procedure of the House of Representatives, and in order to give the House in the closing days of the session an opportunity to be fully apprised and aware of any report by the conferees, if such were to be filed, on last night I offered the following motion, which appears on page 12052 of the RECORD, which is as follows:

I move to discharge the House conferees on the bill of the Senate, S. 326.

This morning I have the personal assurance of the chairman of the House conference committee and also of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] that the conferees have agreed on a report after a 60-day delay. On condition therefore that this report is to be filed immediately so that the House of Representatives and the country will be fully apprised of the contents thereof and reserving all points of order against such report, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his motion, and, therefore, has relinquished the floor.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As I understand it, the gentleman from Illinois having withdrawn his motion no longer has control of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asked unanimous consent to be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet endeavoring to reserve the right to object at the time he asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear any objection or reservation of objection and recognized the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I understood that pursuant to the agreement the next business in order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is that the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, in view of what is happening, being a member of the House conference committee on this bill, I think it proper that I make a statement concerning the bill and the filing of the report by the conferees.

After consideration by the House the bill went to conference with the Senate. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] was chairman of the House conference committee. The other House conferees were the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and myself. A meeting of the conference committee was not held immediately for two reasons: One was that I think Senator PITTMAN was away for a few days. The other was that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] desired to attend the National Guard encampment in New York and requested the chairman of the House conferees, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] not to hold a meeting of the conferees while he was away. As a courtesy we wanted him to be present and it was agreed that nothing would be done until he returned from the National Guard encampment in New York. After he returned there was a meeting of the conferees at which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] suggested certain amendments. Two amendments were proposed.

We had a meeting last Wednesday, but again the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had to be away, so the meeting was held yesterday. On yesterday the conference report was agreed to in accordance with the two amendments suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and all of the conferees, both of the Senate and the House, with the exception of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], signed the report yesterday. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said he had promised not to sign the report until today.

The conference report could have been filed yesterday, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had promised not to sign the conference report until today.

Very late yesterday afternoon, about 5 o'clock as I understand it, when only 14 Members or so were on the floor, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM], without giving notice, moved to discharge the conferees. That precipitated the matter, and that is the shape it is in. The gentleman from Illinois had the right to make the motion under the rules, because if a conference report is not signed within 20 days any Member has the right to file such motion. But in view of the fact that there had been no notice whatever of his intent, and that the report had been agreed to and signed by all of the conferees except the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], I felt that the gentleman should not have made his motion without giving us some notice.

This morning the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] signed the report and we have a unanimous conference report signed by all members of the conference committee, and this unanimous report will now be filed so that the House can act upon it.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. In order that we may all have notice, when does the gentleman expect to call up the conference report?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I consulted the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] and the Speaker pro tempore about the matter this morning and it is understood that the conference report will be taken up some time next week. Under the rules of the House it could not be called up today except by unanimous consent; and the Speaker pro tempore does not care to do anything that might interfere with action upon the conference report on the so-called National Selective Service Act. I do not see how it can be acted upon before next week.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BLOOM filed the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, for printing under the rule:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert:

(1) On page 2, line 15, of the Senate engrossed bill, after the word "payments", a colon and: "Provided further, That if any person or persons, firm, or corporation, entitled to be paid any sum hereunder is indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other lending agency of the United States Government, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to such agency on said indebtedness the sum or sums to which such person or persons, firm, or corporation is entitled, or so much thereof as is necessary to pay off and satisfy said indebtedness, the balance, if any, to be paid to said claimant or claimants".

(2) On page 3, line 15, of the Senate engrossed bill, after the word "States", a colon and the following: "And provided further, That it is hereby expressly declared that this Act relates solely and only to claims comprehended by the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, between the United States and Mexico, and shall not be treated or considered as a precedent for similar action in relation to any other treaty or claims thereunder, or for the payment by the United States of other debts owing by Mexico or any other Government on account of claims of citizens of the United States".

And the House agree to the same.

SOL BLOOM,
LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
HAMILTON FISH,
Managers on the part of the House.

KEY PITTMAN,
WALTER F. GEORGE,
TOM CONNALLY,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill provided that the awards to United States citizens under the Convention and extensions thereof, and the principal amounts of appraisals of claims of United States citizens which have been agreed upon by the Commissioners in their report, should be paid immediately. The House amendment conditioned the payment of such awards and principal amounts of appraisals upon the deposit in the United States Treasury by the Government of Mexico of sums for such purpose. The conference agreement does not condition the payment of such awards and principal amounts of appraisals upon the deposit of sums by the Government of Mexico but does provide that the amount due any claimant who is indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other lending agency of the United States shall, to the extent of such indebtedness, be applied to the payment thereof. The conference agreement also provides for the insertion of a provision to the effect that the action with respect to the claims to which the bill is applicable shall not be treated or considered as a precedent for similar action in relation to any other treaty or the claims thereunder, or for the payment by the United States of other debts owing by Mexico or any other government on account of claims of citizens of the United States.

SOL BLOOM,
LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
HAMILTON FISH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against the conference report.

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS CARGOES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7357) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 465) to provide for the safe carriage of explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board vessels; to make more effective the provisions of the International Convention for Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, relating to the carriage of dangerous goods; and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a unanimous report?

Mr. BLAND. It is a unanimous report, and, in addition to that, this morning I informed the ranking Republican Members, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], that I was going to bring this up today, and they told me to go ahead and do it.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. BLAND. I shall be very glad to do so.

The bill deals with the subject of the transportation of dangerous cargoes by water. The matter has been before the committee at various times, and in July of last year a letter was sent down by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce urging that legislation be enacted. It was too late then to consider a bill.

Hearings were held in January. The industry was present and also representatives of the Government. The matter was gone over very carefully. The Secretary of Commerce had sent down the tentative form of a bill, but we felt that was not the bill we wanted. The matter was then considered again by the industry and by all of the persons affected and also taken up with the port authorities that are very vitally interested. A bill was worked out that is satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. Speaker, I may say that the need for this legislation has been voiced from many sources. The Association of Port Authorities at the last session was represented by Mr. Billings Wilson, chairman, American Association of Port Authorities, and I think his statement, which amply covers the situation, will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. Wilson said:

The American Association of Port Authorities, whom I have the honor to represent as chairman of their hazardous-cargoes committee, and the Port of New York Authority, of which I am assistant general manager, are concerned about unregulated movement of explosives and other dangerous articles through our various port communities by all forms of transportation. Not only is there grave risk to human life but structures and floating plants aggregating in excess of $3,000,000,000 in our various ports are exposed. Experience has shown that when fire occurs in such water-front structures the average loss runs into six figures and it is the men and equipment of local authorities who have to face these risks and extinguish these fires.

Mr. Speaker, telegrams and letters were received from the following, urging action: Los Angeles Harbor Department; sixth annual convention of Association of Marine Terminal Operators, Atlantic Ports, Jacksonville, Fla.; port of Tacoma, Wash.; South Jersey Port Commission, Camden, N. J.; Board of Harbor Commissioners, Milwaukee, Wis.; fire chief and commissioner, New York City; the Port of New York Authority, New York City; port of Houston; Hampton Roads Maritime Exchange, Norfolk, Va.; Chesapeake Ferry Co., Norfolk, Va.; and Marine Exchange of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, San Francisco, Calif.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has stated fully the justification for the resolution, but will he tell us just what these regulations consist of in a general way?

Mr. BLAND. They are very technical regulations as to the type of explosives that may be carried in various ships. They were so technical that we had to have people who are acquainted with them work it out.

Here are the reasons for the action. At the present time a number of statutes deal with the transportation by water of explosives and dangerous and semidangerous articles and substances including inflammable or combustible liquids, inflammable solids, oxidizing materials, corrosive liquids, compressed gases, poisonous articles and substances, and semihazardous articles. The authority to regulate the transportation of those articles and substances is divided between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. The Bureau was of the opinion that the existing statutes, with the exception of the so-called Tanker Act—section 4417 (a) Revised Statutes—are antiquated and obsolete and did not properly accomplish the purpose for which they were designed, namely, safety in the transportation of dangerous articles by water.

Mr. Speaker, I may say that this is a little more important now because of the explosives that are transported. The legislation has been urged from time to time before the committee for the last several years.

Mr. MICHENER. In just which agency is the control lodged under this resolution?

Mr. BLAND. It is to be within the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. It puts into effect regulations similar to those that are now in existence or which may be adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, so that there will be no conflict.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 465), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4472. (1) This section shall apply to all vessels, domestic or foreign, regardless of character, tonnage, size, service, and whether self-propelled or not, and whether carrying passengers or freight for hire or not, on the navigable waters of the United States, including its Territories and possessions, but not including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, whether arriving or departing or under way, moored, anchored, aground or while in drydock, except public vessels, domestic or foreign, not engaged in commercial service.

"(2) It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, convey, store, stow, or use fulminates or other detonating compounds in bulk in dry condition, or liquid nitroglycerin, or explosive compositions that ignite spontaneously or undergo marked decomposition when subjected for 48 consecutive hours to a temperature of 167 degrees Fahrenheit, or explosives containing an ammonium salt and a chlorate, or other like explosives on board any such vessel. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, convey, store, stow, or use on board any passenger vessel, subject to the provisions of this section, any high explosive such as, and including, dynamite, trinitrotoluene, picrates, detonating fuzes, fireworks that can be exploded en masse, or other like explosives susceptible to detonation by a blasting cap or detonating fuze except ships' distress signals, also excepting samples of such explosives for laboratory or sales purposes in restricted quantities as may be provided by regulations of the Secretary of Commerce established hereunder; no other vessel to which this section applies shall transport, carry, convey, store, stow, or use any such high explosives unless such vessel has been inspected and a permit issued to her, or an endorsement made upon her current certificate of inspection under the provisions of subsection (3) hereof.

"(3) It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, convey, store, stow, or use, except as fuel for its own use, on board any vessel subject to this section, any other explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances, including inflammable or combustible liquids, inflammable solids, oxidizing materials, corrosive liquids, compressed gases, poisonous articles and substances, and semihazardous articles and ships' stores and supplies containing any dangerous ingredients, except as provided in the regulations of the Secretary of Commerce established hereunder: Provided, That no such vessel shall transport, carry, convey, store, stow, or use, except as fuel for its own use, on board any such explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances until she has first been inspected by a board of local inspectors to determine whether or not any such explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances may be transported, carried, conveyed, stored, stowed, or used on board such vessel with safety to health, life, limb, or property and a permit has been issued to her or an endorsement has been made on the vessel's current certificate of inspection by said inspectors authorizing the presence on board of any such explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances: Provided, That a vessel of a foreign country whose laws with respect to inspection and transportation of explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances approximate those of the United States, and if such a vessel is in compliance with the laws and regulations of that country, and if the country in which the vessel is registered accords like privileges to domestic vessels subject to this section visiting such country, shall not be subject to the requirements concerning permits or endorsements or to the provisions of subsection (4) (b) hereof: Provided further, That any vessel subject to this section arriving within the territorial waters of the United States from any foreign port or place without having on board an unexpired permit or endorsement on the certificate of inspection as required by this section, and having on board any explosive or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances, shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe. Any permit or endorsement issued under the provisions of this section shall be valid for a period of not more than 1 year from the date of its issuance, shall be retained on board the vessel, and shall be revoked by a board of local inspectors whenever it shall find that any provisions of this section or of the regulations established hereunder relating to the vessel or that the conditions under which such permit or endorsement was issued are not being complied with: Provided, however, That whenever any person directly interested in or affected by any decision or action of any board of local inspectors of vessels in revoking any such permit shall feel aggrieved by such action, he may appeal therefrom as provided in section 1 of the act of June 10, 1918 (U. S. C., 1934 ed. title 46, sec. 431). Any explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances may be refused transportation by the owner, master, or agent of any such vessel, and any master, owner, or agent may also refuse to take on board any package or parcel which he has reason to believe contains explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances, and he may require that such package be opened to ascertain the facts.

"(4) In order to secure effective provisions against the hazards of health, life, limb, or property created by explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board such vessels—

"(a) The Secretary of Commerce shall, by regulation, define, describe, name, and classify all explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances, and shall establish such regulations as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of this section with respect to the packing, certification, marking, labeling, and specifications of containers of explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances, the marking and labeling of said containers and dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances, and shall accept and adopt for the purposes above mentioned in this subsection such definitions, descriptions, descriptive names, classifications, specifications of containers, packing, marking, labeling, and certification of explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances to the extent as are or may be established from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission insofar as they apply to shippers by common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by water. The Secretary of Commerce shall also establish regulations as to the marking, handling, storage, stowage, and use thereof on board such vessels and disposition of any explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances found to be unsafe; with respect to the necessary shipping papers, manifests, cargo stowage plans, and the description and descriptive names of explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances to be entered in such shipping documents; and with respect to the inspection of all the foregoing; also any other regulations for the safe transportation, carriage, conveyance, storage, stowage, or use of explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board such vessels as the Secretary of Commerce shall deem necessary. The Secretary of Commerce may utilize the services of the Bureau for the Safe Transportation of Explosives and Other Dangerous Articles.

"(b) The Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, shall establish regulations with respect to the construction, alteration, or repair of domestic vessels subject to the provisions of this section, including superstructure, hulls, bulk heads, fittings, propulsive and auxiliary machinery, and unfired pressure vessels, boilers, equipments, appurtenances and appliances, and the operation and manning of such vessels and their equipment, and shall make such regulations applicable to foreign vessels subject to this section and to such extent and upon such conditions as may be deemed necessary.

"(c) All regulations established under this subsection shall be in accord with the best known practicable means of securing safety in the transportation, carriage, storage, stowage, or use on board vessels of such explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances: Provided, That the transportation, carriage, conveyance, storage, stowage, or use of such explosives or dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances shall be in accordance with the regulations so established, which shall insofar as applicable to them respectively be binding upon shippers and the owners, charterers, masters or agents or persons in charge of such vessels, and all other persons transporting, carrying, conveying, storing, stowing or using on board any such vessels any explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances: Provided further, That this section shall not be construed to prevent the transportation of military or naval forces with their accompanying munitions of war and stores.

"(d) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to relieve any vessel subject to the provisions of this section from any of the requirements of title 52 of the Revised Statutes or Acts amendatory or supplementary thereto and regulations thereunder applicable to such vessel, which are not inconsistent herewith.

"(8) The provisions of this section and the regulations established hereunder shall be enforced primarily by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the Department of Commerce and the Coast Guard of the Department of the Treasury; and the Secretary of Commerce, with the consent of the head of any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government, may avail himself of the use of information, advice, services, facilities, officers, and employees thereof (including the field service) in carrying out the provisions of this section: Provided, That no officer or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services except as permitted by law.

"(9) If any collector of customs has reason to believe, on complaint or otherwise, that any vessel subject to this section is violating any of the provisions of this section or of the regulations established hereunder, he may, by written order served on the master, person in charge of such vessel, or the owner or charterer thereof, or the agent of the owner or charterer, detain her until such time as the provisions of this section and of the regulations established hereunder have been complied with. If the vessel be ordered detained, the master, person in charge, or owner or charterer, or the agent of the owner or charterer thereof, may, within 5 days, appeal to the Secretary of Commerce, who may, after investigation, affirm, set aside, or modify the order of such collector.

S. C., 1934 edition, title 46, sec. 362), and on every vessel on which any explosives or any other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances are being transported, carried, conveyed, stored, stowed, or used as shall be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors and approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

"(11) The transportation by vessels of gasoline or any other inflammable or combustible liquid or inflammable gas when carried by motor vehicles using the same solely as a source of their own motive power, or motive power for driving auxiliaries forming a part of the vehicle, shall be lawful under the conditions as set forth in the regulations established by the Secretary under this section: Provided, however, That the motor or motors in any vehicle be stopped immediately after entering the said vessel, and that the same be not restarted until immediately before said vehicle shall leave the vessel after said vessel has been made fast to the wharf or ferry bridge at which she lands. All other fire, if any, in such vehicle shall be extinguished before entering the said vessel and the same shall not be relighted until after said vehicle shall leave the vessel: Provided further, That any owner, charter, agent, master, or other person having charge of a passenger vessel shall have the right to refuse to transport motor vehicles the fuel tanks of which contain gasoline or other inflammable or combustible liquid or inflammable gas used solely as a source of power for the vehicle or its auxiliaries: Provided, That the owner, charterer, agent, master, or person in charge of the vessel, and the owner, motor carrier, and operator of any such vehicle in which all fires have not been extinguished or the motor or motors stopped as required by this subsection or regulations established thereunder, shall each incur a penalty of not more than $500 for which the vessel and motor vehicle, respectively, shall be liable: Provided further, That a violation of this subsection shall not subject any person to the penalty provided in subsection (12) hereof.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHIPMENT AND DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9982) to require, during an emergency, the shipment and discharge of seamen on certain vessels of the United States before shipping commissioners, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. GEYER of California. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. BLAND. The bill largely, in fact almost entirely, is limited to domestic waters, and it particularly affects shipping on the Great Lakes. This has all been worked out as far as the Great Lakes is concerned, and there is an amendment which I shall offer which has been worked out to the satisfaction of the Great Lakes interests. I will say that they have shipping commissioners and that sort of thing at some places, but there are other places where we do not have shipping commissioners, and we want to know something about the men who are serving on the ships. The proposal was to have shipping commissioners, but that would have been very burdensome, so we are requiring the masters to make reports on the type of men employed on the ships.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in the judgment of the President a sufficient emergency exists and he so declares—

(a) The master of every self-propelled vessel of the United States of 200 gross tons or over (except vessels used exclusively for pleasure) bound from a port or place in the United States, its districts, Territories, or possessions, to a port or place in the British North American possessions, whether by way of the Great Lakes or by way of other waters; to a port or place in the West Indies; to a port or place in the Republic of Mexico; to any other port or place in the United States, its districts, Territories, or possessions, except when navigating rivers, harbors, lakes (other than the Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, and canals exclusively, or to any other port or place in the United States on a voyage on which the vessel proceeds on the Great Lakes; and all vessels of 75 tons and upward (except vessels used exclusively for pleasure) when engaged on an intercoastal voyage; shall, before he proceeds on such voyage, make an agreement with each seaman engaged as one of the crew in the same manner as is provided by sections 4511, Revised Statutes, as amended, and 4512, Revised Statutes (46 U. S. C. 564 and 565), not, however, including the sixth and eighth items of section 4511, Revised Statutes, as amended, and shall discharge such seamen and pay their wages in the manner required by law in the case of vessels subject to section 4511, Revised Statutes, as amended, not including, however, the second clause of the first sentence of section 4529, Revised Statutes, as amended (46 U. S. C. 596), but in lieu thereof, the first clause of that sentence shall be applicable.

(b) The master of every such vessel bound from a port or place in the United States, its districts, Territories, or possessions, on a fishing voyage, shall, before he proceeds on such voyage, make an agreement with each seaman employed therein in the same manner as is now authorized by law, and each seaman so employed shall sign such agreement in the presence of a shipping commissioner. The master of any such vessel shall discharge such seamen and pay their wages in the manner now prescribed by law.

(c) If the master of any vessel subject to the provisions of the two preceding paragraphs shall ship, discharge, or pay the wages of any seaman in violation of the provisions of those paragraphs, he shall be subject to a penalty of $100 for each seaman so shipped, discharged, or paid off, for which penalty the vessel shall be liable. In case of desertion or casualty resulting in the loss of one or more of the seamen, the master must ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same or higher grade or rating with those whose places they fill, and report the same to the shipping commissioner or the United States consul at the first port at which he shall arrive, without incurring the penalty prescribed herein.

(d) The Secretary of Commerce shall appoint a shipping commissioner for every port of entry on the Great Lakes which in his judgment may require the same. Shipping commissioners so appointed shall have the same powers, duties, and functions as those bestowed by law on shipping commissioners appointed by the Secretary of Commerce at ports of entry which are ports of ocean navigation under authority of section 4501 of the Revised Statutes (46 U. S. C. 541), and shall in all respects be subject to all of the provisions of law relating to shipping commissioners. The provisions of section 4503, Revised Statutes (46 U. S. C. 543), shall apply to any port on the Great Lakes in which no shipping commissioner shall have been appointed.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. V, title 46, sec. 643), is amended by the addition of a new subsection lettered (l), reading as follows:

"'(l) The master of every vessel subject to the provisions of this section shall submit reports to the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation with respect to the employment, discharge, or termination of services of every seaman not shipped or discharged before a shipping commissioner. The Secretary of Commerce shall, by regulation, prescribe the manner, form, content, and time of submitting such reports. Any master who shall violate any provision of this subsection or regulations established hereunder shall be subject to a penalty of $500.'

"SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the national interest requires, to extend the provisions of subsection (l) of section 4551, Revised Statutes, as amended, to such additional class or classes of vessels and to such waters as he may designate."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND to the committee amendment: Page 4, strike out lines 14 to 20, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(l) The master of every vessel subject to the provisions of this section shall submit, over his signature, reports to the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the employment, discharge, or termination of services of every seaman not shipped or discharged before a shipping commissioner, which reports shall contain such of the following information as may be required by regulation of the Secretary of Commerce: (1) name of vessel, official number, voyage number, port, date, description of voyage, name in full of each seaman, number of continuous discharge book or certificate of identification and of license, certificate of registry, or service, and efficiency for rating in which employed, age, citizenship, capacity in which engaged, date and place of engagement, date and place of discharge or separation from service of vessel, the percentage of citizens of the United States in the crew, and name in full of the master and the serial number of his license; (2) a statement showing (a) that the master has entered into an agreement with each seaman on board such vessel as required by law; (b) that at least 65 percent of the deck crew (exclusive of licensed officers) are of a rating not less than able seamen; (c) that at least 75 percent of the crew in each department are able to understand orders given by the officers; (d) that the vessel has in her service the number of lifeboatmen required by her certificate of inspection; (e) that each member of the crew possesses a license, certificate of registry, or certificate of service for the rating in which he is engaged, and (f) that each lifeboatman possesses a certificate of efficiency. The Secretary of Commerce shall, by regulation, prescribe the form and content of such reports and time of submitting them."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the interests on the Great Lakes were principally interested in this, and after the bill was first ordered reported, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] wanted an opportunity to look into it, so it was held up for some time before it was reported, and then reported in a form that we thought met all objections. After the bill was reported, it appeared that there was some question raised by the Great Lakes interests in that we had called for certain reports and they thought we ought to be more specific. In order to cover any possible objection that they might have, this amendment which I have just offered was prepared. It was agreed upon and accepted by the Great Lakes interests and by the Bureau of Marine Inspection, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] who had looked at it in the meantime, also accepted it. Therefore, there is no question of any controversy as to this amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, today is Friday, the 13th, and remembering that in the year 1917 the name of our regiment was changed from the Third Engineers to the Thirteenth Engineers on Friday, the 13th, I take this time to give my congressional colleagues a little constructive advice.

Many of the Members of this Congress who voted for the New Deal peacetime compulsory military service bill apparently do not realize that section 1 of amendment No. 13 to the Constitution of the United States reads:

SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

And that section 2 of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads:

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Mr. Speaker, with all sincerity, may I state that section 2 of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which gives the Congress the power to enforce section 1 of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States by appropriate legislation, does not directly or indirectly give to the Congress the power to repudiate and repeal section 1 of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution under the Colonel Julius Ochs Adler alias Burke-Wadsworth New-Deal Hitler-Stalin type of peacetime compulsory military service legislation or any other congressional enactment.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, should you on this Friday, the 13th, vote to enact the "involuntary servitude" Colonel Julius Ochs Adler peacetime compulsory military service portion of the New Deal program to establish a dictatorship in the United States of America, remember well that the record of your vote to do so shall never die. Like Banquo's ghost, it shall forever rise to haunt you, particularly during this November's election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, in closing let me remind my colleagues that should they sow "involuntary servitude" seeds this September they shall reap their harvest this November; for "as ye sow, so shall ye reap." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to make a statement.

Several Members have received permission to address the House today at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day. In contemplation of the fact that perhaps during the day the conference report on the selective-service bill will be called up in the House, if there is no objection, while we wait for that the Members who have special orders may now proceed to address the House.

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 10122, on which the committee has been conducting hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two topics, and in the first to include a brief excerpt from the Detroit Free Press, and in the second to include a brief prepared by the Lawyers Guild.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there has been a change in the program with respect to the special orders to be recognized at this time, I am wondering if it would not be possible for the Chair to make some arrangement to notify the Members when the conference report comes over from the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is usual that a recess precedes the taking up of a conference report in these circumstances, and if there be one it would probably come within an hour or two.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that there will be a point of no quorum made, if a quorum is not on the floor when the conference report comes over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the bells are usually rung before the recess is over, but no arrangement, of course, has been made with respect to a recess as yet.

Without objection, the position of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] will be reversed and the gentleman from Texas, under the previous order of the House, will be recognized for 20 minutes.

LT. COL. CARL BYOIR, AGENT OF HITLER

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, on May 27 I made a statement on the floor of this House that a lieutenant colonel by the name of Carl Byoir, had been guilty of un-American activities in that while he was lieutenant colonel in the Specialist Reserve and within 18 months from the time of his appointment, and immediately after Hitler went into power on January 30, 1933, was employed by the German consul in New York and paid $4,000 in cash, in bills, for the purpose of distributing literature calculated to build up Hitler, and was prejudicial and detrimental to our form of government.

In addition to that, he received from $2,000 to $3,000 a month right after Hitler went in, for the same purpose, and then he sent a representative to Germany by the name of George Sylvester Viereck, discussed in the Pearson and Allen column today, to get him a contract from Hitler himself, and this representative went to Germany and he saw Hitler and he conferred with the other German officials, and he came back from Germany to the United States with a contract for Lieutenant Colonel Byoir for $6,000 a month to represent Hitler in this country for 18 months. Then Byoir and Viereck became partners in the campaign to "sell" Hitler.

SWORN TESTIMONY

These were very serious charges and if committed in time of war would have been treason, and I offered as proof of that—or at least I had the proof and I submitted some of it here on the floor of the House—the sworn testimony that was presented before the McCormack un-American activities committee in 1934. I presented testimony from a partner of Lieutenant Colonel Byoir to the effect that everything that I have said was true and also the testimony of the man who was sent to Germany to get this contract from Hitler and this contract, I remind you, was approved by Hitler's minister of propaganda. In pursuance of that contract anti-Semitic literature was circulated all over this country by Lt. Col. Carl Byoir, and he was thereby the highest-paid American representative of the German Government in the United States.

HITLER FIRED HIM BECAUSE HE FOUND OUT BYOIR SEMITIC

That contract continued until Hitler discovered that he had employed a Semitic person to distribute anti-Semitic literature in the United States, and then he was discharged.

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE

Now, when I made these charges, the Dies committee was requested to make an investigation, and a subcommittee of the Dies committee consisting of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] were to make an investigation of these charges. I was not notified that there would be a hearing, and there was no hearing, and all at once the newspapers came out with the statement that this man was exonerated; that there was nothing to these charges. I immediately asked for a hearing before the committee, and finally, after making some speeches here on the floor of the House and reiterating some of these charges and showing I could prove every one of them, I was granted a hearing before the Dies committee, August 29, 1940.

CHARGES NOT DENIED

At this hearing—I want the Members of the House to remember this—I presented sworn testimony, that is uncontradicted, to bear out every statement I made. Lt. Col. Carl Byoir claimed—and it was his only defense—it was several years ago and, therefore, they should not take it up now, not denying any of the principal allegations—he does not deny he collected $4,000 in bills at one time from the German consul in New York right after Hitler went in. He does not deny he collected from $2,000 to $3,000 a month to distribute this literature over the country. He does not deny that he was getting $6,000 a month under a contract that was approved by Hitler himself. None of that is denied—not any of it—but this committee decides that this is old—1933, 1934, and 1935—that it is too old to take up.

My contention is that there is something new in this; that it was not known then that he was a lieutenant colonel in our Army. If it had been known then, the McCormack committee would have taken immediate action against him. It has only been discovered recently that we had a lieutenant colonel distributing anti-Semitic literature and representing Hitler in this country.

Now, I have no personal attack to make upon the members of the committee that passed upon this. The only criticism I have to offer is that I do not believe they gave it sufficient consideration. I do not believe they did or they could not have come to the conclusion that they did.

I have been in this House 12 years and I have tried to make a record that my colleagues would support me on.

IS NOT FIT PERSON TO ADMINISTER NEW COMPULSORY-TRAINING BILL

I have been very careful to never make a statement that I could not back up with proof. In this case this man committed an act which, if committed in time of war, would have been treason. It happened that we were not at war with Germany, and therefore it is not treason, but it is an un-American activity for a lieutenant colonel, who is likely to be called out to administer this compulsory training service bill that we passed, to be a representative of a foreign government, and especially the type of government that Hitler is trying to force upon the countries of the world.

Remember this, my friends, that during that time of Byoir's representation of Hitler, steamships were coming in here loaded down with "fifth columnists." The testimony shows that they came to this country and left this country at will, without any record having been made.

I stated that this country was filled up with "fifth columnists" during that period of time when the drive was put on under Byoir to sell Hitlerism to the people of this country. So that is part of the investigation that I think should have been made, but it was not made. Of course, Lieutenant Byoir would have you believe that this was just a tourist contract, just a travel-bureau business, and therefore it was not connected with the Government. But the sworn testimony refutes his statement; so does the report of the McCormack committee.

Now, I see the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is present. He was acting chairman of the most recent committee exonerating Byoir. When the Dempsey subcommittee made this report and I asked for a hearing before the whole committee and was heard August 29, 1940, nothing was done until about Tuesday of this week, when the committee was called together by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES]. If I am incorrect about this, I want him to correct me, as he is sitting here listening to what I have to say. At this meeting there were three persons besides himself, who were members of that committee. Two of them—the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]—were members of the other committee who had already exonerated Byoir and had prejudged the case before they heard the testimony. Naturally, I had a great burden to assume in trying to change the minds of the judges, the members of the committee, and did not succeed in doing it. The other member present was the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. So a majority of those present who could vote were those who had prejudged the case. So any report they made was just the same report that had been previously made without giving me a hearing.

F. B. I. REPORT MISLEADING

I think this report is misleading. This report says first that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had exonerated Byoir, but they overlook this fact, that the F. B. I. was only investigating one thing—and you can call the Department of Justice and confirm what I say—that is, whether or not Byoir was registered as a foreign agent after 1938 when the Registration Act was passed. That is all they were investigating, and they exonerated him of that, because Hitler had already found out that Byoir was Semitic and he was employed to distribute anti-Semitic literature, and Hitler had discharged him. Therefore, they could not find that he was representing Hitler in 1938 and thereafter, because he was not doing it. They exonerated him.

But this report of the F. B. I. is misleading. I do not think the committee should take a report like that. I think the committee should make the investigation themselves. I hope yet that the investigation is made and fully and completely and satisfactorily, because there is much proof that has never yet been presented.

For instance, the McCormack committee in 1935, when it made its report—and I want you gentlemen to listen to this—this is the report filed by the Honorable John W. McCormack, chairman; Samuel Dickstein; Charles Kramer; Thomas Jenkins; J. Will Taylor; and U. S. Guyer. In that report they stated, and this is the finding of the committee:

The committee found indisputable evidence to show that certain German consuls in this country, with all the appurtenance of diplomatic immunity, violated the pledge and proprieties of diplomatic status and engaged in vicious and un-American propaganda activities, paying for it in cash in the hope that it could not be traced.

And they cite the testimony where Byoir was paid with cash and distributed that vicious un-American propaganda. Do you need any more proof than that, my friends? I do not see that you do. Of course, the committee says, "We do not want to go back to that report. We do not want to consider anything that the McCormack committee did." I pleaded with them that they should do that, because there have been recent developments that connect up exactly with what happened during this investigation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to my friend from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think an accurate statement of the committee's position is not that it does not want to go back and examine those things, but that it feels that it is the job of the current committee to begin with the findings of the previous committee and proceed from that point. I know that for my own part I would be perfectly willing to say, and I do say, that I think it is utterly improper for anybody connected with the armed forces of the United States in any capacity to have connection with a foreign government or to become its agent for whatever reason, but that has already been made a part of the findings of the McCormack committee, as I understand it. Members of the Dies committee do not feel that we have a right to pass that in review again. I think that is the position of the committee.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman say that if a lieutenant colonel in the Army represented Hitler, as I have described, that he should not have done that, and that he should not remain a lieutenant colonel in the Army now?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I certainly think he should not have done it.

Mr. PATMAN. And that he should not remain a lieutenant colonel in the Army now?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. For my own part I do not think he should.

Mr. PATMAN. Now, I will take the gentleman's statement that he is willing to base his findings upon the McCormack committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The McCormack committee has already made its findings, and so far as I know about them I agree with them.

Mr. PATMAN. But they did not exonerate him. They convicted him. Then with what you have new, you ought to demand that he be put out of the Army. That is what I say. Remember that you did not have the information in the McCormack committee that he was a lieutenant colonel in the Army. That was not known then. This Dies committee knows it. There is all kinds of information pertaining to this matter that the McCormack committee put in the Congressional Library under seal with instructions that it shall not be inspected by any person, except in pursuance of a resolution passed by both Houses of Congress.

I could not see it, the Dies investigator could not see it, the Dies committee could not see it. But I wanted the Dies committee to introduce a resolution and get it passed and go there and see it. Why should they not do it? That is what I want to know. I just cannot understand that part of it. Now, I do not impugn the good intentions or the motives of any of these gentlemen. The only criticism I have to offer is the fact that they have not gone into this thing fully and completely as I, as one Member of this House, feel they should have done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As one who has voted I think on every appropriation that has been made for the Dies committee, the gentleman from Texas is giving me information that startles me. I think this matter should be put before the House when there is a quorum present. I do not intend to make a point of no quorum now, but I want to ask the gentleman this—I have never served on an investigating committee—is it the custom of investigating committees of the House acting under resolutions to be bound by previous investigating committees?

Mr. PATMAN. I never heard of it before. I have always heard before that they were supposed to take the information previous committees had obtained and use it if they could. That is the way I have always understood it. I do not see the use of having these committees if their work cannot be used in the future.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am sure the members of our committee would agree to that. My understanding of the statement made was, that what the McCormack committee had said, our committee agreed with it.

Mr. PATMAN. If the committee agreed with them, how could the committee exonerate him? I read further from your most recent report about this Byoir:

That contract was entered into for the promotion of trade and travel at a time when our Government was doing everything possible to promote trade relations.

In other words, you are building him up, you are exonerating him, you are boosting him, making a stump speech for him. There is where I take issue with you if you wanted to take the findings of the McCormack committee. You would not help him if you agreed with what the McCormack committee said. The McCormack committee said this:

Several American firms and American citizens sold their services for express propaganda purposes making their contracts with and accepting compensation from foreign business firms. The firms in question were Carl Byoir and associates, and Ivy Lee, and P. N. Ross.

There is a finding by the McCormack committee, Mr. Speaker. It cannot be said that this report is not true. The McCormack committee did investigate. They had the facts and sworn testimony to support their findings. After they convict him you come in and attempt to exonerate him.

May I invite your attention to the fact that there were more spies and "fifth columnists" brought into this country during the time Byoir was trying to sell Hitlerism in this country than at any other time in our history, and it would not surprise me if more things like this terrible explosion in the powder plant in New Jersey should happen by reason of activities of the very "fifth columnists" who commenced coming into this country at that time. This is a dangerous time, it is a time when you have got to consider whether you are going to have such a man a lieutenant colonel in our Army to administer the Compulsory Training Act—a man who has admittedly taken money from German consuls and Hitler himself to change and destroy our form of government in this country.

I cannot conceive how a committee of Congress can agree to any such report as that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to get this other point cleared up a little more fully.

Mr. PATMAN. Let me see how much time I have left. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair advise me how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. PATMAN. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] if he would object if I asked for 10 additional minutes?

Mr. STARNES. No.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that certain records of the McCormack committee are now filed in the Congressional Library but that the Dies committee cannot obtain them?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That the Dies committee cannot obtain them unless there is a special resolution specifically authorizing their being turned over to the Dies committee?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. To me this whole matter seems perfectly ridiculous. We are spending how much money for the Dies committee?

Mr. PATMAN. I am not familiar with it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield to permit some member of the committee to tell us?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not really think that is a matter of importance, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is important in this, that we are to be requested to appropriate additional funds for the Dies committee. At the time we do this we should see to it that we give the Dies committee authority to gain possession of these records that were collected by some previous committee. That is the reaction I get from the gentleman's statement. One further observation if the gentleman will permit: If a lieutenant colonel by the name of Carl Byoir is in the Army and he has participated in activities of this kind, then what kind of Army have we got so far as the officer personnel is concerned?

Mr. PATMAN. That is what I cannot understand.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think this whole matter is too serious to let pass without further investigation.

Mr. PATMAN. Let me read further what the McCormack committee said. And remember, about this testimony, that they first had executive meetings, secret meetings, to find out what they knew. Then later on they would bring out the part of it that they thought should be brought out; and the part that was not brought out is locked up in the Library of Congress now.

I suggest to the gentlemen of this committee that the Dies committee should rescind this report immediately and go to the Congressional Library after a resolution is passed authorizing them to do so and get these secret reports that have information on this very subject, then after more fully investigating, make your report. That is what I think you should do.

Let me tell you something else. The McCormack report further states:

> Carl Dickey, junior partner of Carl Byoir and associates, testified that his firm handled the contract with the German Tourist Bureau with the fee for services set at $6,000 per month. He testified that the contract was secured with the help of George Sylvester Viereck who received $1,750 per month with free office space and secretary as his share of the $6,000. The committee finds that the services rendered by Carl Byoir and associates were largely of a propaganda nature (pp. 33–67, D. C. 4).

The McCormack committee found further that the services rendered by Carl Byoir and associates were largely of a propaganda nature. It was not a tourist business. That is the front that all these "fifth columnists" use. When the F. B. I. obtained a conviction on the Pacific coast of the man representing the Russian Government, what was his title? A Russian tourist officer. That was his title and he bought Navy secrets. At the present time he and the one in the Navy who sold him the Navy secrets are sentenced to the penitentiary, and their case is on appeal. In South America where Germany is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars a month for propaganda purposes, what kind of a front do they use? Tourist-information offices.

They always use that as a front, because whatever is done in the country they say, "Well. we are helping trade and travel over in Germany and we have to have the good will of the people over here." They can do anything through the use of these tourist information offices as a front and the McCormack committee says it was a front, that Byoir was distributing propaganda in this country and he was hired by the German Government to do it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not think anybody will disagree with what the gentleman says about that. I am sure I do not disagree with it. I know these trade and travel agencies are used as fronts. I have already said I think it was improper for him to do what he did and, so far as I am concerned, I agree with the McCormack committee findings on that.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman then was not familiar with the facts the other day when he voted?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The point as it is put up to me is this: The McCormack committee has made its findings after its investigation and there is no reason for our committee to question those findings. As I have said, I accept them.

Mr. PATMAN. You find yourself coming back. You say that you should accept these findings. All right. Since these findings were made, which denounced him as the first German propagandist in this country, and the testimony shows the country was being filled up with "fifth columnists" during that time, and since that time, and while your committee was functioning it is discovered he is a lieutenant colonel in our Army, and he is high enough up to where he will probably be called upon to administer this compulsory training law, which we are about to pass, should you not put two and two together and make four out of it?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have already answered the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. I think you should. I know the gentleman's position. The gentleman from Alabama—and if I am wrong about this I want him to correct me—did not know anything about this case. He has not looked into it at all. He just merely presided. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who have already prejudged the case——

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Since the gentleman is making this speech, I am going to request unanimous consent to answer him in full. I do not think I should answer him in part. I think there is a complete and adequate answer to what the gentleman has said.

Mr. PATMAN. I would like to know what it is.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I am going to get time and tell what it is.

Mr. PATMAN. Then dispute this if it is not true——

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Let me ask you one question: This is the fifth time you have appeared on this floor, making the same charge against this man. Have you any personal animus?

Mr. PATMAN. Absolutely none. He has had plenty of reasons for having a personal grudge against me, but I do not hold those things. I would not bring a charge against any man by reason of personal venom. You think because he opposed a bill of mine I am prejudiced. He has opposed a lot of bills I favored.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. He is the man who had charge of the opposition which defeated the Patman bill.

Mr. PATMAN. He might have told you that.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. No; I know that is the fact.

Mr. PATMAN. I know all about that, too. I do not care who fights these bills. He would not be in favor of any bill that I introduced, I know that, because he represents the biggest companies of America. He represents the Mellon Aluminum Co. of America, and the Freeport Sulphur Co., and others. I could say that because I impeached Andrew Mellon and drove him from the Treasury that he has a personal feeling against me and I have a personal feeling against him because he represents them. He represents other big concerns. He says he represents American industry with assets of fourteen and one-half billion dollars. That is a lot of money and if it is true three or four fellows like him could control the national advertising in this country.

I want to plead with the gentleman of the Dies committee to lay aside any prejudgment of this case and just take the facts as they are. Byoir cannot deny that he represented the German consul. Byoir cannot deny and does not deny this testimony that I have been telling you about. Byoir cannot deny the contract was signed by Hitler's Minister of Propaganda. He cannot deny that his propaganda for Hitler was sent out all over this country at a time when "fifth columnists" were filling our land. He cannot deny any material allegation, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] does not deny it, because it is true.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Yes; I deny it, and I am going to get time to deny it.

Mr. PATMAN. He did not deny it, not at all.

Those are the material facts, and upon them I ask this committee to open up this case again and allow me the privilege of sitting in with them for the purpose of trying to arrive at a conclusion, not at a secret conference nor at an executive session, but that I may be called in and asked any question, because I know this case, and I believe that the committee—and I do not impugn their motives—made a mistake on it. I hope we do pass this resolution to get those records over in the Library and lay them on the table, and take this McCormack committee report, in connection with the fact that he is a lieutenant colonel, and then call upon the War Department to put him out of the Army, because we do not want him administering the Compulsory Training Act that will be passed by this Congress.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. IZAC. Is this Byoir an American citizen?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; he is an American citizen.

Mr. IZAC. Is he naturalized, or was he born here?

Mr. PATMAN. He was born here.

Mr. IZAC. He is not one of those whom the Germans deliberately sent over here to take out citizenship for the purpose of carrying on activities against this country?

Mr. PATMAN. No. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. But at the same time they were getting him as lieutenant colonel of the Army they were getting people to join the National Guard in the gentleman's home town and in New York, swearing that they were American citizens, when they really were aliens. They were filling up the guard from the highest to the lowest with this type of men. That is proof that cannot be disputed.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Has the gentleman laid this matter before the F. B. I.?

Mr. PATMAN. The F. B. I. would investigate only one phase of it. I asked them to investigate it, and they could investigate only one phase, and they frankly told me so; that is, whether or not he was registered as an agent representing a foreign government, or a foreign principal, after 1938, when the act was passed. Of course, they had to find that he is not guilty of failing to register, because he did not represent Hitler at that time. It was in 1933, 1934, and 1935.

Let me read you another paragraph from the McCormack report:

> German steamship lines not only brought over propaganda but transported back and forth certain American citizens without cost for the purpose of having them write and speak favorably of the German nation. German steamship companies' records show that some of these persons received free transportation at the request of the German Ambassador in the interest of the state. Members of the crews of the ships carried messages between party officials in Germany and leaders of the Nazi group here.

I appeal to the members of this committee in all sincerity, in view of this testimony that is undisputed, and that nobody can deny—Lieutenant Colonel Byoir does not deny the allegation; he cannot deny it to take this case back and look into it further. Of course, he would be expected to say something against me. That is a matter of small concern. I do not care anything about that, because it is the policy of people to do things like that. I do not care. I can take care of myself. But there is no allegation that I have made that is a material one that is disputed, and since it is not disputed, and since he is still a lieutenant colonel in the Army, I plead with this committee to rescind its resolution and again consider this matter, get a resolution through the two Houses to get these secret records in the Congressional Library that have been untouched by them or by any other person—and they are valuable right in this case—and then let me go into these parts where they have a doubt in their minds and lay aside everything else and see if we cannot arrive at the right conclusion. I plead with them to do that.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Has the gentleman asked the War Department Military Intelligence to investigate his charges?

Mr. PATMAN. I have not asked the Military Intelligence. I thought the F. B. I. would go into it, but I found out they would not. I thought this committee would go into it, because they have done a grand job on the Communists and the Fascists and on some of the Nazis, but I just feel that they failed to investigate this part that they should have investigated. I do not feel that they have gone into it fully and completely, and I say that in all seriousness and sincerity.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I believe the gentleman should ask the War Department through its Military Intelligence Section to investigate one of its own Reserve officers.

Mr. PATMAN. Investigate what, when you have the proof, sworn proof that is not denied? It is a question of whether or not you are willing to let a man administer this Draft Act who has admittedly been in the pay and in the employment of the German consul in New York and the German Government to distribute propaganda in this country. That is the only question involved. It is not a question that should be submitted to anybody except this committee.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I suggest to the gentleman that this Reserve officer, if guilty of these acts, is subject to court martial, and the proper place to ask for a court martial is the War Department.

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, the only connection I have with the War Department is through the appropriation bills here, but I am exercising my prerogative to ask our committee, for which we made appropriations, to go into this fully and completely, and investigate it thoroughly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it up to the Members of Congress to ask for a court martial if an officer is guilty?

Mr. PATMAN. No; it is not the duty of Members of Congress to do that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS of Arkansas). Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of the previous orders of the House I may be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from Foreign Affairs entitled "Dutch Indies Adrift," by Rupert Emerson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the general work of the special committee investigating un-American and subversive activities at this time or to make any detailed reply to the statement of my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY], who has been a member of the subcommittee investigating this Byoir incident and who prepared the report to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] refers, will make a reply thereto.

I hope with the indulgence of the House that sometime prior to the adjournment or the recess I will be permitted to give you a brief résumé of all of the activities of the committee this year, as they touch every phase of un-American and subversive activities. Insofar as the Byoir incident is concerned the chairman of the committee called me over long distance and asked me to preside and to receive the report of the subcommittee, which we did, and filed same. I know of no connection of Mr. Byoir with the German Government since 1935, and no member of our committee will condone any un-American or subversive activities on the part of any American citizen or any alien. Certainly no great liberal like the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE CASEY, or the gentleman from California, JERRY VOORHIS, would ever be accused of having the slightest degree of sympathy with any Nazi propagandist in this country, and those gentlemen are more familiar and conversant with the facts than I am. I have not sat either with the subcommittee or the full committee when the hearings were being held, and therefore I am not in a position to answer in detail any of the matters raised. I want to call your attention at this time to what I consider a very important matter, an attack upon the sacredness of the American ballot by the largest, the best financed, and the most dangerous dissident minority in this country—the Communist Party.

Mr. Speaker, I have a matter of the utmost importance, revealing more clearly, perhaps, than anything that has ever been shown before, just what the true nature of the Communist Party is and how it operates. This startling revelation has come about through the investigations of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is chairman. It is, in my opinion, the most important revelation which has been made by that committee during the present year. It establishes beyond any possibility of doubt that the Communist Party has been guilty of perpetrating gigantic fraud upon thousands of the plain people of many States. The Communist Party has put up the shameful pretense that it is the protector of the rights and interests of these plain working people. It now appears that it is, above all things else, their wanton deceiver. The Communist Party has been whining about an alleged denial of its civil liberties. I shall show that it has been trampling upon the civil liberties of tens of thousands of American citizens who have not known how to protect themselves against its lying and criminal misrepresentations. I shall show that scores, and perhaps hundreds, of these guilty Communist Party members are now under indictment and on their way to prison as the result of this revelation made by the Dies committee.

In May of this year our committee obtained some evidence indicating the possible existence of trickery, fraud, and misrepresentation in getting signatures to its nominating petitions. There seemed to be a clear lead to an exposure of the party's wholesale corruption of the ballot—the most sacred instrument of our democracy, the very basis of all our civil liberties.

Immediately our committee instituted an investigation in a number of States—in Maryland, in West Virginia, in Pennsylvania, in Kentucky, in New Jersey, and in Ohio. We obtained photostatic copies of the Communist Party's nominating petitions which had been filed with the various secretaries of state.

Acting upon the partial evidence in our possession, evidence which showed the existence of fraud and misrepresentation, we addressed a letter, over the signature of the chairman of the committee, to every individual whose name appeared on one of these nominating petitions. We inquired of him whether or not he had actually signed the petition himself and whether or not his name had been placed on the petition without his knowledge or consent. In order that the record may show precisely what we sent to these "petitioners," I wish to insert in the RECORD at this point a copy of the letter which was addressed to the individuals whose names appeared on the petitions in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. In June the committee mailed some 26,000 letters to individuals in Pennsylvania.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert this letter in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR OR MADAM: The committee has received a number of complaints, both in affidavit form and otherwise, by persons complaining that their names have been fraudulently used by the Communist Party. An examination of the public records of the nomination papers in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shows that your name and address appear on the petition as an elector. These nomination papers read as follows: "We, the undersigned, all of whom are qualified electors * * * representing the Communist Party or policy, hereby nominate the following persons." We therefore write to inquire if you actually placed your name on this petition or whether it was placed on the petition without your knowledge or consent.

The purpose of this letter is not to make public your name in connection with this matter, but since many instances of fraud and irregularities in connection with these petitions have been brought to the attention of the committee we are seeking to discover to what extent people's names have been improperly used by the Communist Party.

Therefore we would appreciate your advising us immediately if there has been any irregularity in this matter, so far as the use of your name is concerned. Address your communication to Dies Committee, Room 529, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Sincerely yours,

MARTIN DIES,
Chairman, Special Committee on Un-American Activities.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Within 24 hours after the mailing of these letters the committee's offices in the House Office Building were deluged with thousands and thousands of replies from the people of Pennsylvania. These letters advised the committee that thousands of people had never actually signed such a petition, that they had no knowledge whatsoever of the petition, and that they were at a loss to understand why their names appeared thereon. Other thousands of replies from people stated that they had signed a petition but that it had been misrepresented to them, and that at the time of signing they had been led to believe that it was a petition for better housing, for playgrounds, for the lowering of gas rates, for the third term, and for scores of other causes.

In a few moments I shall read to the Members of the House some of the letters received from these people, and you may judge for yourselves whether or not the Communist Party has been victimized by a denial of its civil liberties. On the other hand, you may judge for yourselves whether or not these senders of the letters have been victimized by the fraud, lies, and misrepresentation of the agents of Moscow.

The evidence is plain that hundreds of names were written on these petitions in the same handwriting. As an illustration of this, in Kentucky there appeared on the petitions filed with the secretary of state 658 cases of duplication of handwriting. In other words, forgery was compounded 658 times over within the limits of a relatively small number of signatures. Is forgery one of the civil liberties for which the Communist Party clamors? Is forgery one of the constitutional rights which some misguided liberals claim on behalf of Earl Browder and his associates?

Our investigation also shows that the names of people who have been dead from 10 to 15 years appear on the petitions—deceased persons who had probably never heard of the Communist Party, or certainly would not have subscribed to its program if they had ever heard of it. Is the besmirching of the names of the deceased one of the civil liberties for which the Communist Party clamors? Is defilement of the memory of the dead one of the constitutional rights which some misguided liberals claim on behalf of Browder?

In some instances the names of children not over 2 years of age have been placed on these petitions. Is such abuse of infants one of the civil liberties for which the Communist Party clamors? Do these misguided liberals allege a constitutional right for the Communist Party to link the names of mere babies with its criminal conspiracy?

Furthermore, some 15,000 letters which the committee sent out have been returned unclaimed—no such persons, no such addresses. Is the fraudulent manufacture of names and addresses one of the civil liberties for which the Communist Party clamors? Do misguided liberals claim a constitutional right for the Communist Party so to corrupt the ballot?

Our investigation has disclosed that the same frauds were practiced by the Communist Party in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland, and the other States. I am happy to report to the House that this gigantic fraud of the Communist Party has not gone unchallenged in these States. The law-enforcement agencies in these States have responded promptly to Moscow's challenge of our democratic processes. Following our exposé in Pennsylvania, the local prosecuting authorities and the grand juries began a series of investigations.

As a result of these local investigations in Allegheny County, in Pennsylvania, a grand jury early in July indicted 43 persons who had circulated these Communist Party petitions, charging deceit, false statements under oath, and fraudulent representation. These indictments charged 31 with perjury, 32 with conspiracy, and 20 with obtaining signatures on false pretenses. Similar indictments have been handed down in other counties in Pennsylvania. Are perjury, conspiracy, and false pretense among the civil liberties for which the Communist Party clamors? Are these crimes against the voting laws of our States to be defended by misguided liberals who echo the howls of the Daily Worker about the persecution of minorities? Do these misguided liberals want to be known henceforth as fellow howlers of the Communist Party?

In one county in Pennsylvania the Communist Party raised overnight $100,000 in cash and in property forfeits to bail out 36 men and women who were under indictment in connection with obtaining the signatures to these petitions. Whence this easy opulence of the Communist Party? I want to state again, as I have often done before, that the Communist Party is better financed than either of the major political parties in the United States.

Our investigation in Pennsylvania disclosed that some of the petitions in that State were circulated by a Miss Dorothy Slome, alias Sloan. Miss Slome was among those indicted by the grand jury in Allegheny County. Until yesterday—yesterday, mark you—Miss Slome was employed here in Washington in the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Here we are preparing to defend the borders of America against any eventuality and we find a woman indicted for Communist activities at work in an activity of the Federal Government which plays a vital and important role in the defense of America.

I am gratified to advise the House that this indicted Communist was discharged "with prejudice" yesterday from the service of the Civil Aeronautics Authority—discharged for her Communist activities. The Civil Aeronautics Authority advised the committee they would take similar action in all cases wherein their employees were engaged in un-American and subversive activities. It is my profound belief, based upon concrete evidence, that we have not yet begun to take with sufficient seriousness the menace of the "fifth column." Are we to repeat the tragic mistakes of France, whose downfall, according to Secretary of the Navy Knox, Colonel Donovan, and Ambassador Bullitt, was so largely attributable to her coddling of "fifth columnists"? The American Peace Mobilization is Stalin's newest Trojan horse. It is the successor of the American League for Peace and Democracy. The American Peace Mobilization has one aim, and one aim only—to combat all efforts to bring this country into a state of preparedness equal to the international emergency with which we are confronted. The Washington Peace Mobilization, which is the local branch of the American Peace Mobilization, is by and large composed of the very same individuals whose names we published a year ago as members of the American League for Peace and Democracy.

I do not charge that those who are affiliated with the American Peace Mobilization are committing any overt acts of an illegal nature. They are, however, now engaged in what has become known as the softening process of the "fifth column." The softening process precedes overt acts, and continues up until the zero hour. In every country of Europe where the "fifth columns" of Stalin and Hitler did their work the softening process went on for months and even years before Stalin and Hitler struck with their military machines. The very heart of the softening process in these countries was to fight in every possible way—usually in strictly legal ways—all measures of national preparedness against the dictators. France might have fallen before the "blitzkrieg" of Hitler even without the softening process of the Nazi and Communist "fifth columnists," but there is absolutely no doubt about the fact that Hitler's conquest of the once most powerful country on the European Continent was greatly facilitated by that softening process.

All of this may seem to some to be a digression from the matter of the gigantic fraud of the Communist Party's nominating petitions. It is not a digression. It is evidence of the highly important fact that Stalin's conspiracy is amazingly synchronized and disciplined—organized on every front to undermine, wherever possible, the security of the United States. In one place it is an undermining of the ballot through fraud; in another place it is the undermining of our military defenses. Wherever it functions, it is the same organiation set up to destroy American institutions.

In the State of West Virginia, as a result of our exposure and of the efforts of the American Legion, Oscar Wheeler, the Communist Party's gubernatorial candidate, was sentenced to from 6 to 15 years in the penitentiary for fraud in failing to reveal the identity of the political party for which he was collecting signatures on the nominating petitions. Six others were indicted with Wheeler on the same charge. One hundred and fifty were indicted for voting in a primary after signing the Communist Party petition. The upshot in West Virginia has been that the supreme court of that State has ruled the Communist Party off the ballot.

On August 29 the committee made public the results of its investigation of the Communist petitions in Maryland. Immediately following this, Gov. Herbert O'Conor and State's Attorney J. Bernard Wells began an investigation based upon the evidence which the committee had compiled. Governor O'Conor ordered a further inquiry into the alleged Communist fraud and ordered the certification of the Communist Party on the Maryland ballot held up pending the outcome of his inquiry.

In Maryland the Communist Party had worked mostly among the Negro population. Our committee received hundreds of letters from these Negro people denying that they had signed the petitions or, in cases where they had signed, advising that they had done so on the representation that it was for better housing, the abolition of lynching, and so forth. The same kind of fraud and misrepresentation appeared in Maryland as in the other States, and the matter is now being presented to the grand jury in Baltimore.

Last week our committee made public its findings in Kentucky, which showed that there were hundreds of duplications, the use of the names of deceased persons, the use of the names of minors, and so forth. It is my understanding that the law-enforcement authorities in Kentucky will make an investigation in that State.

In Ohio the Communist Party filed petitions containing the names of some 34,000 persons. The secretary of state in Ohio has furnished our committee with copies of the petitions, and already thousands of people from that State are writing us repudiating their signatures on the ground that they were induced to sign by fraudulent means. The Communist Party has been ruled off the ballot in Arkansas and declared to be illegal in Arizona. In fact, a recent survey by our committee shows that the party is on the ballot in only a few States, namely, in Maine, California, Kentucky, Michigan, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Montana by certificate, Texas by certificate. In Virginia, where petitions are not required, only two persons have filed.

Since our exposure of these frauds perpetuated wholesale by the Communist Party there has been much shouting about persecution, the violation of civil liberties, and the intimidation of minority parties. There is not a man in this House who will not defend with every ounce of his ability the civil liberties of the people of this country; but civil liberties are one thing, while fraud and misrepresentation are another.

The National Lawyers Guild has addressed a communication to the Attorney General of the United States suggesting an injunction against our committee to restrain us from conducting our investigation into these petition frauds. That was to be expected of the National Lawyers Guild. I remind this House that the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Adolph Berle, resigned not long ago from the National Lawyers Guild on the ground that the organization was unwilling to take any action contrary to the Communist Party line. If Mr. Berle was right in the action which he took—and there is conclusive evidence to show that he was right—what are we to say about the Government employees right here in Washington, men in the legal profession, who still retain their membership in the lawyers' guild—the organization branded by Mr. Berle as dominated by the Communist Party line? In one Federal Government agency alone there are 55 attorneys who hold membership in this Communist-dominated lawyers' guild. Are we to understand that these Federal employees uphold the action of their organization in rushing to the support of the Communist Party and its gigantic petition frauds? If they do not uphold the move, when are they going to follow the example of Mr. Berle and sever their connections with this faithful adherent of the Muscovite line?

Let me read to the Members of this House a few of the replies which our committee has received from the defrauded citizens of the several States where the Communist Party petitions have been circulated.

From Pennsylvania one person writes:

I am writing in regard to this letter. The only thing I ever signed was a paper brought around to the door which I was told was for the benefit of the milk fund for poor children.

Another one from Pennsylvania:

I was profoundly shocked today by the printing of my name in the Pittsburgh Press as a signer of a Communist petition. I am not a Communist, have never been one, and I have no intention of being one. * * *

About this time Dorothy Slome, employed in the same service as I, the Pennsylvania State Bureau of Employment and Unemployment Commission, asked me to sign a petition. I did so as a personal favor without realizing I was doing anything unusual or to the apparent purpose of the petition.

Another letter, from which I quote, in part:

Some woman appeared at the door and told us she was applying for a school playground for the children.

They signed a petition for the Communist Party to be placed on the ballot on that specious ground.

The committee has thousands of such letters in its possession, and we welcome any Member of the House to the committee office to investigate those letters and read them for themselves, and see what a wholesale fraud was perpetrated.

Let us go to the State of Kentucky:

I have received a letter of inquiry from your office addressed to my late husband. My husband was a minister, and has been dead for more than 9 years.

Another from Kentucky:

This is to certify that at no time have I been connected with the above-named party, nor given my name, nor consented for my name to be used. I was never approached on this matter.

Another letter from Kentucky:

I signed one petition indicating that I favored aid to the Allies of everything short of sending over an Army. That is all.

That is a little unusual.

Another letter from the State of Kentucky; from which I quote, in part:

I have never at any time signed any petition for anything, nor have I at any time authorized anyone to sign by name to any petition of the nature described. Since receiving your letter I went to see the secretary of state at Frankfort for the purpose of looking at the petition. I find my name forged to two Communist petitions, one for the Presidential electors State-at-large petition, the other Paul J. Kellogg, United States Senator.

Here is another one from Kentucky:

I am really shocked by two people coming around some time ago with paper and pencils telling the Negro people that they were supporters for the President of the United States.

From West Virginia I quote in part from a letter:

I did not give my name to be used in anything. A woman came around one Sunday morning. I met her in the road. She told me she was heading a committee to get the colored people better acquainted with each other.

Here is another from West Virginia:

My wife signed a petition which was misrepresented, saying it was for better jobs for boys and girls when finishing high school.

Another from West Virginia:

The man that came to my house had a paper and told me it was for to take loading machines out of all mines and would make more work for all the miners.

Another from West Virginia:

I cannot write; not even my own name.

Another from West Virginia:

I did sign a paper on which there was a list of names only, said paper being a sheet or batch of sheets or a tablet, on which no printing and writing was visible. Said petition purported to be a petition for a radio program for relief and for the benefit of old-age pensions.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. In my own district, the only district in which the Communist Party filed a petition—Philadelphia—out of the signatures they had there were only found 12 to be genuine by our district attorney.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. SACKS. And it was uncovered as a result of the letters you wrote into the district to the people who purported to sign, and the result of that investigation showed that only 12 were Communists and knew they signed a Communist petition.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, and I want to assure him that in my district, at least, and in fact the whole State of Pennsylvania, he has made a very fine contribution. I happen to have opposing me a Communist candidate for Congress, who was sentenced to 26 years in Alcatraz because it was definitely proved that while he was in the United States Army he was on Stalin's pay roll and was the representative of Russia.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. COX. I would like to take this opportunity to applaud the gentleman and his colleagues for the very fine work his committee has been doing. I am wondering if the committee, with the support that has come from the people throughout the country at large, and the splendid record which the committee has made, has finally overcome the resistance with which the committee was met, coming from high places in the Government.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. May I say to the gentleman that we are receiving more cooperation at the present time than we have ever received.

Mr. COX. In other words, the abuse that the committee was subjected to has finally subsided and there is now an indication to get behind and give support to the committee?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I think that is an accurate statement.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion, in view of all the fraud and chicanery that has been proven in connection with the circulation of petitions to get the Communist Party on the ballot in Pennsylvania. The fact that they have not been taken off of the ballot is what I am referring to. I was just wondering how much it was going to require to prevent them from following practices like that to get a ballot in the field?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I thank the gentleman for that. I shall attempt to answer in my closing statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman not believe it would help his committee if the candidate of his party would say as Willkie said that he does not want any support from the Communists or those who are stirring up class hatred?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I think that all American citizens running for public office should make such a statement, whether it be for the office of President or that of constable.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman, of course, is familiar with such changes in names following the activities of the gentleman's committee as that of the Hollywood Anti-Nazi League changing its name to the Hollywood League for Peace and Democracy; and has he not noticed also that the writings of Donald Ogden Stewart in the paper of that league have been very different in tone?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. We have that in our committee files, and we have also compiled a list of more than 100 apparently bona fide local peace organizations. They have sprung up in various sections of the country and are merely variations of the old scheme fostered by the American League for Peace and Democracy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes in order to complete my statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I am sure that these letters arouse in this body a great and righteous indignation against a foreign-controlled conspiracy which perpetrates the kind of fraud which has been reflected in these letters which I have read. If the Members of this House could read the thousands upon thousands of similar letters which we have received, that indignation would rise to the boiling point.

Despite the clearest evidence of crime, the Communist Party has the effrontery, through its various Trojan-horse organizations and through the media of its own publications, to shout about the denial of civil liberties. The party's principal medium for this purpose is known as the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. I hold here in my hand a letter which every Member of this House received from this organization. That letter was accompanied by a circular which has a section setting forth alleged violations of rights of minority parties. That identical document appeared in the Communist Party's newspaper, the Daily Worker, on the same day, September 6, that it was forwarded to the Members of this House. I show you the copy of the Daily Worker and the circular sent out by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, and ask you to draw your own conclusions.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a list of names of the members of the board of directors, the governing body of this organization, and the groups with which they are now affiliated or have been affiliated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Let us look at the record of the personnel of this National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. A more completely Communist-dominated Trojan horse has not yet appeared. The multiple connections of its officers with other Communist Trojan horses will make this crystal clear as we take them up one by one.

Owen A. Knox, chairman: Also connected with the Civil Rights Federation of Detroit, the Committee To Defend America by Keeping Out of War, the Emergency Peace Mobilization, the International Labor Defense, the Jewish People's Committee, the Joint Committee for Trade Union Rights, the Joint Committee of Trade Unions in Social Work, the National Committee for People's Rights, and the National Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America.

Mr. Speaker, I have cited scores of organizations with which the officers of this National Federation for Constitutional Liberties have been connected. Many, if not all of these organizations belong in the category of Communist Trojan horses, Communist "united fronts," Communist "transmission belts," or what have you. These varied and numerous connections establish the character of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.

To my mind, we have in the matter of these petition frauds an excellent illustration of the true character of the Communist Party; an agency which does not hesitate to employ any means to accomplish its sinister ends. That doctrine that the end justifies the means is one of the chief principles of the Communist Party. It is to be hoped that the disclosures of our committee will result in thorough investigations by the proper authorities in every State where this outrage has been committed, to the end that every person who was duped into placing his name on these petitions will be cleared.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the Communist Party is not a bona fide political party but an agent of Moscow, financed and controlled by the foreign dictator Stalin. Therefore, I submit that the United States Government and the respective State governments should act immediately to outlaw the Communist Party and brand it for what it is—a foreign conspiracy seeking to overthrow our form of Government. [Applause.]

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. One of the things that impresses me about the communications I have received, and I am sure it has been the experience of other Members of this body likewise, has been the apparent willingness of the people to get behind any movement to dispose of the Trojan horses in the Nation and the Communist element. These people seem to feel that deportation will take care of it. Has the gentleman's committee been able to reach any deduction as to what percentage are not alien born but are native Americans, not subject to the punishment of deportation?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The real leadership of the Communist Party, as well as the leadership of the German-American Bund and the Fascist and Nazi Parties in this country, have been aliens. Some have become naturalized citizens not for the purpose of becoming good citizens but only for the purpose of throwing around themselves the cloak of the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech and the press to protect themselves against deportation. The rank and file, however, is composed of misguided American citizens, some of them in the substrata of economic life in this country. On the other hand so far as the Communists are concerned, not only are they in the substrata economically but many are found in the so-called intelligentsia who are swept off their feet by the dreams they have of state socialism.

Mr. PATRICK. Then viewed from a percentage basis it does not seem as if deportation would go very far toward curing it.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. That is true. As I stated at the outset of my remarks that I hope I may have the indulgence of the House prior to recess or adjournment in order to give the House a brief résumé of what our committee has been doing. And I will also offer some suggestions for remedial legislation. We must do everything we can prior to the national election to protect the integrity of the ballot. I want to congratulate the respective State Governors on the dispatch with which they have acted to meet this challenge of the attempted corruption of the American ballot which is one of our most sacred institutions.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes; I am glad to yield to my colleague from California, a member of the committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to a statement he made a moment ago for I believe he did not intend to leave the impression I am afraid it might have left.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes. He is making one of the most interesting speeches we have heard in several days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman said that in the case of the Communist Party there were a lot of people in good economic circumstances who had fallen for the propaganda. I am sure the gentleman would not want to leave the impression that was true only of the Communist Party. Certainly the same thing is true of the Nazi movement and the Fascist movement. You have in those movements a certain number of people who are certainly not poor or in an economically distressed group.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes. The Nazi and Fascist movements are composed almost entirely of people who are intelligent enough to know better and they do not belong to this substrata economically.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Some time ago as a result of investigation made by the gentleman's committee some five-hundred-odd names were published as being members of a Communist organization, all of whom were also employees of the Federal Government, if the gentleman will remember that list of names.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I recall that the committee published a list of names of the purported membership of the Washington branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That was a Communist organization?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. It was a Communist-controlled organization.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Can the gentleman tell me what was done to clear the Government rolls of those employees or what was done to correct that situation?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot say. The membership list was made public. It was called to the attention of every responsible party in this Government of ours and every citizen of the Government of ours through the press and radio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Are they still employed by the Government? Does the gentleman know whether or not they are still on the pay roll of the United States Government?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. That I do not know.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that about 10 days or 2 weeks ago Mr. Earl Browder announced his intention of favoring us in Tennessee with a visit. We favored Mr. Browder with the statement that if he came to Tennessee he would be removed immediately. He canceled his proposed address in my home town, Nashville.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. I would like to bear out another fact in connection with a list that was prepared in my district. I had a list made up, and I find that those who opposed my vote on conscription and who were sending me letters were some of the very names that were on a Communist petition which was signed and were some of the same persons who were active in perpetrating frauds on the poor people who signed that petition in my district.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Undoubtedly much of the propaganda with which this Congress has been deluged in the past month with reference to our legislation providing for an adequate national defense and our effort to prepare for any eventuality and to provide adequate security for our Nation and its institutions has been brought upon us by Communist front organizations, by the Communist Party, and the German-American Bund.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. I am glad to hear the statement of the gentleman from Alabama and to inform him that the Communist Party has been ruled off the ballot in Ohio.

In connection with the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, may I say that, while I have received letters from thousands of people against conscription, I have also received letters from many leading Democrats in my own community against conscription as well.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Certainly. I did not mean to infer that many of these letters were not genuine. They came from every walk of life, from every movement, from men of every political faith, and from every religious creed, but there was an effort on the part of these so-called American peace organizations to have the Congress deluged with these letters.

Mr. PATRICK. May I call this to the attention of the Republicans in all sincerity: They have charged the Democrats with having too much common interest with communistic groups because sometimes they attached to our side of a measure. We would like to say, not charging them with intentionally doing so, that the same group has been alined with gentlemen who were supporting the minority, so far as conscription is concerned, and they are having the same difficulty that we have been having when they charged it up to us. We would like for them to feel that we were just as free from any intentional alliance as they were in their case.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Communists will aline themselves with any political party or any movement if they can further their own interests.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. So far as I have heard the gentleman's statement, it shows that in nearly every instance it was the Democratic officials who started to indict, prosecute, and put an end to these frauds on the part of communistic people; is that not right?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Frankly, I do not know. I do not want to get into the realm of partisan politics in this discussion.

Mr. SABATH. Well, the question has been asked.

[Here the gavel fell.]

MRS. AGNES BYERS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I submit a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mrs. Agnes Byers, widow of John H. Byers, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation and an additional amount not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said John H. Byers.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

1 insurance company received over $254,000 in Agricultural Adjustment Administration payments in 1 year. 1 corporation farm received $112,000 in 1938 and $122,000 in 1939. Actual farmers received very small amounts.

States:

Washington, D. C	$66,110,574
Undistributed	289,696,774
Total	3,294,215,571

Number of farms in the United States, 6,812,530; or $48 average per farm per year.

This factual information is presented from a nonpartisan standpoint. These figures easily convince anyone that the A. A. A. checks are distributed on an unfair, unjust basis.

REMARKS AND DEDUCTIONS

First. One State had over one-eighth of the amount of the total subsidies.

Second. These checks are not allocated on a basis of common sense or on the basis of common justice.

Third. True soil conservation is most desirable. A farmer can deplete the fertility of the most productive, fertile farm in America and still get these New Deal checks. This is more a New Deal conservation than a soil-conservation program.

Fourth. What elements are being conserved, is a pertinent question that seems difficult for new dealers to answer.

Fifth. The big corporation farmers of Hawaii received $918 per farm per year and the farmers of the rock-ribbed State of New Hampshire only had $9 per farm per year, and the West Virginia farmers had but $7 per farm per year.

Sixth. This money is all borrowed money. The public debt has bee nincreased by twenty-one billions and the farmers will have to repay over $6,000,000,000 as their share of the increased public debt. Farmers are entitled to this borrowed money for subsidies as long as other groups are receiving a subsidy. The New Deal has put a $1,000 invisible mortgage on every farm in the United States.

Seventh. The New Deal pays farmers or gives them checks of borrowed money for controlling crop production. The New Deal also appropriates 10 times as many millions to put more land under irrigation; spends millions to subsidize exports; drives thousands of farmers from their homes by foreclosures and builds migratory camps for them after they have dispossessed them. This is done right in the face of the millions of A. A. A. subsidy checks.

Eighth. These checks of $48 average make a large total but do not offset the losses from the low agricultural prices prevailing under the New Deal. Butter and cheese are 25 to 30 percent below pre-New Deal prices. This loss per farm is many times the A. A. A. checks.

Ninth. The New Deal drove more farmers from their farms in Wisconsin—both in number and percentage—than were ever dispossessed before in any year in the history of the Federal land bank.

While these 91,135 farmers were being driven from their farms because they could not pay $112 interest on an average $2,800 mortgage, the New Deal was building 90,436 housing units for their city cousins that cost $4,359 per unit, and pay $193 per year of the rent for the next 60 years. More families were driven from their homes by the New Deal than new homes were provided by the New Deal, and the public debt was increased by $1,680,000,000.

Tenth. The New Deal lowered the tariff on farm products. The result was increased imports. Agricultural exports are the lowest in the history of the country. The New Deal is evidently anxiously waiting for election so they can make a trade agreement with Argentina and import still more cheap farm products.

Eleventh. The New Deal should turn the relief back to the relief agencies, the politics back to the politicians, and the Agricultural Department back to agriculture. It should not degenerate into a New Deal propaganda mill.

Twelfth. The McNary-Haugen philosophy for agriculture should be given consideration and trial, and if price fixing is to continue it should include agriculture as well as other groups.

The leader of the New Deal also twice vetoed bills to reduce the interest rate to farmers. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

CARL BYOIR

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to answer the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] with respect to his statements regarding the Dies committee's investigation of Mr. Carl Byoir. We may as well discuss this matter at this time. We are waiting for the Senate to pass upon conscription, and this is a most interesting subject. I know of no way of getting it before the Members of the House in any better fashion than to recite the story chronologically.

Mr. Carl Byoir was born in, I think, Des Moines and I am sure of the State, Iowa. His is the story of a poor boy who worked his way up in the business world. He became very prominent in the field of advertising or propaganda, which now has a very sinister connotation. In fact, he did some work for President Wilson away back when President Wilson went over to France on his peace mission. It was Carl Byoir who gathered data in Czechoslovakia and other conquered countries to present to President Wilson. He occupied a high position on the American publicity staff during the last World War. He was an assistant, I believe, to Mr. Creel, who was in charge of publicity at that time. So you do not have the picture of some sinister "fifth columnist" in the background so far.

Mr. Byoir became a publicity man for a great many large concerns in America whose assets add up to billions of dollars. In 1933—mark the year—Mr. Byoir entered into a contract with the German Tourist Agency to advertise Germany, its scenic beauties and its attractions, to the American public. Keep the year in mind—1933, not 1940. At that time the American Government itself was trying to promote friendly relations with Germany. It was a little later than that time that Mr. Lindbergh and Mr. Ford received medals from the German Government. I am just trying to give you the proper background and the perspective and the surroundings under which Mr. Byoir entered into this contract with the German Travel Agency.

This contract was a continuing contract under which Mr. Byoir did actually disseminate literature and the story of the natural scenic beauties and other attractions of Germany. In 1935 he broke that contract. Mr. Byoir broke the contract because Germany then was pursuing a policy with which he had no sympathy. The McCormack committee investigated this situation and this contract and found nothing un-American about the contract. In fact, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] who was a member of the McCormack committee and who could hardly be charged with being pro-Nazi, issued a statement in which he commended the patriotism of Carl Byoir in breaking off his contract with the German Tourist Agency.

Time went on, and Mr. Byoir numbered among his clients the A. & P. chain-store organization and other big business concerns. Our friend and colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] had an anti-chain-store bill that was not entirely without merit. It became Mr. Byoir's job to organize the opposition before the Committee on Ways and Means, and he did organize it.

Even up in my district, I believe, he summoned witnesses who had large apple orchards to come down here and testify as to the way the chain stores bought up surplus apples that had fallen during the hurricane. From all over the country Mr. Byoir drew witnesses, and he had charge of a parade of witnesses before the Committee on Ways and Means in opposition to the chain-store bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

This opposition was successful, not to the great delight of our friend and colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. After that, the gentleman from Texas appeared on this floor at least five times, and I think six times, and made charges against Mr. Byoir's Americanism. As a result of these charges, a subcommittee was appointed by Chairman Dies, and this subcommittee consisted of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and myself. We went into the story as fully as we could. We went into the McCORMACK hearings and findings. We went into the F. B. I. investigation, and the F. B. I. found nothing un-American about Mr. Byoir's activities. We had an agent investigate every phase of it, including Mr. Byoir's private papers and private contracts in New York. This was an agent and investigator of the Dies committee. As a result of the subcommittee's hearings and investigations the following finding was made by the subcommittee, and it was signed by the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. JOHN J. DEMPSEY; the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. JOSEPH E. CASEY; and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. N. M. MASON. It was sent to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] at Beaumont, Tex.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15, 1940.

The subcommittee you appointed to investigate the un-American activity charges made against Mr. Carl Byoir, after carefully going over the report of our special investigator, Mr. Stedman, and also after consulting the files of the F. B. I. in the case, find nothing to justify the charges made, nor any evidence that could possibly form a basis for such charges. We therefore find satisfaction in clearing Mr. Carl Byoir of the charges made against him and recommend that a resolution covering a complete exoneration of Mr. Byoir be voted by the full committee as soon as possible, such resolution to be based upon this subcommittee report. We also believe you should in fairness to Mr. Byoir give immediate publicity to the subcommittee findings.

JOHN J. DEMPSEY, M. C.
JOSEPH E. CASEY, M. C.
N. M. MASON, M. C.

This finding was made public. Then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] took issue with the finding of the subcommittee and said it had not conducted a full and complete investigation, and demanded a hearing before the full Dies committee. Because he is a Member of Congress and a colleague of ours and a gentleman we all knew, we went out of our way to be fair, and, after making this finding, gave him a hearing before the full Dies committee. Presiding over that committee was the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MARTIN DIES, who comes from the same State of Texas. During the hearing he said to me, "This is most embarrassing, because the gentleman is a colleague of mine and comes from the same State."

He said, "How would you feel if you were confronted with a situation where your colleague, JOHN MCCORMACK, had you on the spot?" My answer was that JOHN MCCORMACK would not be JOHN MCCORMACK if he ever found himself in that position.

Now, the full committee gave the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] hour after hour of time in making a charge against Mr. Byoir. He went into statements against the Nazi government, against Mr. Hitler, and there was no attempt to tie him down to relevancy or to competency as far as evidence was concerned. He roamed all over the field, and at the conclusion of this hearing the full committee met in executive session and found there was no basis for the charges. So I say, Mr. Speaker, here we have the gentleman from Texas showing the tenacity of a leech. Despite all these hearings before friendly tribunals he continues to cling to his untenable position.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Who was present at the full committee at the close of the hearings when they found him not guilty of the charges?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. There were the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. PATMAN. That was a different time. I understood that after the hearing was over that day the committee met that day without the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. After the hearing was over there were the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. PATMAN. Did the gentleman mean to say they passed on it at the end of the hearing?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Not right at the end of the hearing. We met afterwards in a room here and decided there was no basis for your charges.

Mr. PATMAN. And the gentleman means that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] was present at that time?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] was present.

The gentleman continues to take the floor and continues to make statements about Mr. Byoir, and, oh, yes, he would have you believe that Mr. Byoir is a lieutenant colonel in the Regular Army. He is an officer in the Reserve and has never been in the Regular Army.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When I was interrogating the gentleman from Texas I understood, not by reason of something he said, but I just let my own mind run into that line of thought, that Mr. Byoir was an active officer at the time this occurred, and also at the present time. I knew nothing about his connections as a propagandist. Let me ask this question. Has he ever been active in the Army?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. He has been in the Reserve service ever since 1931.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And on what basis was he granted this official recognition as an officer in the Reserves?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. He had done some work for the Government in public relations and he had worked with Creel. It was not something that bobbed up overnight.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Could the gentleman tell us his position at the present time?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Lieutenant colonel in the Reserves.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What position in civil life does he have at the present time?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. He has this office over in New York as publicity relations man for a great many businesses throughout the country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman very much.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 more minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. So I simply say this in conclusion: The gentleman from Texas has had an airing of these charges before the F. B. I., the McCormack committee, a subcommittee of the Dies committee, and a full committee of the Dies committee, and he still continues to make statements on the floor.

Now, gentlemen, you can, under the cloak of immunity, say things about a man and if that man is not a Member of Congress he has no opportunity to answer. You can bring about widespread publication of your charges because you say them here and the victim has no redress.

You can cut men's throats with that kind of tactics. You have the power but you have not got the right.

I have this to say in conclusion. The whole situation is simply one in which an aggrieved individual, cloaked in congressional immunity, seeks to use Congress as a sounding board for his own personal spleen.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I, as a humble member of the Republican Party, would like to get 5 minutes. If the gentleman from Texas is going to speak all the afternoon——

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts, anyhow.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, two or three more of us would like 4 or 5 minutes. You have had an hour over there now.

BYOIR CASE PREJUDGED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] is in this position, that he and the other members of the subcommittee decided this case without hearing me, and I had plenty of proof and I have more proof than has ever been presented, but I feel I presented enough. After they had prejudged the case, when I went before them I was in the position of asking the judges to change their minds. Of course, that is a very difficult thing to do. I made it plain in the beginning that I am not impugning the motives or questioning the motives of any member of that committee. I am just saying that they made a mistake in not going into that case completely.

It is not taking advantage of your congressional immunity to quote, as I have, the report of a congressional committee and the testimony before a congressional committee. Any statement to the contrary is not true. Any man who represents $14,500,000,000 will never be without defenders in any body—even Congress. You have often heard you cannot convict a million dollars. Lieutenant Colonel Byoir represents 14,500 times a million dollars.

Now, may I invite your attention to the fact that the McCormack committee made a finding that although Lieutenant Colonel Byoir claimed to represent a German tourist information office, he did not, in effect, represent such an office; he in effect distributed anti-Semitic literature, literature involving the church and state and that he was a general propagandist for Hitler. That is what the McCormack committee said. At that time they did not know, because these different gentlemen I have interrogated on that committee told me that they did not know. Well, they did not. It is an evident fact. They did not know that he was a lieutenant colonel in the Army.

One time Mr. Moley was called to the witness stand by our good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and he asked him this question. I had it copied down. Remember, this is the gentleman from Massachusetts, Hon. JOHN McCORMACK, asking Mr. Raymond Moley this question:

The CHAIRMAN. There was authentic evidence produced at the Washington hearings, both testimony and documents, in the case of former German Consul Kieth, paying $4,000 for propaganda directed against people in this country, whether citizens or not, because of their race. Have you any opinion that you desire to express as to the propriety of such actions?

That was about Byoir's activities. Nobody else but Byoir's activities. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] asked him that question and Mr. Moley replied:

I think it is thoroughly improper to do such subsidizing of any movement in the United States of that character by anyone who is a German citizen, and particularly so when he occupies an official position.

There is where the German consul—my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] did not tell you all of it—the German consul first employed this lieutenant colonel and paid him $4,000 in cash in bills. What for? To distribute church and state literature—anti-Semitic literature. That is what it was for. That was in 1933, 1 month after Hitler went into power on January 30. Then he was paid $2,000 and $3,000 a month to distribute church and state literature and anti-Semitic literature. The books are filled with it. After that he sent a special representative, George Sylvester Viereck, who boasts of his friendship for Hitler and is reputed to be a cousin of the Kaiser, to see Hitler himself, and under a contract which was approved by the German Minister of Propaganda to give him $6,000 a month for 18 months, commencing November 23, 1933.

Now, it is true that possibly Byoir has not represented the German Government since 1935. I presume it is. But do you think Hitler would continue in his employment any Semitic person to distribute anti-Semitic literature, and if he found out that he was Semitic, naturally he would discharge him. That contract ended in 1935.

But does that excuse him? If one is guilty of treason, is there any statute of limitation? Is there any statute of limitation against un-American activities?

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I take it from the gentleman's statement that Byoir was discharged because Hitler found out he was Semitic and would not use him to distribute anti-Semitic propaganda—I do not know whether he is Semitic or not, but I think the evidence shows that Byoir broke off his contract himself. I think he should be given credit for that.

Mr. PATMAN. By his own testimony.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Not contradicted.

Mr. PATMAN. By his own testimony only without any corroboration whatsoever and many months after the McCormack investigation.

Now, I want to read this again. Mr. McCormack said:

Several American firms and American citizens as individuals sold their services for express propaganda purposes, making their contracts with and accepting compensation from foreign business firms. The firms in question were Carl Byoir and Associates and Ivy Lee-T. J. Ross.

There is no defense for this. You cannot justify it. The only thing you should do is to take this back to your committee and pass a resolution to get these secret documents that were placed in the Congressional Library, that cannot be touched or examined by any person on the face of the earth unless that resolution is passed. Then when you get that testimony and get the evidence available, make your report and forget what you have done. Forget the fact that you have prejudged the case. You cannot pass it off lightly. There is no way to do it.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Does it not seem strange to the gentleman that no member of the McCormack committee is urging us to do this or is exercised about the matter, but the gentleman himself is the only Member of Congress who is exercised about it?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, I have been here long enough to know that if one Member takes a stand, the others let him go on. That is my experience. When one Member takes a definite stand on some particular question the other Members let him go. But I do not believe you will find them here opposing it, because the RECORD is filled with what the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN McCORMACK, said. I said a while ago that was the best conducted committee I ever knew in this House. They called witnesses in in secret meetings and made sure what they had before they gave it out to the public. Then what they did get—they knew it would stand up in court.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY] has suggested that I had a personal feeling against Lieutenant Colonel Byoir because he opposed a bill, H. R. 1. For the information of the gentleman I may state that I sat through 7 weeks of hearings on that bill. My dear sir, it is one of the longest hearings that has ever been conducted before a committee in this House, hundreds of witnesses were heard and I never did see Lieutenant Colonel Byoir there. The gentleman says he was there. Maybe he was. I will not dispute the gentleman's word on that, but I never did see him. He did not testify. The only brief that was submitted by any client that he represented was on the last day of the hearings and was presented after the committee had closed the testimony. So I do not see how the gentleman can take the position that I am doing this because he caused the defeat of the bill. It never entered my mind. I did not care how he stood on the bill. He was just one of millions who opposed it.

It makes no difference about that. The question is that here you have a man who is a lieutenant colonel in the Reserves who has seniority sufficient, my dear sir, to be in charge of this compulsory training law when we pass it, who admittedly accepted money from the German consul and the German Government for distributing anti-Semitic, church, and state literature and trying to destroy our form of government in favor of a Hitler dictatorship. Are you going to permit that to happen? Are you not going to instruct this committee to go back into the problem and say that we want a further investigation and if those charges are true—and they are not denied, not one word of them—that instruction should be given to the War Department that he should be dismissed immediately?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Without any heat and in an attempt to try to clarify things, can we have a little running comment and questions?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. As I understand it, Mr. Byoir was a lieutenant colonel in the Reserve Corps, an officer in the Reserve Corps, at the time the McCormack committee investigated him.

Mr. PATMAN. But they did not know it; they did not know it. You see that is new evidence. There is where your committee was wrong. Otherwise the McCormack committee would have certainly done something about it.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. That is all right about the committee. Now, secondly, regardless of that fact, however, the McCormack committee did not recommend that any kind of action be taken against Byoir at that time.

Mr. PATMAN. They did not know he was a lieutenant colonel.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Whether they knew that or not they knew at least that he was a propagandist.

Mr. PATMAN. They severely criticized him and they severely criticized the German consul because he, as an officer of the German Government, was taking part in the very thing that Lieutenant Colonel Byoir took part in.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. All right. The McCormack committee, however, did not recommend that any action be taken against him.

Mr. PATMAN. They severely criticized him and denounced him; and if they had known, if the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN MCCORMACK, had known that he was a lieutenant colonel, this report would have recommended some action. You cannot make me believe anything else.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I am not taking issue with the gentleman on that, I am not taking any issue at all at this time, I am merely trying to set forth the facts. The further fact is that Byoir has never been an officer in the United States Army. He is merely a lieutenant colonel in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. PATMAN. He can be called out for regular service and during the past 12 months has been called into regular service for a short time.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. He can only be called out, as the gentleman knows, with his consent, except in an emergency.

Mr. PATMAN. Does not the gentleman think he would consent to take charge of the draft?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. That is begging the question.

Mr. PATMAN. That is not begging the question. He is in the Specialist Reserves, the very organization that would have charge of it.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. He cannot be called to serve except with his own consent in peacetime.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit me to make a very brief statement about this Byoir matter?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield briefly to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am not getting into this controversy today, but in view of the fact that my name has been brought into it as chairman of the special committee that preceded the Dies committee, and reference has been made to some evidence that was not made public, in order that my colleagues and the American public may know just what that situation was, I simply want to say that we took every witness into executive session before we called him into a public session. Many witnesses stated that they were members of a bigoted group or organization, they did not know a thing about the essential facts we were after, other than their membership. All they knew was that they hated some persons because of their religion, race, or color. They were bigots.

Every witness who could give real and valuable evidence was questioned at a public hearing and interrogated about facts pertinent to the investigation, except a few, and of those few some were not called because they gave their own testimony to the public while we were interrogating them as witnesses in executive session, and there was no necessity of their appearing at a public hearing, because they had already given their testimony to the public, and part of it was hearsay, attacking the character and reputation of some person. Every bit of testimony taken in executive session that was relevant to the hearings, relevant to the inquiry, was made public by the committee. The only evidence that was not made public was hearsay evidence, irrelevant evidence which related to the character and reputation of other persons and that had no place in a public hearing, and which would not have been received by the committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, your attention is called to a decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, First Circuit, handed down on the 20th day of August, this year, entitled N. L. R. B. against Waumbec Mills, Inc.

You will recall that section 8 (3) and section 10 (c) of the N. L. R. A. provide that:

> It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer * * *. (3) By discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this chapter * * * shall preclude an employer from making an agreement with a labor organization * * * to require as a condition of employment membership therein, if such labor organization is the representative of the employees as provided in section 159 (a) of this title. * * *
> SECTION 10 (c). The Board shall order "such affirmative action, including reinstatement of employees with or without back pay, as will effectuate the policies of this chapter."

Waumbec Mills, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the company, was engaged in the production, sale, and distribution of rayon fabrics. It was in need of experienced rayon loom fixers and, upon the opening of the mills, two men, Chartier and Geoffrion, who had never been employed by the company, made application for work.

Employment was refused, the men contending that their applications were denied because they had been members of a union. The Board so found and we will assume, for the purpose of the argument, that that finding, which was adopted by the Circuit Court of Appeals, was in accord with the fact.

The Board made an order, requiring the company to offer these two men employment, with back pay from the date of their application until they were given employment. The Board petitioned the Circuit Court of Appeals for the enforcement of its order and its prayer was granted, with the result that, if the court's decision stands, the company will be required to pay these two men, who never worked for it a day, all they would have earned between the time when they applied in July of 1937 and the final decision of the case, less any sums which they may have earned elsewhere.

The question as to whether the men were refused employment because they were members of a union or for other reasons will, as stated, not be discussed.

This leaves two questions. First, whether, under the N. L. R. A., applicants for a job are employees; and, second, whether the refusal to hire applicants because they belong to a union is an unfair labor practice.

The company contended that the men were not employees within the meaning of section 7, which states, among other things, that—

> Employees shall have the right to self-organization; to form, join, or assist labor organizations.

In overruling that contention, the Court said:

> The refusal to employ an applicant because he has been an active union official must certainly be regarded as a "discrimination in regard to hire" within the natural meaning of those words, a meaning which coincides so faithfully with the declared policy of the act that there can be no justification to reach for a strained construction.

The Court then proceeded to hold that an employer had no right to refuse an applicant for work merely because he was a union man. This decision is directly contrary to the decision rendered by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in National Labor Relations Board v. National Casket Co. (107 Fed. (2d) 992), and in Phelps Dodge Corporation v. National Labor Relations Board, decided July 11, 1940.

In the National Casket Co. case, construing section 8 (3), the Court said:

> As we read the section it means that an employer may not require an applicant for work, as a condition to accepting him for employment, to join or to resign from a union, nor insert in the contract of employment any other discriminatory term that encourages or discourages membership in a labor organization, excepting only that, if the facts stated in the proviso exist, the employer may require membership in the labor organization which has been legally chosen to represent his employees. So interpreted the section is in harmony with the fundamental policy of the act which is to safeguard the rights of employees to self-organization and collective bargaining. National Labor Relations Board v. Fansteel

Metallurgical Corporation (306 U. S. 240, 257, 59 S. Ct. 490, 83 L. Ed. 627, 123 A. L. R. 599). The section confers rights upon employees, not upon applicants for employment. As Mr. Justice Roberts remarked in Associated Press v. National Labor Relations Board (301 U. S. 103, 132, 57 S. Ct. 650, 655, 81 L. Ed. 953), "The act does not compel the petitioner to employ anyone." And the Chief Justice said in National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation (301 U. S. 1, 45, 57 S. Ct. 615, 628, 81 L. Ed. 893, 108 A. L. R. 1352):

"The act does not interfere with the normal exercise of the right of the employer to select its employees or to discharge them. The employer may not, under cover of that right, intimidate or coerce its employees with respect to their self-organization and representation, and, on the other hand, the Board is not entitled to make its authority a pretext for interference with the right of discharge when that right is exercised for other reasons than such intimidation and coercion."

The purpose of the act is not to compel an employer to hire members of one union rather than another, or union men rather than nonunion men. We do not understand, therefore, that an employer may not, under pain of committing an unfair labor practice, select an A. F. of L. member in preference to a C. I. O. member, or a nonunion man in preference to either, if all three are applicants for the same position. It should be noted that the Board's reading of section 8 (3) would not lead to the hiring of union rather than nonunion men in all instances. Where the employer hired a union man rather than a nonunion man of equal merit because the former was a member of a union, there would be discrimination in hire which tended to encourage membership in a labor organization, an unfair labor practice in the Board's eyes. The Board would then have to act to enforce the rights of the nonunion men not to be so discriminated against. Between applicants for work who are not employees at the time they apply for employment, we think the employer is free to choose one who has not previously engaged in union activities in preference to one who has, and vice versa, although he may not impose by the contract of employment any limitation in respect to union or antiunion activities during the term of employment. The Board has held to the contrary in the case at bar and in Waumbec Mills, Inc. 1939 (15 N. L. R. B., No. 4, commented upon in 53 Harv. L. Rev. 141). We canot agree with its construction of section 8 (3). No court, so far as we are informed, has previously had to pass upon it (National Labor Relations Board v. National Casket Co., 107 Fed. (2d) 992, 997).

As pointed out in the National Casket Company case, the holding of the first circuit in the Waumbec case forces the employer to violate the N. L. R. A., and in this way: If an applicant for a job cannot be denied employment because he is a union man, then applicants for jobs will necessarily seek to gain the added advantage of joining a union.

Under the Norris-LaGuardia Act, an employer cannot agree with an applicant that he will employ him if he does not join a union. Under the N. L. R. A., the employer can agree with the applicant that he will not employ anyone who does not belong to a union.

The result is that the nonunion man seeking work is forced, by the action of the employer, if he would work, to join a union. It therefore follows that, by such discrimination in favor of union men in regard to hire, the employer encourages membership in a labor organization—a direct violation of section 8 (3).

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What would be my situation then under a ruling of that kind if I should go out, start some labor agitation, cause a lot of trouble here and there, and then in 30, 60, 90 days, or 6 months go to your factory and apply for a job and you refused to hire me because of that activity?

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the Board found that I refused to hire you because you belonged to a union, I would have to pay you wages, under that decision, from the time you applied for the job until I took you on.

Let me put it a little differently. The court holds that every applicant for work is an employee under the Wagner Act. How many Members of Congress, when the act was being debated, ever thought that an applicant for a job was an employee?

Mr. McKEOUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Do I understand the court sustained the finding of the National Labor Relations Board?

Mr. HOFFMAN. One circuit court, that of the first circuit, did, and one circuit court, that in the second circuit, did not. I wonder if the gentleman ever believed when he voted for that law that the definition of "employee" was going to be extended to cover all applicants for work, to all men who applied for jobs but who had never before been employed by the one to whom they made their application?

Mr. McKEOUGH. Do you know whether or not the decision of that particular court is now subject to appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is.

Mr. McKEOUGH. The Supreme Court has not acted?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It has not. The decision was not handed down until August 20, 1940.

Mr. McKEOUGH. On the record so far it is safe to assume that the Supreme Court will find in favor of the Labor Board?

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is that?

Mr. McKEOUGH. In view of the cases that have gone to the Supreme Court, it is safe to assume, in the judgment of the gentleman from Michigan, that the Supreme Court will sustain the findings of the lower court?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It undoubtedly will on the question of whether or not the applicant was refused employment because he was a member of a union. Whether they go along with the definition of employee is open to question.

Mr. McKEOUGH. In the event then of the Supreme Court sustaining the lower court on that ground, the gentleman will be glad to accept the findings of the Supreme Court as equitable?

Mr. HOFFMAN. As equitable?

Mr. McKEOUGH. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would the gentleman?

Mr. McKEOUGH. I am not as fortunate as the gentleman from Michigan. I am not an attorney.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In my opinion, it is not so much a question of law as a question of common sense and justice. May I ask the gentleman this question: Regardless of the law, does he think that an employer should be required to take on men who have made trouble for other employees, if he believes that man will make trouble for him?

Mr. McKEOUGH. Does the gentleman desire me to answer that?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; briefly.

Mr. McKEOUGH. I will be very glad to answer it in my own way. Of course, I cannot presume to have any remote control of the Supreme Court, but if the Supreme Court answers it in the manner the gentleman has indicated it possibly will, then, as one who subscribes to the respect that is due the Supreme Court, I will be very happy to accept its findings.

Mr. HOFFMAN. My answer to your question as to whether I would accept a decision of the Supreme Court affirming the Waumbec case is this: Under those circumstances, if the Supreme Court renders that kind of a decision it would be a most inequitable one and upon the American Congress with added force would fall the duty to free the American workingman from the domination of the Labor Board by amendment of the National Labor Relations Act.

How can any Member on the floor of this House go along with that kind of decision, remembering first, that the law says it is an unfair labor practice to encourage or to discourage any man with reference to joining a union? And remembering also that under the law as it stands the employer has the right to insist under a closed-shop contract that all men working for him shall join either the A. F. of L. or the C. I. O.? Does not that construction inevitably lead to the conclusion that, in order to work in this country, on a defense program, for example, you must join a union? Not only must you join a union, you must join union A, B, or C, whichever has a closed-shop contract. The employer says to me when I go and apply for a job in the navy yard or a factory where the Government has a defense contract pending, or a contract covering munitions, that I must join the union.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, does not that employer of necessity not only encourage me to join a union but compel me to do so?

Then take this situation which arose over in Illinois recently. The Edison Electric Co. is building a plant costing $8,000,000. They have a shop contract with the A. F. of L. There are not enough A. F. of L. members in that community to absorb the jobs, so C. I. O. members want to forsake their union and go into the A. F. of L. The A. F. of L. will not take them in, but insists that the company go outside of that town and bring in men from outside who were A. F. of L. members. Is that fair to the C. I. O.?

Now, do you who talk for labor see where we are getting? Instead of collective bargaining, nonunion men and men of a rival union not only cannot bargain, they cannot work at all. First, under this law we had quarrels and trouble between the employer and the employee. Now, that that has been ironed out, we have trouble between the two unions, as happened last week up at Fisher No. 1 plant of the Buick division of General Motors at Flint, where, as I said this morning, 6,800 men were thrown out of work because there is a dispute between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. Why should we not have a little good-neighbor policy here in Congress and ask that the other body, the Senate, pass on those amendments to the National Labor Relations Act which were passed here by a vote of more than 2 to 1. Let those amendments be acted upon by the body considering them and thus by lessening labor trouble and strikes make real progress in attempting to arm ourselves for defense? I submit that for your consideration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity in order to keep the record straight. We have had mentioned on the floor of the House today on several occasions, particularly by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], the word "anti-Semitic." I now read the definition of "Semite" from this large Webster's New International Dictionary, which I obtained from the table just around the corner from the Well of the House from which I am now speaking. This Webster's dictionary defines "Semite" as—

1. One of the descendants of Shem.
2. A member of a Caucasian race, now chiefly represented by the Jews and Arabs, but in ancient times including also the Babylonians, Assyrians, Aramaeans, Phoenicians, and various other peoples of southwestern Asia.

That is the definition of "Semite" according to Webster's New International Dictionary, a copy of which is placed on the floor of the House of Representatives for the use of Members of the Congress. I ask my colleagues when they discuss pro-Semitism or anti-Semitism to weigh carefully the real definition of the words according to Webster.

Mr. Speaker, now, with reference to another part of the RECORD which has to be clarified in order to keep today's RECORD straight. We have heard various references to the investigation of a Lieutenant Colonel Byoir, who we were told, according to the statements of several Members, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], was an active lobbyist opposed to legislation which is pending in Congress, that is, antichain-store legislation. If the Dies committee is going to carry on a chain-store legislative lobby investigation it had better investigate both sides of the lobby. I therefore suggest that the committee then immediately conduct a complete and thorough investigation of all chain-store legislation lobby activities, including those of McKesson & Robbins and their hired men.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] has today repudiated and denounced the Communist Party. Other New Deal Members have told about how the Communist Party has been taken off the election ballot in several States. In order to keep the RECORD straight, particularly since an answer was not given to the question as to why the Communists and Communist travelers whom the Dies committee found on the New Deal administrative Government pay rolls were not removed, I shall read to you from some interesting documents which I obtained from one of my safe-deposit vaults a few moments ago. These documents, no doubt, reveal why our New Deal brethren have kept the New Deal Communists and Communist travelers on Uncle Sam's pay roll.

Mr. Speaker, I now hold in my hand a Communist political campaign piece of literature circulated in the State of Wisconsin by the Communist Party in the November 1938 election campaign. In large, bold type this piece of Communist 1938 campaign literature states on the first page:

Keep Wisconsin a progressive New Deal State.

Under this title we find a picture of a big, fat fellow with a big-business sign on his back and a big club in his raised right hand running toward a sketch which symbolizes the Nation's Capitol. Under this picture we find the following words in large red type:

Build the Democratic front against reaction.

Mr. Speaker, when we turn over the page we find in large red type the words:

Communism is twentieth-century Americanism.

Mr. Speaker, the back page of this November 1938 Communist political campaign literature reveals that it was authorized, paid for, and circulated by the Communist Party of Wisconsin, room 329, 744 North Fourth Street, Milwaukee, Wis. This last page also tells the readers to:

Join the Communist Party.

And to:

Read the Daily Worker and Sunday Worker.

Mr. Speaker, on page 2 of this Communist November 1938 election campaign document we find under the title:

For or against the New Deal.

The following:

This is the real issue on which we are going to vote on election day. Shall we continue progress with Roosevelt and Wisconsin progressivism, or shall we turn the clock back to the dark days of Hoover and Kohler?

Mr. Speaker, this Communist campaign literature certainly does indicate that the Communist brethren are great supporters of President Roosevelt and his chosen tribe of Karl Marx New Deal disciples. Page 2 of this Communist political literature then states "communism is twentieth-century Americanism," and under this declaration and definition of Americanism sings the praises of President Roosevelt and his New Deal brethren as follows:

If we want to improve the gains made under the New Deal and the progressive administration, now is the time to do it—by giving the most overwhelming defeat to the Republicans, by voting them and the reactionary Democrats out of the legislature, and by defeating them for Congress.

Mr. Speaker, remember that I am quoting from the Communist November 1938 election campaign literature, which was extensively circulated in Wisconsin by the Communist brethren. I quote further from this Communist November 1938 campaign literature, as follows:

A smashing victory for the New Deal nationally and for the Progressive administration in Wisconsin will consolidate the gains of the New Deal and make possible a new push forward.

Mr. Speaker, this Communist November 1938 election campaign manifesto proclaims to the world that Communist brethren are main cogs in the New Deal political machine. I ask our New Deal brethren to ever remember that their Communist brethren have gone over the top with them on election days.

I now quote some more from this interesting November 1938 campaign literature, which was printed, paid for, and circulated by our Communist New Deal brethren who state therein that "Communism is twentieth-century Americanism" and that "twentieth-century Americanism is new deal-ism." This Communist 1938 political campaign document also states:

But to win this election and to avert the very serious danger of a Republican victory, unity of the followers of the Progressive Party alone is not enough. Wisconsin Progressivism and the New Deal nationally must go hand in hand.

Mr. Speaker, this original Communist November 1938 election campaign document positively admits that our Democratic, Progressive, and Communist brethren in Wisconsin are all in the New Deal political army. This admission is positively a correct statement of fact.

Mr. Speaker, I now read some more from this November 1938 Communist-New Deal political campaign literature as follows:

All genuine New Deal Democrats should understand the remarkable events in the Democratic Party since the primaries. The coalitionists have shown by the withdrawal of Henry from the Democratic ticket as candidate for Governor, that there is absolutely no difference between an anti-Roosevelt Democrat and a Republican.

Mr. Speaker, under the heading "What are the New Deal voters to do?" we find the following in this 1938 Communist election campaign document:

Every new dealer and supporter of Roosevelt should vote to reelect the Progressive administration in the State, to reelect a Progressive legislature, and elect supporters of Roosevelt to Congress and the United States Senate.

Mr. Speaker, we find that this Communist 1938 political campaign literature states the following on the last page:

Reelect the Progressive State administration and an overwhelmingly Progressive legislature.
Elect Progressives and New Dealers to Congress and the Senate who will give active support to the New Deal, and who will not join with the reactionary opponents of Roosevelt.

Mr. Speaker, this Communist campaign literature certainly confirms a fact which we all know in Wisconsin. Our Democrat brethren, our Progressive brethren, and our Communist brethren in Wisconsin are all in the New Deal political army, and any thinking, self-respecting citizen in Wisconsin has no alternative but to vote Republican. The Communists and Progressives are main cogs in the New Deal Democrat political machine in Wisconsin. This is clearly confirmed by this documentary proof which reveals who are working on a united political front with the Communist brethren who claim that communism is twentieth-century Americanism, and that twentieth-century Americanism is new dealism. Our ex-international banker, New Deal fuehrer, President Roosevelt, is the political leader of the Communist, Progressive, and Democrat united-front movement of Karl Marx disciples.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the record, is it any wonder why our New Deal President has kept the New Deal Communists and Communist fellow travelers on the Federal Government pay roll after they have been exposed by the Dies committee?

Our New Deal President Roosevelt wants the political support of Democrat, Communist, and Progressive New Dealers in the future as in the past. He will have their support in November as he has had it for the past 8 years. I am glad that he will. The American people will now see to it that at this November's election our ex-international banker New Deal President and his chosen tribe of self-righteous Karl Marx disciples, international bankers, Wall Street sharks, and bucket-shop operators, and Communist, Democrat, and Progressive political henchmen will be driven from the temple of our Federal Government. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield for a unanimous-consent request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a set of resolutions adopted by the Midwest Defense Conference, held in Kansas City, Mo., on August 30, together with their list of the Congressmen belonging to the committee working in the interest of this national-defense program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

H. R. 10094

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the programs and policies of the Communist Party and the Nazi and Fascist organizations are determined not in accordance with what is in the interest of the United States or any group of people in the United States, but, rather, in accordance with the wishes of an international political organization or a foreign government. Under those circumstances it is utterly impossible for anybody to predict on the basis of American conditions or American events what these policies are going to be. It therefore follows that anybody who tries to think his way through on certain problems that confront the country is going to find himself from time to time in the embarrassing position of finding that the Nazis or the Communists, or some group like them, happen to agree for the time being with the thing he is trying to do.

It is not the fault of President Roosevelt or the New Deal that at a certain time the wage-hour bill, for example, or the measure for the relief of farm tenancy happened to be something that the Communist or somebody like that was also talking about.

At the moment it happens that they are in opposition to the national-defense measures, of whatever sort they may be. So it happens that some other people here find themselves in the same bed with them.

You cannot argue that way. You have got to go ahead as best you can in opposition to every group that does not owe loyalty to the United States and you have got to make up your mind on the basis of the facts on every issue what you think is right and do it.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. I would just like to state that according to the philosophy of the gentleman from Wisconsin, the minute that the Communist Party should come out for either the Democratic or Republican Party, according to the documentary evidence he so proudly displays here, that party should immediately fold up and withdraw.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I want to point out, of course, at the present time the Communist Party is bitterly opposed to the present administration, just as bitterly as they possibly can be opposed to it, on account of the foreign policy.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that Father Coughlin is supporting Candidate Willkie?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe it is.

Now, I want to say this further, and I think it is of great importance. There is not any question about the fact that at the present time feeling in this country is running very, very high indeed. Nobody is more deeply concerned than I am, to carry on effectively the work of the exposure of really disloyal elements.

I have tried to do my part as a member of the Dies Committee and otherwise in this connection. I do want to say this, however. I think that everybody has to be very careful, more careful today than ever before, that we do not fall into the easy but indefensible mistake, in attempting to fight out our political battles in the United States, of trying to associate our opponents with subversive movements. A great many of us have been guilty of it, on both sides. I think it is most reprehensible. We have a big enough job to guide this country safely through these difficult years, and to combat really disloyal groups, without trying to lump together a bunch of honest political opponents into these groups.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman is merely making a plea for fair consideration for tolerance?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right. Furthermore, by being true to the facts about matters. All kinds of people are duped and fooled into joining organizations, where, if they knew there was control exercised over that organization that was bad, they would never join it. You have always got to remember that. It is possible for careful people to know about these things and until we do know we should not make false accusations. We should equip our law-enforcing agencies, which are the only ones that can go out and apprehend people who are going to make trouble in this country, with all the money and all the personnel that they need. The function of a committee like our Committee to Investigate un-American Activities is to do the kind of job that these law-enforcing agencies cannot do, namely, to bring out the large facts of the situation, where perhaps there is nothing criminal involved, but where there are facts that the American people are entitled to have.

I want to make a personal appeal to the House. Some time ago I introduced a bill, H. R. 10094. The title of the bill is to require the registration of certain organizations carrying on activities within the United States.

We are always confronted with the problem as to what we are going to do about these things. You have to try to pursue a course which on the one hand is going to effectively protect the Nation and its life against activities that are really subversive of our form of government, and on the other hand a course which is not going to interfere with the civil liberties of the American people. So this bill is brought in here to require the registration of four types of organizations with the Department of Justice. When I say registration, it means that they are required to give to the Department of Justice all the pertinent facts about the organization. Here are the four types of organizations that have to register:

(1) Every organization subject to foreign control which engages in political activity.

Foreign control is defined as follows:

(e) An organization shall be deemed "subject to foreign control" if (1) it solicits or accepts financial contributions, loans, or support of any kind, directly or indirectly, from, or is affiliated directly or indirectly with, a foreign government or a political subdivision thereof, or an agent, agency, or instrumentality of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, or a political party in a foreign country, or an international political organization, or (2) its policies, or any of them, are determined by or at the suggestion of, or in collaboration with, a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, or an agent, agency, or instrumentality of a foreign government or a political subdivision thereof, or a political party in a foreign country, or an international political organization.

The term "political activity" is defined as follows:

(c) The term "political activity" means any activity the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which, is the establishment, control, conduct, seizure, or overthrow of a government or political subdivision thereof.

I should have said that this bill has already passed the House. It is now before the Senate, but there have been some attacks made on this bill, and I wanted to explain the reasons why those attacks are unjustified and to defend it for a moment. It is said this bill will include labor organizations, and the contention is made that labor organizations sometimes are interested in the passage of certain types of legislation. Of course they are, but my answer to that is that labor organizations do not engage, under any circumstances, in political activities such as political activity is defined in this bill, because they are not trying to establish, control, seize, conduct, or overthrow the Government. This bill cannot cover a labor organization by any stretch of the imagination. I have consulted with labor attorneys and other prominent people, and they tell me they are certain that is true.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I am very much in favor of that legislation. I think the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has done a very fine thing to bring to the attention of the House this legislation at this time. Especially I am interested in the registration of foreign agents. Legislation like this is absolutely necessary in view of the fact that foreign agents are now required to register with the Department of State. I have frequently had an opportunity to go through the files of the Department of State and find a tremendous number of foreign agents registered there, but in my investigation I found the subagents of those foreign organizations were not required to register. That is, some agent from a foreign country comes here to register and he can appoint subagents in this country. I think the gentleman is on the right track.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The second type of organization that has to register under this bill is one which engages both in civilian military activity and in political activity.

What that means is that organizations which undertake to drill their members in military fashion, to store arms, or teach military tactics, and which also engage in political activity as defined in this bill, are required to register.

The third type of organization is an organization subject to foreign control which engages in civilian military activity. In other words, an agency of a foreign power which carries on any type of military activity in the United States.

The fourth type of organization is one the purpose or aim of which, or one of the purposes or aims of which, is the establishment, control, conduct, seizure, or overthrow of a government or subdivision thereof by the use of force, violence, military measures, or threats of any one or more of the foregoing.

Somebody is going to say that this measure requires registration only, that it does not actually suppress these activities. My answer to that is that the philosophy behind this bill is that the American people have a right to know the facts about an organization which is under the control of a foreign government, and they have a right to know about an organization that does not propose to abide by the constitutional methods of this Nation in trying to arrive at the ends it is working for.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In just a moment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman had better change his bill, because, under it, he would force the Knights Templar, the Knights of Columbus, the Eastern Star, the Eagles, and all these other fraternal organizations, which have drill teams, to register.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; it would not do anything of the sort, because none of those organizations is engaged in political activity which has the purpose or aim of establishing, controlling, conducting, seizing, or overthrowing a government or subdivision thereof by the use of force, violence, military measures, or threats.

As a matter of fact, the philosophy behind this bill is that in a democratic nation you have a right to require that an organization attempting to gain political ends in the Nation should use the methods of democracy to gain them, that if people claim the right of free speech they should use free speech, that we are not required in a democracy to put up with undercover political activity, and that we have a right to require that undercover political activity come out in the open and show itself.

In my judgment this is the main thing we need to do. Certainly the bill denies no civil liberty. All it does is require these organizations to tell the truth and the whole truth. In my judgment, if this were done and the law-enforcing agencies of this Government had these powers and if people who did not reveal these facts were subjected to certain penalty I think it would in large part be the answer to this particular problem about which so much has been said here this afternoon.

Certain it is that all of us are deeply disturbed about the outlook we find ahead of us. Certain it is that we want to use every effort for national defense, both from the standpoint of the defense of our country in a military sense and also from the standpoint of the development within our Nation of a vigorous, clean, democratic life among all of us.

So, in conclusion, may I say that I hope my bill is going to pass the Senate. But you can do all you please in the way of curbing "fifth columnists," you can build all the battleships you want to, you can pass conscription bills and others, but you are not going to have the answer to the problem of America's need until you attack the economic and social problems of America more vigorously than you have so far. [Applause.] Never was there a time when the people had a right to expect us to be so earnest in that task, because never was there a time when we were asking the sacrifices of them we are asking now. So, let us not say when this conscription bill has been passed that then we are through, because we are not through. We shall not be through until in the eyes of this and future generations we have justified faith that a democratic body like this can grapple with the economic problems of the machine age and beat them in the name of the great democracy that America is. The House of Representatives faces the greatest test in all its history in the next few years. We cannot, we must not fail to meet that test. For, if we do, democratic government may perish from the earth. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may state that when these special orders have been concluded it is the intention of the Chair, not knowing just when the selective-service conference report may be back, to ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair with the understanding that the bells will be rung 15 minutes before the House reassembles.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for these few moments to present a brief compilation of the history of the conscription of industry amendment to the selective service bill.

Mr. Speaker, in my remarks on the Vinson and the Smith substitutes for the Overton-Russell amendments to the conscription bill I referred to the fact that the Acting Secretary of the Navy had asked for broad powers to take over industry last winter. I have made the best research possible in a brief time and first present to you a copy of a letter addressed to the Speaker on December 14, 1939, by Acting Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison, which I obtained through the courtesy of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1939.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a bill "to amend the act of March 4, 1917, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.' "

The purpose of the proposed bill is to vest with the President, during a national emergency, those powers which he has in time of war by the terms of subsection (b) under the appropriation heading "Naval emergency fund" of the act of March 4, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. 1193; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 82).

The act of March 4, 1917, herein referred to, contains several paragraphs vesting extraordinary powers in the President with reference to the procurement of ships and material, commandeering factories, and the like. These powers were in terms limited to be exercised only "in time of war, or of national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918, to be determined by the President by proclamation."

When the United States Code was prepared these provisions were omitted as temporary legislation, but subsequently the attention of Congress was invited to the fact that the legislation would apply during any war, and that the limitation to March 1, 1918, applied only with reference to a national emergency. This view was accepted by the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and the legislation was accordingly included in the next publication of the Code, correctly omitting all reference to national emergency so that the law would in terms apply only "in time of war."

The Navy Department recommends that the proposed legislation be enacted.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

THE SPEAKER, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, the bill proposed by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, but which was never introduced, is as follows:

A bill to amend the act of March 4, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes"

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b) under the appropriation heading "Naval Emergency Fund" of the act of March 4, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. 1193; U. S. C. title 50, sec. 82), is hereby amended by deleting, in lines 1 and 2 of the subsection the words "arising prior to March 1, 1918", and by deleting, at the end of the subsection, the words "That all authority granted to the President in this paragraph, to be exercised in time of national emergency, shall cease on March 1, 1918."

Mr. Speaker, it will be noted upon examination of the United States Code (39 Stat. 1193; U. S. C. title 50, sec. 82) that the words hereby proposed to be stricken from the act of March 4, 1917, are not contained in the code print of the act. Consequently, unless one were entirely familiar with the law or made special reference to the law itself one would not know the facts.

Subsection (b) (fourth) of that act permits the President:

To requisition and take over for use or operation any factory, or any part thereof without taking possession of the entire factory, whether the United States has or has not any agreement with the owner or occupier of such factory.

Subsection (d) provides for just compensation and the method for payment in the event of disagreement.

Mr. Speaker, to illustrate the manner in which the Congress has turned over these powers to take over industry in time of peace I submit the following facts.

H. R. 9850 was reported to the House by the Committee on Military Affairs on May 22, 1940. It was for the purpose of expediting national defense. It went rapidly through the processes of the two legislative bodies and became law on July 2, 1940 (Public Law No. 703, 76th Cong.). When the conference report was submitted to the House of Representatives on June 21, 1940, there took place the following colloquy on page 8902 of the RECORD:

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the language submitted in a conference report a few days ago, under the act, the gentleman from Kentucky has just now read they have the authority to go out and take charge of any manufacturing plant in the United States, and to put a representative of the Government in charge of that plant.

Mr. MAY. No; I do not so understand it. They may make a contract for the lease of those plants.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And for the Government to operate them?

Mr. MAY. If necessary, and if the private plants do not have available employees, they can require the employment of Government employees, such as inspectors, special mechanics, and supervisors, to see, for instance, in some plant where they are manufacturing detailed and certain technical equipment according to specifications that the specifications are complied with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does it not go further than that? It did the other day in the RECORD, and I am uncertain about that now, because the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate has incorporated practically the same idea in the Navy bill. As I understand it, it permits the Secretary of War to go out and commandeer or take over industrial plants and put a representative in there to make whatever the Army is asking to be manufactured.

Mr. RABAUT. Under what conditions?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have not before me the RECORD of the other day, but that is exactly what has been submitted.

Mr. ANDREWS. Here is a copy of the RECORD.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It says this:

"(b) The Secretary of War is further authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this section and section 5, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and, when he deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412)."

Mr. MAY. That is the provision that is in the report now. The intention is that the Government may have supervision and not control. If the Government builds or furnishes the money with which to build a plant alongside a private plant and after the emergency has ended desires to dispose of it to the private owner it may do so.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If that is the provision in the report now it certainly confers upon the Secretary of War the absolute authority to go out into the country and to take any manufacturing plant that he may see fit to take, and to manufacture for the Government, under Government supervision, any article that he deems necessary to procure.

Mr. DINGELL. If it is in the interest of national defense.

Mr. MAY. It does not authorize him to take over. It merely authorizes the Secretary of War, in the event it becomes necessary and he cannot lease the property, to require that the owner shall accept the supervision of experts who are qualified in carrying out blueprints, specifications, and requirements needed to manufacture technical equipment for the War Department. It could not be done otherwise. As I have already stated, if the Government in aid of industry makes improvements suitable to the use of the private owner and has no further use for such improvements, the Government should be enabled to salvage some of the investment by sale to the private owners. That is all this section means, and I would be the last man in the world to allow Government to dominate private investments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. Speaker, the Navy speed-up bill, H. R. 9822, was reported to the House on May 22, from the Committee on Naval Affairs. This bill proceeded through the regular course of events, passed the House May 28, 1940, passed the Senate on June 21, 1940.

When H. R. 9822 passed the House, section 8 read as follows:

SEC. 8. The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), is hereby increased by an amount equal to additional costs resulting from the provisions of this act.

When H. R. 9822 passed the Senate on June 21, 1940, section 8 had been amended to read as follows:

SEC. 8. (a) The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any other individual project of construction are hereby increased as may be necessary to expedite national defense and otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act: Provided, That the monetary limitations on payments out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for employees in the Navy Department and for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under the Native and Alien Schedules of Wages of civil employees in the field services of the Navy Department shall be suspended during the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided further, The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide out of any appropriations available to the Navy Department, for their salaries and for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, travel expenses, and for such public works projects, inclusive of buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto (including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants), and the acquisition of such land, and the purchase or lease of such structures, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

(b) The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, with or without advertising or competitive bidding, to provide out of any available naval appropriations, for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this act, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and when he deems it necessary in the interest of national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412): Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every 3 months to the Congress each and every contract amounting to $100,000 and over entered into under the authority of this section.

Please note, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment was agreed to by the Senate on Friday, June 21, 1940. Now I quote from the RECORD of that day in the Senate. The chairman of their Committee on Naval Affairs, Senator WALSH, made the following remarks—RECORD, page 8776:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that the chairman of the committee make an explanation of the bill so that we may know its terms and its implications.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill is an exceedingly important measure. It is perhaps the most important and far-sweeping bill that has been presented to the Congress at this session or any other session since the World War. The very name of the bill suggests its importance, "To expedite national defense." The bill in general either repeals or modifies or changes practically every restriction upon which the Congress through the years has legislated, for the purpose of safeguarding the Public Treasury by requiring competitive bidding upon contracts made with the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. An important matter is being discussed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill primarily modifies or repeals all those safeguards which we have set up for the purpose of protecting the Public Treasury in the expenditure of vast sums of money. It is for the purpose of expediting the building of naval vessels, and the building of the necessary aircraft for our defense, in order that with the greatest possible expedition our Navy should be enlarged, and, so far as vessels under contract are being built, this bill would provide for their completion earlier than the dates called for in the contracts.

On that same day, after the bill had been passed, the Senator from Massachusetts spoke as follows—RECORD, page 8832:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

The next day was Saturday, June 22, 1940. The Congress was to recess for 1 week over the Republican National Convention and to take 3-day recesses the week following. An attempt was made to rush through a great many bills that were said to be urgent and many that were not before this 2 weeks of recess.

Accordingly, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, was recognized early in the session and spoke as follows—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 9020:

NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite the naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. VINSON of Georgia, SCHUETZ, and MAAS.

The fact that the Speaker "paused" after asking if there was objection might indicate that he expected an objection to be raised and wished to give full opportunity for it.

Page 9059 of the RECORD shows that the gentleman from Georgia returned to the House from the conference that same day a few hours later and presented the conference report on the bill. It is printed in the RECORD. The bill, H. R. 9822, is also printed in the RECORD as amended by the conference. Debate reported on the next few pages of the RECORD to and including page 9064 demonstrates that no mention was made of any change in section 8 of the bill by anyone although discussion was had concerning other sections of it.

Remember at this point, Mr. Speaker, that no copies had yet been printed of the bill as amended by the Senate, nor had copies of the conference report been printed for distribution among the Members, as the report was brought directly from the conference by the conferees. No print of the conference report was available until the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was printed and delivered to the Members the next day.

In the Senate likewise no mention was made of any change in section 8, and I refer you to page 8984 of the RECORD, which contains all of the remarks on the subject of this conference report in a half column of print.

The conference report was agreed to in both bodies without any mention of amendment to section 8, and yet when the report was printed it contained the following:

Amendment No. 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 26 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 8. (a) The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544) and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any other individual naval project of construction are hereby increased as may be necessary to expedite national defense and otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act: Provided, That the monetary limitations on payments out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for employees in the Navy Department and for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under the Native and Alien Schedules of Wages of civil employees in the field services of the Navy Department shall be suspended during the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide out of any appropriations available to the Navy Department, for their salaries and for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

"(b) Wherever the Secretary of the Navy finds it impossible to make contracts or obtain facilities to effectuate the purposes of this act in the procurement or construction of items authorized in connection with national defense he is hereby authorized to provide out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for such purposes, the necessary buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto on Government owned land or elsewhere, and to operate them, either by means of Government personnel or otherwise: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix the compensation to the owner of such plant or facility: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Congress every 3 months, the contracts entered into under the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 9822 was signed by the President on June 28, 1940, containing that language. It became Public Law No. 671, Seventy-sixth Congress, otherwise referred to as the act of June 28. It became law on the same day that the Republican Convention nominated its candidate for the Presidency of the United States. If memory serves me correctly, this language I have quoted was called to public attention by some newspaper in New England shortly afterward. Therefore, after the Democratic Convention was over and the Members had again settled down to work, an appropriation bill was under consideration on July 31, 1940. It was H. R. 10263, making supplemental appropriations for the national defense.

When H. R. 10263 was open for amendment the following occurred, and I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 9754, as follows:

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: On page 26, after line 14, add a new paragraph, as follows:

" 'The first proviso in section 8–B of the act approved June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671), is hereby repealed.' "

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Georgia explain the amendment?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Certainly. The purpose of this amendment is to take out of the act of June 28 certain language which I am satisfied every Member of the House desires to have stricken. This amendment was decided upon in conference after consideration by the Naval Affairs Committee this morning on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. [HESS], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN], other members, and myself. We decided that the language which this amendment strikes out is entirely too broad; that it should be repealed and taken out of the bill. I read the language that will be stricken out if this amendment is adopted:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms."

That language is entirely too broad. There is no justification to permit the delegation of such authority to the Secretary of the Navy or to the President or anyone else under conditions such as the country is in today. If the country were involved in war, it might be necessary to confer such authority, but, the country being in a limited emergency, there is no rhyme, reason, or excuse for that language to be in the law; and at the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I am asking that it now be stricken out of the act of June 28, 1940.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I think the Committee of the Whole House should be proud of the statement of the able chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee. Everyone in the committee will agree that this should come out of the act, and I am sure the whole House will join in taking this language out of the act.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia strikes from the act of June 28, 1940, entitled "An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes," the following language to be found in section 8 (b) of that act:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix compensation to the owner of such plant or facility."

That language confers wartime powers on the Secretary of the Navy. It gives him the power to take over all of American industries and operate them. I am sure it was not the intention of the Congress that the Secretary of the Navy, acting under the direction of the President, should have such powers. I know it was not the intention of our Committee on Naval Affairs, which reported the bill to the House.

It will be recalled that last December the then Acting Secretary of the Navy, Charles Edison, wrote the Speaker of the House proposing a bill to vest in the President extraordinary wartime powers in time of peace. The recommended bill would have enabled the President, by proclamation, to commandeer all our factories and materials. Under its terms the President would control our entire industrial machinery in peacetime in the same manner as he serves as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The proposal had possibilities of completely destroying democracy.

When our committee opened its hearings on January 8, last, on H. R. 7665 and H. R. 8026, the then Acting Secretary of the Navy was questioned concerning his recommendation of legislation to give the administration power to take over our industrial machinery. He said, "I just made a mistake in making it. It is as simple as that."

Our Committee on Naval Affairs never reported that bill. We agreed that no such power should be vested in the President and the Secretary of the Navy in time of peace. It was understood by the entire committee that the recommendation would go into the waste-paper basket.

But now we discover on the statute books the very thing which our Committee on Naval Affairs decided against. How did it happen?

The bill as reported by our committee did not contain such language. It did not confer such powers on the Secretary of the Navy and the President. If you examine H. R. 9822, as reported to the House and subsequently passed by the House, you will not discover any such terms as is now embodied in section 8 (b) of the act of June 28.

The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs amended that section. But if you examine the bill as reported by the Senate committee and as passed by the Senate you will not find the language in question.

Obviously, these far-reaching terms were inserted while the bill was in conference. The record shows that on June 21 the Senate asked for a conference. On June 22 the House and Senate agreed to a conference; and, Mr. Chairman, on the same day the conference committee made its report to the House and Senate. On the same day the House and Senate agreed to the conference report.

The conference committee report was not printed. When the House agreed to the report it relied on the explanation made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. But nowhere in his explanation of the report will be found any mention of this very important provision inserted in the bill. I am confident he did not realize the potentialities of this new matter in the report. Somehow, by some means, in the haste of the conference committee to bring the bill back to the House and the Senate, the Navy Department advisers had the words put in the bill.

When my Committee on Naval Affairs met today I insisted upon an executive session so that I might bring this matter to the attention of the committee for the first time. That any such language was embodied in the bill as finally enacted was news to the committee. Our committee would never accept any such provision.

As a result of that executive session it was informally agreed that I should introduce a bill to repeal this particular provision of law, and it was informally understood that the committee would support the bill. I accordingly introduced the proper bill shortly after we met this noon.

It was also informally understood among committee members that the gentleman from Georgia or I would today offer the pending amendment to this bill which makes an appropriation to the Navy. Our chairman wishes to keep faith with his committee. If the House adopts this amendment, it will not be necessary for the committee to consider my bill, assuming, of course, the Senate will also agree to the amendment. If, however, this amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia should fail of enactment, either in this body or in the Senate, I will immediately proceed to obtain action on my bill.

Our people desire a strong national defense, Mr. Chairman. We intend to defend this democracy. But there will be no democracy here to defend if we permit such broad powers to rest in the hands of the President and the Secretary of the Navy. This country is not at war. It is at peace. The time has not arrived when we must give the President and the Secretary of the Navy complete control of our industrial machinery. We can establish an adequate defense without creating industrial dictators.

It behooves us to proceed carefully. This is an illustration of the kind of thing that can happen when we allow ourselves to be carried away by a hysteria and do not take the time to consider bills carefully.

I urge the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia. It is an important amendment. It is as important, even more so, than any other provision of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill H. R. 10263 then went to the Senate where it was held pending disposition of the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill. That bill, when open to amendment in that body, was ultimately amended by what is known as the Overton-Russell amendment, which reads very much like section 8 of H. R. 9822.

Following completion of the conscription bill in the Senate that body in due course took up the appropriation bill containing the repealing language put in unanimously in the House through the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], and struck out the repeal clause on the grounds that the matter had been taken care of in the conscription bill—Overton-Russell amendment—and that it was no longer of any importance. Evidently few of the few present had any idea of the importance of that action.

The House approved this action of the Senate after protest by Messrs. TABER, CHURCH, and COLE, and others, by a voice vote. The repeal of that language having been stricken out, then the language of section 8 of the act of June 28, 1940, remains on the books.

When the conscription bill was under amendment in the House, the Smith amendment was offered, and then the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] offered a substitute. Both of these amendments struck out, repealed, the first and second provisos of section 8 (b) of the act of June 28. A considerable debate ensued, during which I participated to support the Vinson amendment—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 11658 to 11660, September 6, 1940. That amendment was defeated and the Smith amendment adopted. For a parallel presentation of these amendments I refer you to pages 11446 and 11447 of the RECORD under remarks by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Now, Mr. Speaker, we will soon have before us the conference report on the Burke-Wadsworth bill which contains a modified version of the Smith amendment, which replaces the Overton-Russell amendment in the bill. As it now stands, and if adopted, the Smith amendment has had much of the curse of dictatorship removed from it as under its provisions property cannot be taken without some process of law.

I would not be so greatly concerned over this matter if it were not for the fact that the act of June 28, 1940, and the Overton-Russell amendment to the conscription bill gave dictatorial powers to the President in time of peace. I recognize the necessity for them in time of war or threat of imminent invasion or attack, but I refuse to support any such measure, if I know it, in time of peace. Mr. Speaker, when you conscript industry the next short step follows—you must conscript labor. [Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein excerpts from the RECORD, and from bills and reports and a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, you know since events have moved so swift and fast in the last few months to elevate the Honorable Wendell Willkie from the realm of comparative obscurity to the high spot he now enjoys, for the time being, in the attention of the Nation, it conjures up an invitation to look him over and see what he looks like. I, with most of the other people of the Nation, had never previously done that. We possibly heard him one night on Information Please, a radio program sponsored or promoted by a ginger-ale company. But we never thought of him seriously except as a lobbyist or a holding company executive. But all of a sudden we see him pinnacled to a high position in the eyes of many people of this Nation and as I look him over I find he has an interesting character. He is a man of many features. He has been regarded as a two-fisted fighter. Of course, I confess when I heard his address, his acceptance speech, I was never so disappointed since my in-laws came to live with me. But other than that he has shown some fairly interesting features. I do not feel that I am criticizing a Republican when I criticize him, if you choose to call it criticism. Some of this is favorable and some not so hot.

He has an interesting character indeed. There are two outstanding American women you can compare him with, taking the gentle side of his nature.

Let us see how he may be compared with Barbara Frietchie. Barbara Frietchie:

> "Shoot, if you must, this old grey head,
> But spare my country's flag," she said.

Wendell Willkie:

> "Take boys with cheeks of glowing red,
> But spare my property," he said.

You know, there is a similarity of sentiment there.

Then we can compare him with another rather famous American woman, Miss Mae West. You will find this a tender comparison. Somebody, you will remember, came out with the statement that Mae had been married. They named the man. She said, "I never heard of him. I did not know there was such a man." But they pursued it a little further and gave the time and date so definitely, with the name of the man, that Mae came through and said, "Maybe we did get married a little."

Somebody said that Mr. Willkie went to New York and joined Tammany. Now, there are thousands of good Democratic New Yorkers who never belonged to the Tammany group and there are thousands of folks in Tammany who never had any disgrace touch their garments, even though they belonged to Tammany Hall. However, its name has gone abroad far beyond the knowledge of the thing itself. But Willkie said, "No, not me. I never had any association or affiliation with Tammany. Perish the thought." Here is the man who has been nominated for the Presidency. When they pursued the matter and gave the time, the place, and enrollment finally, Mr. Willkie said in effect, "Maybe I did join up with Tammany a little bit."

There is another similarity, after his long, tedious day's association with Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. VANDENBERG had something to say to him. He no doubt said, "You must get off this, my boy. You must get off this.

My position is tenable and consistent. I was against conscription of boys, therefore I can go right on through and be consistent and say we cannot conscript property. But the first thing you did was to bust loose and say, "I am for it, hooray!"

Mr. VANDENBERG said further, we think, "We must come in and define our position, but you are letting the cat right smack out of the bag, this is a dead give-away; it shows exactly what the issues are we have been trying to keep in the background for you to come out and say, 'Draft the boys, but do not draft property.'"

Mr. Speaker, the facts, when you commence to analyze them, are about like these: He said, "Can you give any explanation of what you meant?" He was about as definite as Miss Mae. You cannot get what he said. I defy any man here, Democrat or Republican, to tell me what position the revised statement of Wendell Willkie takes as to drafting property. It just cannot be "did."

I do not feel that I am taking any larruping at the Republican Party at all. The Republican Party is a grand old party. It has performed a great, magnificent service. It has done many fine things that no party has ever done. You will remember the "Stop Willkie" movement, at Philadelphia. They have revived that movement now, but it is the "Stop Willkie from talking" movement. If they can get that "Stop Willkie from talking" business through, maybe he will have a few of the votes left that he was going to get.

He wanted a bout with the Champ and he has it. But he is a sucker for lefts and rights. I do not think he can stand up under it much longer. Yet I think of the Republicans and think of the work they have done. They were oversold by a sales talk at Philadelphia and they bought one man on one great sales talk. He was opposed to Roosevelt, opposed to some of the workings of the Roosevelt administration, but in many instances he is not opposed to it on the same basis they are at all. In many instances his doctrine is entirely strange to theirs. I do not know whether the Republicans could control him if they could get him in the White House. It is true they have been great workers in the past at controlling their men.

As the giant Republicans of the past look today, if they could lean back into the past and call from the shadows the giants and hear them today, if they could call names like William McKinley, Uncle Joe Cannon, George Moses, Henry Cabot Lodge, Elihu Root, Boies Penrose—men of principle, men who were grounded in the faith, men of the Republican doctrine, and could get them to hear the voice of Willkie and compare him to the towering statesmen who have written across the high and burnished heavens the true doctrine of Republicanism, and then compare them to the political titmouse they are trying to carry today. What does Wendell Willkie care for the history, the traditions and the past glories of the Republican Party?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I have had a conference with the Republicans on this side and we would like to have the gentleman have about 15 minutes to continue that speech.

Mr. PATRICK. I certainly would appreciate it.

Mr. MICHENER. There will be a point of order of no quorum and there will not be any speech unless things are cut short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I did not get to finish my last sentence but have forgotten what it was, so I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I just wanted to say I thought the gentleman was being just a little severe when he urged that Boies Penrose was one of the great names of the Republican Party. Does not the gentleman think that was a little severe?

Mr. PATRICK. True, I did not mean Boies Penrose. I withdraw the name Boies Penrose and ask that the RECORD be properly corrected on that point.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Would the gentleman like to hear a quotation from Uncle Joe Cannon? He said: "The Democrats cannot run the country, the Republicans can hardly run it."

Mr. PATRICK. That is a good quotation. Had I known of it and if I had thought of it, I would have used it myself. I do not see why with that philosophy before them they did not nominate a Republican for their candidate for President. No man can contend that he is a Republican. He is not even a good Democrat. I have tried to be broadminded and nonpartisan on that. I think a really good Republican is the next thing to a Democrat in usefulness and value. Of course, a Republican cannot have all the qualifications that a Democrat has.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that much good is going to be done by this campaign. I believe that the strange intermingling of doctrines that has come about between the parties is bound to result in bringing forth from now on a different idea and a more solid front by this and that party. Ours is a bipartisan government. It should be that the parties nominating the men who are to carry their banners see that those men are true representatives, each of his party, so that a party bringing to the people its philosophy can do so with a certain degree of political integrity, can do so with a definiteness and a security of principles advocated that belongs with the party that brings such a man forth. Then the other party comes forward with its doctrine and its philosophy, to bring up the other side. This is what truly and honestly gives us a bipartisan form of government. Thus we have one party dealing honestly and sincerely with whatever effort it is bringing forth, and so is the other party. This does not give you that criss-cross, indirect, indistinct line of demarcation that at this time has so definitely asserted itself in this strange commingling of the two parties. I believe good will come out of it.

I am honestly of the opinion that if there is not a reform in the direction in which the Republican Party is moving it will forfeit whatever opportunity it has ever to come into power again. It would serve the Republicans right, the way they are hollering and clamoring, to win this time. They do not have a chance upon God's green earth to do so, but the way they are hollering for it and begging the people for it, it would serve them right to win this time with this Willkie-McNary set-up on their hands, and have to wrestle with it for 4 years. If that were to happen, the Republicans would never have another man in the White House as long as the history of the United States goes on.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman means you have left such a mess that even we could not clean it up?

Mr. PATRICK. We have not been able to clean up all the mess we found, I will be honest about it. We thought we could.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You sure have added several piles to it.

Mr. PATRICK. Of course, the banks are not failing like they were and the national income is not going down like it was when we took over and labor is better off.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin and Mr. HOFFMAN rose.

Mr. PATRICK. Let me yield to Chief Big-Thunder-No-Rain over here. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman compared the next President, Mr. Willkie, with Barbara Fritchie.

Mr. PATRICK. Just on one remote point.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Would it not be a better comparison if you compared him with Patrick Henry who said, "Give me liberty or give me death"? Mr. Willkie says, give the American people liberty or give them New Deal political death.

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; I heard about that "Give me liberty or give me death" when I was a mere child.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Willkie's whole campaign symbolizes "give the American people liberty or give them New Deal political death." He is fighting for liberty as did Patrick Henry.

Mr. PATRICK. In other words, the issue is whether we should have liberty on the one hand or Willkie on the other. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, if I am permitted to discuss a very serious matter at this time, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that the American people deem it to be the duty of every Member of the House to cast a record vote on the conference report on the conscription bill.

This bill, in my opinion, is the most vital issue that has faced this country since the days of Lincoln, and I submit that we should not dodge a record yea-and-nay vote on the conference report on the conscription bill. My asking for a yea-and-nay vote or any other individual Member asking for a yea-and-nay vote may not bring the required number of Members to their feet to obtain a yea-and-nay vote. Since the issue is so fundamental, since the issue is so far reaching, I believe that the responsibility of obtaining a record yea-and-nay vote on the conscription bill conference report rests directly on the leadership of the House on both sides. I am not seeking to embarrass anybody, but this bill, in my opinion, will constitute, when we adopt the conference report, the surrender of the next to the last bridgehead in the defense of American democracy.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Are we not already on record?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am coming to that and I will answer that question. No; we are not definitely on record and I will tell the gentleman why. When we had the Fish amendment in the bill and we voted on that bill with the Fish amendment in it, the issue was not clear to the people of the country on where the Members stand on the question of conscription. Now the Fish amendment is out of the conference report; so when we vote the conference report up or down we are voting yes or no on the question of conscription. The other day, when we voted on the bill with the Fish amendment in it, some people would say, "Well, he voted yea on the bill because of the Fish amendment," or he may have voted no because of the Fish amendment or the Fish amendment to the contrary notwithstanding. We did not have a real clear issue and the only thing that presents a clear issue on the question of conscription is a vote of yea or nay on this conference report, and I believe that the people of the country demand that of us.

Next to the matter of voting on war, this conscription conference report is the most important question that this Congress or the next Congress is going to have, and how can we dodge it? I think we will be remiss in our duty if we dodge it. I do not want to be placed in the position of scolding anybody; I do not want to be placed in the position of warning anybody, but I say we owe it to the people of this country to let them know where we stand on the question of conscription, and that question will be clearly presented on the adoption or the voting down of the conference report. [Applause.]

SENATE

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord of all being, who holdest the universe, even myriads of worlds, in Thy hand, so that our thoughts can in nowise fathom the immensity of Thy dominion, nevertheless Thou knowest and carest for each human soul, with the secret tragedy of its personal life: Help us, therefore, to realize that each lives in God and God in each, and that, underneath the invisible wings of divine care, we take our way; and do Thou teach us as we go what we should be learning, whether it be on smooth plains or on the troubled steeps of our existence. For the duties of the day we pray for courage, wisdom, clearness of vision, and sincerity of purpose. Bless especially these Thy servants. May the strength of each one of us be as the strength of ten, because our hearts are pure, and may every citizen of our beloved land remember, to the glory of America, that righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. We ask it for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

SOCIAL GAINS AND INSURANCE PROTECTION (H. DOC. NO. 951)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

The social gains of recent years, including insurance and other benefit rights, must be preserved unimpaired. The National Guard legislation, which I recently approved, contained provisions evidencing this policy in connection with benefit rights of workers who are called into active service, and a similar provision is contained in pending selective-service legislation.

I recommend to the Congress early consideration of the problems thus recognized and enactment of the necessary legislation incident to preserving insurance protection under the Social Security Act, the Railroad Retirement Act, and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and to facilitate State action under the Federal-State unemployment-insurance program.

The agencies administering the Federal acts have been considering the needed technical changes to meet these problems and are now ready to furnish recommendations to the Congress in this connection.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1940.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should simply like to observe that, anticipating the President's message by 48 hours, I have introduced as an amendment to the pending tax measure the necessary legislation to achieve these purposes.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"That (a) the Congress hereby declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

"(b) The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service.

"(c) The Congress further declares, in accordance with our traditional military policy as expressed in the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended, that it is essential that the strength and organization of the National Guard, as an integral part of the first-line defenses of this Nation, be at all times maintained and assured. To this end, it is the intent of the Congress that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed for the national security in excess of those of the Regular Army and those in active training and service under section 3 (b), the National Guard of the United States, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall be ordered to active Federal service and continued therein so long as such necessity exists.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, every male citizen of the United States, and every male alien residing in the United States who has declared his intention to become such a citizen, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six at the time fixed for his registration, shall be liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized from time to time, whether or not a state of war exists, to select and induct into the land and naval forces of the United States for training and service, in the manner provided in this Act, such number of men as in his judgment is required for such forces in the national interest: Provided, That within the limits of the quota determined under section 4 (b) for the subdivision in which he resides, any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of eighteen and thirty-six, shall be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction into the land or naval forces of the United States for the training and service prescribed in subsection (b), but no person who so volunteers shall be inducted for such training and service so long as he is deferred after classification: Provided further, That no man shall be inducted for training and service under this Act unless and until he is acceptable to the land or naval forces for such training and service and his physical and mental fitness for such training and service has been satisfactorily determined: Provided further, That no men shall be inducted for such training and service until adequate provision shall have been made for such shelter, sanitary facilities, water supplies, heating and lighting arrangements, medical care, and hospital accommodations, for such men, as may be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, to be essential to public and personal health: Provided further, That except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time under subsection (b) more than nine hundred thousand men inducted under the provisions of this Act. The men inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall be assigned to camps or units of such forces.

"(b) Each man inducted under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a training and service period of twelve consecutive months, unless sooner discharged, except that whenever the Congress has declared that the national interest is imperiled, such twelve-month period may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interests of national defense.

"(c) Each such man, after the completion of his period of training and service under subsection (b), shall be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States, and until he attains the age of forty-five, or until the expiration of a period of ten years after such transfer, or until he is discharged from such reserve component, whichever occurs first, he shall be deemed to be a member of such reserve component and shall be subject to such additional training and service as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law: Provided, That any man who completes at least twelve months' training and service in the land forces under subsection (b), and who thereafter serves satisfactorily in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard for a period of at least two years, shall, in time of peace, be relieved from any liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States and from further liability for the training and service under subsection (b), but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent any such man, while in a reserve component of such forces, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(d) With respect to the men inducted for training and service under this Act there shall be paid, allowed, and extended the same pay, allowances, pensions, disability and death compensation, and other benefits as are provided by law in the case of other enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land or naval forces to which they are assigned, and after transfer to a reserve component of the land or naval forces as provided in subsection (c) there shall be paid, allowed, and extended with respect to them the same benefits as are provided by law in like cases with respect to other members of such reserve component. Men in such training and service and men who have been so transferred to reserve components shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

"(e) Persons inducted into the land forces of the United States under this Act shall not be employed beyond the limits of the Western Hemisphere except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands.

"(f) Nothing contained in this or any other Act shall be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States for training and service under this Act, or to members of the reserve components of such forces now or hereafter on any type of active duty, who, prior to their induction or commencement of active duty, were receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation.

"SEC. 4. (a) The selection of men for training and service under section 3 (other than those who are voluntarily inducted pursuant to this Act) shall be made in an impartial manner, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, from the men who are liable for such training and service and who at the time of selection are registered and classified but not deferred or exempted: Provided, That in the selection and training of men under this Act, and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this Act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.

"(b) Quotas of men to be inducted for training and service under this Act shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification, except that credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas. After such quotas are fixed, credits shall be given in filling such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who subsequently become members of such forces. Until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known, the quotas may be based on estimates, and subsequent adjustments therein shall be made when such actual numbers are known. All computations under this subsection shall be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Public Health Service, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United States Naval Academy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; men who have been accepted for admittance (commencing with the academic year next succeeding such acceptance) to the United States Military Academy as cadets, to the United States Naval Academy as midshipmen, or to the United States Coast Guard Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; cadets of the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of foreign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 2 and shall be relieved from liability for training and service under section 3 (b).

"(b) In time of peace, the following persons shall be relieved from liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States and from liability for training and service under section 3 (b)—

"(1) Any man who shall have satisfactorily served for at least three consecutive years in the Regular Army before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(2) Any man who as a member of the active National Guard shall have satisfactorily served for at least one year in active Federal service in the Army of the United States, and subsequent thereto for at least two consecutive years in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(3) Any man who is in the active National Guard at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration.

"(4) Any man who is in the Officers' Reserve Corps on the eligible list at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein on the eligible list for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the persons enumerated in this subsection, while in reserve components of the land or naval forces of the United States, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(c) (1) The Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States.

"(2) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States, of any person holding an office (other than an office described in paragraph (1) of this subsection) under the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest.

"(d) Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion, and students who are preparing for the ministry in theological or divinity schools recognized as such for more than one year prior to the date of enactment of this Act, shall be exempt from training and service (but not from registration) under this Act.

"(e) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States of those men whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations or employment, or whose activity in other endeavors, is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest. The President is also authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States (1) of those men in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their deferment advisable, and (2) of those men found to be physically, mentally, or morally deficient or defective. No deferment from such training and service shall be made in the case of any individual except upon the basis of the status of such individual, and no such deferment shall be made of individuals by occupational groups or of groups of individuals in any plant or institution.

"(f) Any person who, during the year 1940, entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–1941—

"(1) at any college or university which grants a degree in arts or science, to pursue a course of instruction satisfactory completion of which is prescribed by such college or university as a prerequisite to either of such degrees; or

"(2) at any university described in paragraph (1), to pursue a course of instruction to the pursuit of which a degree in arts or science is prescribed by such university as a prerequisite;

and who, while pursuing such course of instruction at such college or university, is selected for training and service under this Act prior to the end of such academic year, or prior to July 1, 1941, whichever occurs first, shall, upon his request, be deferred from induction into the land or naval forces for such training and service until the end of such academic year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

"(g) Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. And such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction, be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal to the appropriate appeal board provided for in section 10 (a) (2). Upon the filing of such appeal with the appeal board, the appeal board shall forthwith refer the matter to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing by the Department or the proper agency thereof. After appropriate inquiry by such agency, a hearing shall be held by the Department of Justice with respect to the character and good faith of the objections of the person concerned, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The Department shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend to the appeal board (1) that if the objector is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, he shall be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) that if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, he shall in lieu of such induction be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after such hearing the Department finds that his objections are not sustained, it shall recommend to the appeal board that such objections be not sustained. The appeal board shall give consideration to but shall not be bound to follow the recommendation of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board in making its decision. Each person whose claim for exemption from combatant training and service because of conscientious objections is sustained shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors.

"(h) No exception from registration, or exemption or deferment from training and service, under this Act, shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

"SEC. 6. The President shall have authority to induct into the land and naval forces of the United States under this Act no greater number of men than the Congress shall hereafter make specific appropriation for from time to time.

"SEC. 7. No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in or be inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States: Provided, That the clothing or enlistment allowances authorized by law shall not be regarded as bounties within the meaning of this section. No person liable for service in such forces shall be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; no substitute as such shall be received, enlisted, enrolled, or inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States; and no person liable for training and service in such forces under section 3 shall be permitted to escape such training and service or be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his period of such training and service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from such training and service or liability therefor.

"SEC. 8. (a) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service, who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes his period of training and service under section 3 (b) shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such period of training and service, which shall include a record of any special proficiency or merit attained. In addition, each such person who is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service shall be given a physical examination at the beginning of such training and service and a medical statement showing any physical defects noted upon such examination; and upon the completion of his period of training and service under section 3 (b), each such person shall be given another physical examination and shall be given a medical statement showing any injuries, illnesses, or disabilities suffered by him during such period of training and service.

"(b) In the case of any such person who, in order to perform such training and service, has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within forty days after he is relieved from such training and service—

"(A) if such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such person shall be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

"(B) if such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

"(C) if such position was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

"(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of training and service in the land or naval forces, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was inducted into such forces, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.

"(d) Section 3 (c) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of active military service, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was ordered into such service, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.'

"(e) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (b) or subsection (c), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions, and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney or comparable official for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney or official, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

"(f) Section 3 (d) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: ', and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action'.

"(g) The Director of Selective Service herein provided for shall establish a Personnel Division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for, members of the reserve components of the land and naval forces of the United States who have satisfactorily completed any period of active duty, and persons who have satisfactorily completed any period of their training and service under this Act.

"(h) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in person or by absentee ballot in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, whether he is within or outside of such State at the time of such election, if under the laws of such State he is entitled so to vote in such election; but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require granting to any such person a leave of absence for longer than one day in order to permit him to vote in person in any such election.

"(i) It is the expressed policy of the Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this Act such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

"Sec. 9. The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required, and which is of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

"Compliance with all such orders for products or material shall be obligatory on any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment, who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment, at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, then, and in either such case, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than three years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

"The compensation to be paid to any individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for its products or material, or as rental for use of any manufacturing plant while used by the United States, shall be fair and just: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in such plant.

"The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the Act entitled 'An Act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes', approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act Numbered 671, Seventy-sixth Congress), are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. (a) The President is authorized—

"(1) to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act;

"(2) to create and establish a Selective Service System, and shall provide for the classification of registrants and of persons who volunteer for induction under this Act on the basis of availability for training and service, and shall establish within the Selective Service System civilian local boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivision corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials. No member of any such local board shall be a member of the land or naval forces of the United States, but each member of any such local board shall be a civilian who is a citizen of the United States residing in the county or political subdivision corresponding thereto in which such local board has jurisdiction under rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized, all questions or claims with respect to inclusion for, or exemption or deferment from, training and service under this Act of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Appeal boards and agencies of appeal within the Selective Service System shall be composed of civilians who are citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the Selective Service System, or of any such local or appeal board or other agency, shall be excepted from registration, or deferred from training and service, as provided for in this Act, by reason of his status as such officer, member, agent or employee;

"(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this Act; and

"(5) to purchase such printing, binding, and blankbook work from public, commercial, or private printing establishments or binderies upon orders placed by the Public Printer or upon waivers issued in accordance with section 12 of the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, as amended by the Act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475), and to obtain by purchase, loan, or gift such equipment and supplies for the Selective Service System as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, with or without advertising or formal contract; and

"(b) The President is further authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to delegate and provide for the delegation of any authority vested in him under this Act to such officers, agents, or persons as he may designate or appoint for such purpose or as may be designated or appointed for such purpose pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"(c) In the administration of this Act voluntary services may be accepted. Correspondence necessary in the execution of this Act may be carried in official penalty envelopes.

"(d) The Chief of Finance, United States Army, is hereby designated, empowered, and directed to act as the fiscal, disbursing, and accounting agent of the Director of Selective Service in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 11. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying out any of the provisions of this Act, or the rules or regulations made or directions given thereunder who shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform such duty, and any person charged with such duty, or having and exercising any authority under said Act, rules, regulations, or directions who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making, of any false, improper, or incorrect registration, classification, physical or mental examination, deferment, induction, enrollment, or muster, and any person who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making of, any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or unfitness or liability or nonliability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this Act, or rules, regulations, or directions made pursuant thereto, or who otherwise evades registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this Act, or who knowingly counsels, aids, or abets another to evade registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this Act, or of said rules, regulations, or directions, or who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under or in the execution of this Act, or rules or regulations made pursuant to this Act, or any person or persons who shall knowingly hinder or interfere in any way by force or violence with the administration of this Act or the rules or regulations made pursuant thereto, or conspire to do so, shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than five years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, or if subject to military or naval law may be tried by court martial, and, on conviction, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial may direct. No person shall be tried by any military or naval court martial in any case arising under this Act unless such person has been actually inducted for the training and service prescribed under this Act or unless he is subject to trial by court martial under laws in force prior to the enactment of this Act. Precedence shall be given by courts to the trial of cases arising under this Act.

Enlisted men of the Navy shall be entitled to receive at least the same pay and allowances as are provided for enlisted men in similar grades in the Army and Marine Corps.

"(b) The pay for specialists' rating received by an enlisted man of the Army or the Marine Corps at the time of his retirement shall be included in the computation of his retired pay.

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that my action last night in substituting the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] on the conference committee be ratified by the Senate. The Senate had recessed, and quick action was necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GILLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I rise to make a statement for the RECORD. At the time of the vote which was taken on the conference report today I was conducting a hearing of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures. In the committee room where the hearing was being conducted the bells do not ring; and it was not until a few moments ago, when I was on my way to the Chamber, that I learned that the vote had been taken. I wish to state that had I been present I should have voted against the conference report, and that my absence was due to the conduct of essential public business in which I was engaged.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 4164 be printed as agreed to by the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, now that the conference report on the military selective service bill has been agreed to, I desire to make a brief statement on one vicissitude of the bill before it closes its history in this body. I refer to the amendment offered in the Senate by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and in the House of Representatives by Representative FISH, of New York.

It will be recalled that the operation of the amendment would have paralleled the draft. It provided that the President should make an effort to get a sufficient number of volunteers so that the draft would not be necessary. It never was my idea that a sufficient number of volunteers would come forward, but it was the opinion of certain Senators that the voluntary system might work, and I could see no harm in giving it a trial, when it would work side by side with the Selective Service Act, and in either case the same result would be obtained in the same length of time and without any delay.

I rise now particularly to deal with the grossly misleading and, in fact, false reports which were carried in most of the press all over the country, to the effect that the Hayden-Fish amendment would cause a 60-day delay. Every Senator knows that that statement has not a shred of fact or truth to support it. The operation of the Hayden amendment would be simultaneous with the draft procedure, and the same net number of men would be obtained by the Army at the same time under either one process or the other, or a combination of both. There would not have been any delay.

Then the propagandists, including some news writers, editors, cartoonists, and radio commentators, in order to discredit the Hayden-Fish amendment, instead of attacking it on its merits, saying they did not think it provided the best way to deal with the matter, for which a good argument could have been produced and supported, with which many men would have agreed, attempted to give the impression that it was a political amendment, designed to postpone the draft until after election day.

Every man in his right mind knows there will not be a soldier actually drafted, without the Hayden-Fish amendment under the measure just agreed to, until after election day. It is physically, humanly, administratively, practically, impossible to set up the machinery and draft the men before the election takes place in November.

In support of that statement, I wish to read from an article on the Hayden-Fish amendment and the falsely so-called 60-day delay, in the column of Gen. Hugh Johnson, who was deputy administrator of the Draft Act in the last war. It is just three paragraphs. This is what General Johnson said:

> The Fish amendment—
> Which was the equivalent of the Hayden amendment—> to the Selective Service Act, tentatively adopted by the House, has been erroneously reported as a measure to postpone effectiveness of the selective service law by 60 days. It has other gross faults, but it does not do that. As soon as the law passes, the Government can set up the machinery for registration and classification of manpower. It can proceed, when ready to register them and, rapidly as possible, to classify them in the order of their relative availability for military service with the least possible disturbance of domestic, industrial, or social relations.
> You can't have any actual taking of men into the Army under our system until the registration is complete to the last man. You can't have it until the classification has proceeded at least to the point of filling the quotas of each locality. "Filling the quotas" means the actual taking of men for whom the great lottery in Washington has determined that their turn has come and of whom committees of their neighbors have decided that there is less reason for them to remain in the civil occupations than exists for other men.
> Starting from scratch, this machinery could not possibly be set up, oiled, and put in efficient operation to produce 400,000 or even 100,000 men in less than 60 days. All that the Fish amendment provides is that while the machinery may be created as quickly as possible, it can't actually take a single man for 60 days. Thus, on the cold hard facts, there will be no real delay on this score.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will let me finish my statement I shall be glad to yield to him.

Yet I do not think I have failed in the period of the last 2 weeks to read on the front pages of a large part of the press of the Nation that the Hayden-Fish proposition was a "60-day delay amendment," or some comment about the "60-day delay amendment," when as a matter of fact there would not be a minute's delay if the Hayden-Fish amendment had been adopted.

Then we also read that it was designed to postpone the draft from taking effect until after election day. I should like to ask the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, who has had the bill in charge, and who has ably presented the case for the bill from beginning to end, what in his opinion would be the shortest possible time, if all worked harmoniously, from the time of the signing of the bill, before the first man would probably be actually taken or drafted in his community.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In the neighborhood of 45 days.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is a very—shall I say—constrained prediction, because 45 days will be the quickest possible time; and if it is 45 days, Senators, that will be election day, which proves my point that even without the Hayden amendment, and even without the Fish amendment, no one will be drafted until after election day, and all the editorials, news items, cartoons, and statements by columnists and commentators are just so much piffle.

Fortunately in my own State, with the exception of a small newspaper, the false impression was corrected early, and the truth was there published, but outside of that State I hardly know of another one in the Union where the truth about the Hayden-Fish amendment was presented to the American people.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Whether or not the Hayden-Fish amendment would result in any delay—60 days or otherwise—in the actual calling of men into camp I think may be open to more question than is in the mind of the Senator from Maryland. But would not the Senator at least admit that the adoption of the Hayden-Fish amendment would have amounted to a delay, a postponement of positive declaration by Congress that in the emergency which confronts the Nation we had made up our minds to adopt the only sound and feasible method, as everyone recognizes, of building up our manpower to the degree that we must have it built up in the near future? Certainly there would have been a delay in the decision on that point and the application of that principle.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I said in the beginning that I voted for the Hayden amendment not because I believed that the voluteer system would produce 400,000 men, but to give those who seemed to believe that it would, an opportunity. It was not a question of preference with me; it was a matter of trying to harmonize and get the same result in the same time.

Now as to the question by my good friend the Senator from Nebraska. If the Hayden-Fish amendment had remained in the bill I do not believe any delay at all would have ensued, for in either case, within 60 days after the Presidential pen made it a law we would have 400,000 men leaving their homes. It would not make any difference if the Hayden-Fish amendment had been in or had been out of the legislation—there would not have been any delay.

I will watch with much curiosity to see if anyone is drafted under this bill before election day, not because of any political reason but because in my judgment, as General Johnson himself said, it is practically impossible to appoint the draft boards in all the communities of the Nation, register the men, call them up and examine them physically and in every other way, and decide on the first 400,000, and then actually take them away from home in a 60-day period.

So that all this "boloney"—and that is all it is—and all the propaganda about the Hayden-Fish amendment was really, insofar as I can compare it with other things, not creditable, with very few exceptions, to the press of the United States. That also applies to those who wrote the editorials misrepresenting the real truth and purpose of the Hayden-Fish amendment.

I am not a candidate for election this year. Neither is the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. If the proposal had come from a Senator who was up for election, such an innuendo might have some basis. I voted for the bill. I have been for the bill for a long while in some form or other, for some sort of military service. Even 6 months ago I said I thought it was necessary. But the interpretation of the misnamed 60-day-delay clause and the political conception of the Hayden amendment as set forth in the press is not creditable nor is it conducive to honest thinking on the part of the electorate, but it is in line with some of the hysteria which all too frequently now is beclouding the legislative scene.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not think, does he, that even if there were time to draft men before election day there would be any possibility that the Army would start taking boys away from their homes before election day? I disagree with the Senator, in that I think the Army can take them before election day. But I venture the assertion that there will not be any man taken away before election day.

Mr. TYDINGS. Whether the men can be taken away or whether they cannot be taken away, I believe the program will be put into effect at the first possible opportunity. Will those who said that under the amendment no one could be drafted before election day now assert the men will be drafted before election day? No; we will hear no more of that. Those who made the claim will not make the claim now that the boys will be drafted before election day. Yet that artifice, that false premise, that false assumption, that false principle, with respect to an honest amendment, the purpose of which was to try to reconcile differences in this body, was used to propagandize the whole country on an entirely false basis in the consideration of this measure. Now that it is behind us, the hysteria will lie dormant until another measure comes along, when it will break out again, and this all in the name of preserving democracy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree entirely with what the Senator says about the hysteria and the unfairness of the press about the matter. I call attention to the last sentence in the Hayden-Fish amendment——

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish the Senator would read that sentence very carefully.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is as follows:

> Nothing in this subsection——

Mr. TYDINGS. Begin reading again. I was still speaking when the Senator began reading.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. "Nothing"—and that is a specfic provision—

> Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require or postpone during either of such 60-day periods the registration, classification, or selection of persons to be inducted for training and service under this act.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All delay was specifically excluded from the Hayden-Fish amendment. There is no question on earth about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not a particle.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I disagree with the Senator as to any possibility of there being a draft before the election. I know very well that when General Shedd, after only 4 days' debate in the Senate, said that unreasonable delay by the Senate in the enactment of this measure would postpone the operation of the draft until January, he had a tip from somebody. I know well that the managers of this political campaign are too smart to have 400,000 mothers coming down to the station platform to kiss the boys good-bye, and have the boys go away to compulsory military servitude in time of peace.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will make a request of all those who in the press of the country dwelt vociferously upon the need of speed, speed, speed in their opposition to the Hayden-Fish amendment. If, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] say—I do not say so—if, as they say, no one is drafted within 60 days, I hope the editors will write editorials about themselves, or at least be fair enough to recant and correct the erroneous impression which they presented to the country by misrepresenting the operations of the Hayden-Fish amendment. I think the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] as well as myself are indebted to General Johnson. Certainly, if there is an authority on the draft in the world, there is no greater authority than the Deputy Administrator of the last draft. He says it will take at least 60 days after the bill is signed for the first man to be drafted.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator has just said that the people of the United States are indebted to General Johnson for this information. I thank General Johnson for supplying the information. However, the Senator from Maryland certainly knows that every fact which General Johnson mentions in that article was brought out on the floor of the Senate days and days before General Johnson wrote the article.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. So far as the information is concerned, it was presented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and other Senators. We went through the history of the last draft, giving the dates, and pointing out exactly what would happen. Incidentally, this draft is a little more complicated than was the last one. Incidentally, we are not at war, so there is no need of the haste with which we acted before.

The point I wish to make is the point which the Senator has already made. So far as the information is concerned, it was brought out on the floor of the Senate. It was in the RECORD; and if Senators had read the RECORD instead of the newspaper columns probably they would have been better informed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to conclude by presenting the picture of the effect of the Hayden-Fish amendment, according to the news which was carried in the press of the country. It was as follows: There would be a 60-day call for volunteers, during which nothing would be done about the draft. There would be no registration; there would be no classification; there would be no examination. None of the machinery would be put in motion to start the draft until after the 60-day period. Then, after the 60-day period, for the first time, the whole machinery of the draft would begin to operate, so that within 60 or 90 days thereafter the draft would be effective.

That was the untrue picture presented to the country about the workings of the Hayden-Fish amendment. The true picture, as buttressed by the amendment which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] read, and which was adopted as a part of the Hayden amendment, was that there would be no delay; men would be drafted with the Hayden amendment in the bill just as quickly as they would be drafted without it.

I have never believed that the voluntary system would suffice. Indeed, I listened with much sympathy to the arguments of those who held that the volunteer system was not as equitable as the selective system. But because there were those who felt that the volunteer system should have a further trial, and who said it would work, I was anxious to show that it would not work in this emergency. Now, unfortunately, we shall not have a trial of the volunteer system, so the question will always be moot.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As one who voted against the amendment, let me say to the Senator that I do not wish to be maneuvered into the position taken by certain newspapers.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not recall the Senator from Texas made any particular charge against the amendment of the Senator from Arizona as delaying the program; but my position—and I am sure I speak for many others—was that I did not believe the volunteer system to be a fair system.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. I prefer to start with the draft system, irrespective of the question of delay.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Texas that the question we are discussing does not turn on whether the selective or the volunteer system is the better. The point I am attempting to make is that under the Hayden-Fish amendment there would be no delay in either system, or in both combined. I wish to show up the hypocrisy of the statement in the press to the effect that if the Hayden amendment were to remain in the bill no men would be drafted until after election, when, as a matter of fact, with the Hayden-Fish amendment out of the bill they will not be drafted until after election. In my opinion, very little will be written to correct that false impression.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say that, so far as the election is concerned, I do not believe any Senator was actuated by such a motive.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I claim the floor in my own right for just a word.

I do not think Senators were actuated in their vote on the Hayden amendment, or any other amendment, by the pendency of an election, or that they had it in mind at all. Those of us who voted to put the draft in effect at the earliest possible moment certainly could not be charged with any effort to avoid its consequences in respect to the election; and I feel sure that those who advocated the Hayden amendment were not actuated by any motive of a political character. I make that statement as one who has consistently voted for the conscription idea as contrasted with the volunteer idea. I voted that way because I thought the conscription system was a more equitable, democratic, and fair system of calling men into the armed services than was the volunteer system.

I cannot repeat the arguments which were made from time to time. I am sure Senators are quite familiar with them. However, I wish to vindicate the Senate of the charge of approaching the serious, solemn, and heavy responsibility of raising an army in the light of an election in November.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, we have just listened to an extremely logical and well-grounded criticism of the press of the United States in connection with the conference report. I agree with everything the Senator from Maryland has said about that matter; but I do not think the adoption of the conference report ought to pass without a brief recognition of and compliment to the remarkable clairvoyant power of the radio commentator or newspaper reporter, as the case may be, who first "misquoted" the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs as to what would be in the conference report. It has been repeatedly stated that he was infamously misquoted. I do not know whether the misquotation originated in a newspaper column or on the radio. I first heard it on the radio, and the next morning I read it in the newspapers. I do not know which was first; but whoever "misquoted" the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs is entitled to compliments for his remarkable clairvoyant powers, because what he "misquoted" the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs as predicting would be in the conference report was in the conference report, almost word for word and line for line.

The radio commentator or newspaper reporter, as the case may be, ought to rejoice in the fact that if he is ever fired from his present job he can make an independent fortune by setting himself up as a fortuneteller in Washington, because no more accurate misquotation ever appeared in the public press or on the radio of the country.

LOVETTSVILLE AIRPLANE DISASTER

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a week ago last Thursday, following the unfortunate airplane crash which took place at Lovettsville, Va., on the 31st of August, I submitted a resolution and had it lie on the desk without reference. I did so purposely. I took that course, not to have it referred to any committee at that time, because I had been advised, and the press had carried the notice, that under the auspices of the Commerce Department the committee on air supervision, or whatever it may be called, was to hold hearings. I thought it best that the matter rest in abeyance until after those hearings had been concluded. I received a very cordial invitation from the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, Mr. Harllee Branch, to attend the hearings.

I did not attend because I was unable to attend. I did, however, make a request that I be furnished with a daily transcript of the testimony, and, through the graciousness of the Civil Aeronautics Board, I was afforded a copy of the daily transcript, which I tried, as diligently as I could, to follow from day to day, and to study from time to time. It is probably a good thing that I did not attend the hearings before the Civil Aeronautics Board, because, according to the transcript, one of the very first things done was to announce that any questions to be asked would have to be asked in writing and submitted to the Chairman of the Board. I am familiar with that old game, if I may so call it, and had I been there, of course, I would have been very much handicapped in asking questions; in fact, probably I would have been precluded from asking questions.

I make some reference to the matter here today because, at the close of my brief remarks, I shall move that my resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce, for which it was drafted in the first instance.

Mr. President, there appeared in the columns of the press today a statement, as follows:

As hearings ended, several Government experts testified to refute charges by Senator PAT MCCARRAN, Democrat, that wreckage of the plane was negligently guarded or the probes following the crash inefficiently conducted.

Then there is the further statement:

Frank Caldwell, chief of the inspection division of the C. A. B.'s Safety Bureau, declared there was "nothing extraordinary" in handling of the wreckage, adding the same proceedings were followed as formerly used by the old Air Safety Board.

Then, in quotation marks—

"Pet agency" of McCARRAN which was abolished when the C. A. B. was reorganized back into the Commerce Department.

Mr. President, I made no accusation whatsoever. The only thing I did was to send down a little leaflet with a few questions on it that they might be answered by someone before the Board. This in my hand [exhibiting] is a copy of "questions to be answered." I will read them.

Where are the two engines removed from the plane?

There is no charge in that question.

The second question is:

Who removed them?

There is certainly no charge in that question.

By what authority were they removed?

There is no charge in that question.

Where were they taken and where are they now?

There is no charge in that question.

Where, specifically, are the main bearings, the connecting rods, and the crankshafts of each engine?

There is certainly no charge in that question.

Are all of these things in the custody of C. A. A.?
If so, where and under whose supervision?
If not, why not, and under whose supervision are they at present?
Thank you.

PAT McCARRAN.

The only contact I had with the Board was to submit those questions.

It appears, from whatever source it emanates, that I had made charges. I made no charges whatever, but I had a reason for asking those specific questions, because the parts mentioned in the questions had been removed from the ground and had been taken to the headquarters of the Pennsylvania Air Lines. I knew that. I went out on the ground and made as careful an inspection as a layman could make. I am not an expert in any sense of the word. I saw that those parts had been removed. I knew, from specific information given to me by an authority who will not be questioned, that certain parts, namely, the main bearings and the drive shaft, had certain specific markings on them which indicated a certain condition, namely, that the bearings were not receiving sufficient lubrication during the time of the flight. I knew that was true, and I wanted to know where those parts were so that the Senate committee might, when it undertook to investigate, find the parts, inspect them, and determine the accuracy of the information which had come to me.

Mr. President, a day or so before the hearings commenced there was a whispering going around here and in the neighborhood of the accident, and that whispering was building up a fallacy, if you please, or a false idea. One heard from mouths that seldom utter the expression and scarcely knew what it was the homely expression that is used in certain cases, "an act of God; it was an act of God." When I went on the ground I heard that the accident was caused by a stroke of lightning, but when the experts looked for evidence of lightning contact, there was not a single scintilla of such evidence. Whenever a bolt of lightning strikes a plane there is a fusing of the metal parts and a burning out of the fuses in the radio equipment. That condition was not present and there was no evidence that a bolt of lightning had struck the plane. No lightning ever struck that plane; the experts have so testified, and I have before me volume after volume of testimony adduced before the Board that the plane was not struck by a bolt of lightning.

When that "build up" was negatived and lightning could not be ascribed as the cause of the accident there was another fallacy built up; whispering went the rounds that the two pilots were hit by a bolt of lightning that came near to the plane. That fallacy was exploded completely by the hearings before the C. A. B.

What I am leading up to, aside from the fact that I propose to move to have my resolution referred to the Commerce Committee, is that there were not the proper safeguards thrown about that plane nor its flight. That plane should not have left the Washington airport, especially at the time it did leave the airport. Let me give a few homely things that are in the record made by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The pilot of that plane taxied out to the end of the runway to take his flight; then he taxied back because he found defective conditions in the oil feed. There was something done at the airport to repair that condition temporarily, at least. Then he taxied back again to take his flight.

Before a pilot takes his flight he is advised of weather conditions, and from the weather conditions he charts his altitude. The pilot of this flight having been advised of weather conditions, charted his altitude at 6,000 feet. That was the altitude he was going to reach as soon as he could, because there was coming over the Blue Ridge Mountains at that time a storm the like of which was never known in that section; old pioneers who live in that country will tell you so; and the evidence of the storm and the flood is there now.

So the pilot was going to 6,000 feet to get above the storm. At Herndon, about 20 minutes out, he reported back to the Washington station that he was cruising at 4,000 feet and going up. He had not reached his altitude then. About 8 minutes from that time, the plane went down. That is the time as nearly as can be determined, and it is determined by the watches which were taken from the bodies of those on the plane and from the clocks of the plane which were stopped. He was up 4,000 feet at Herndon. He had not been able to gain his altitude up to that time. There was some reason for that. Such a condition is not at all unusual. There might have been a perfectly good reason for it; but there were brought in to testify those who observed the transit of that plane going across that country, people who have been accustomed to seeing planes going over their heads, farmers who live at Lovettsville and surrounding Lovettsville. They testified variously, but nearly every one of them testified that the plane was flying lower than the average flight of planes going over there. Let me give an illustration so homely that it brings out something that impresses one with the truth of it all.

A farmer named Vancell was sitting on his porch. He saw the plane coming over, and it was lower than planes had generally come over. He was right in the route of the plane. He saw the plane coming over, and this is the way he testified. He said:

Thinks I, "my, you're low." I said to myself, "Old Boy, you had better raise a little. You had better raise a little, or you won't get over that mountain. If you don't raise, old boy, you are not going over that mountain."

He said—

Of course, I said it to myself. I didn't tell him.

It was a homely way of expressing a condition that prevailed then, that after the pilot reported in from Herndon he was starting to go down. He had not been able to gain his altitude. There was a defective mechanism there just as surely as I stand here. The pilot was flying directly in the face of an electric storm that he wanted to get above, and he would have gone over it had he been able to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time under the unanimous-consent agreement has expired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Have I any more time left, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that only one speech shall be made by each Senator during the pendency of a particular amendment.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada be permitted to conclude his statement.

Mr. McCARRAN. It will take only a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said he was about to move to have the resolution referred to the committee. I am sure there will be no objection if he asks unanimous consent, when he finishes his remarks, that the resolution be referred to the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator.

I shall not go further into the matter. I only want the Senate to know that in my homely way, in going through the record as I have from day to day, I find things which the Senate of the United States should investigate. I am making no charges. I may have views in my mind, and I have views, and at a later date I may say more than I am now saying; but I am not now making charges. I am now asking that my resolution, submitted a week ago last Thursday, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Let me say that I am not a member of the Committee on Commerce, so I shall have no part to play in the investigation; but a very comprehensive investigation was conducted by the Committee on Commerce following the sad death of our colleague, the late Bronson Cutting. I believe the Committee on Commerce will take hold of the matter energetically and fearlessly and go to the bottom of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to say to the Senator from Nevada and to the Senate that as a member of the Committee on Commerce, and as chairman of the special subcommittee formerly known as the Copeland committee, if the committee sees fit to report this resolution for an investigation—which I am convinced from the statement of the Senator from Nevada ought to be done—I shall insist in the committee that the Senator from Nevada be added to the committee for the purpose of the investigation.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am very grateful to my colleague from Missouri. I think the Committee on Commerce can do a good job without my presence. They did a splendid job under the guidance of our beloved former colleague from New York, the late Senator Copeland.

Mr. President, I move——

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will ask unanimous consent, so as not to disturb the bill which is now pending.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I submitted a week ago last Thursday be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. First, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have seen a rather amazing, not to say shocking, statement in a newspaper column to the effect that a Member of the United States Senate involved in this catastrophe was being shadowed by the F. B. I. at the time of his death. Has the Senator any information on that subject?

Mr. McCARRAN. I doubt if there is any truth in that statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It would be shocking if there were any truth in it—shocking not only because it reflects upon that very able, patriotic Senator, but shocking also in its suggestion that one branch of the Government may deal with the legislative branch in any such fashion. I am simply inquiring whether the Senator's resolution is broad enough so that that story may be either confirmed or conclusively condemned.

Mr. McCARRAN. I believe the investigating committee will find, however, that the first persons on the ground were members of the F. B. I. I do not know why; I do not know by what authority; but the first persons that I heard of being on the scene of the accident were members of the F. B. I. I saw an article, quite extensively publicized, giving great credit to the F. B. I. for having assisted in identifying the bodies, and I have no doubt that the F. B. I. did render assistance; but I sometimes wonder where certain phantoms, as I call them, started. In other words, I wonder who started the act-of-God idea, and who started the idea, after no act of God was proven and it was shown that there was no lightning stroke, that the two pilots dropped dead. I wonder who started that idea. I do not lay it to anybody, but I wonder.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I have been much interested in and impressed by the Senator's statement. I should like to ask whether the questions which he asked regarding the improper lubrication of the motors were ever asked by the officials conducting the investigation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. I will say that the matter was gone into, and I think the matter which I sought to elicit by these questions was brought out.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to repeat to the Senator what I have said here once before: That in my opinion this accident is sufficiently serious, and this breach of a 17-month record of air safety is sufficiently sensational, to justify an investigation by Congress, and that I pledge him my support in that effort.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am very grateful. I would say more, but I do not want to transgress on the rule more than I have done.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. The newspapers published some very lengthy articles about a passenger who was delayed, and the statement was made that the plane was held for twenty-some minutes for the purpose of picking up this passenger; and yet I notice that the passenger has never been identified. Has the Senator any information at all as to who the passenger was who could hold a loaded plane for twenty-odd minutes?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have heard several rumors on the subject, but I have never followed it up. I doubt that there was a delay by reason of a passenger, but I do not know.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has raised a question as to whether this catastrophe was an act of God, and has asked who raised the question as to its being an act of God. I suggest to the Senator that in an accident of that kind there is great liability to the passengers; and if the airplane company could establish the fact that the accident was due to an act of God, of course it would escape any liability to its passengers for damages by reason of wrongful death. As I read the newspaper reports and as I got the story, it seemed to me that the attorneys for the airplane company were trying to build up the act-of-God idea with a view to escaping liability for wrongful deaths.

Mr. McCARRAN. One could dwell on that subject for a long time. I am grateful to the Senate and I am grateful to the leader for the extra time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Resolution 307 will be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPULSORY SELECTIVE MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not want to delay my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but I do wish to call attention to an editorial which appeared in the Washington Times-Herald, and originated in the New York Daily News.

The publisher of the New York Daily News has been one of the most ardent advocates of peacetime conscription. That newspaper is one of those that have repeatedly criticized the Congress of the United States for delay in bringing about conscription. It has constantly criticized those who were in favor of voluntary enlistment.

The editorial is headed:

Total war is here to stay.

It shows, to me, the kind of hysteria which is emanating from the city of New York.

A year after its beginning, the European war has come to the "total war" phase; and "total war" is called the worst kind of war there is.

The Germans are dropping bombs all over the London metropolitan area, and too bad about any women and children who may be in the way, since London itself is regarded as a strategic point.

A time bomb even went off Tuesday morning close enough to Buckingham Palace to damage one wing.

The British admit, without a blush or an apology, that their Navy is trying by blockade to starve the Germans into surrender, even though the rest of Europe may have to starve first. The British, too, are doing some all-out raiding of Berlin, having bombed the famous Brandenburger Gate and badly messed up the big Potsdamer Railway station in the heart of Berlin early yesterday morning.

Both sides can be counted on from here on to use every weapon they can come by and every tactic they can think of, regardless of how many women are killed or driven mad, how many children eviscerated, how many beautiful or historic buildings blasted to rubble heaps.

The part to which I particularly desire to call attention is the following:

And each side can be trusted from here on to blame the other for what happens. All the brutalities, all the savageries, will be called merely reprisals for something the other guy did.

Whichever side wins, it is safe to predict that it will build up its facilities for waging total war any time it gets into a fight in future. Total war, in short, is here to stay, and Americans had better reconcile themselves to that fact.

All of which indicates the kind of men we need for our to-be-enlarged Army, Navy, and air force.

We've got to prepare to fight total war, too. If we don't, we'll be conquered by some nation or alliance that has perfected the grisly art.

So, for our total-war forces, we've got to have men who are strong, smart, young, and brutal. We need to round up the cream of our strong, smart, young, and brutal male population, and put it as fast as we can through a course of training in the methods of total war.

Those are the kind of men that Hitler and Mussolini are using—men who have been trained from childhood up to believe that victorious war is man's crowning glory.

We've trained our young men differently—made them Boy Scouts, C. C. C.'ers, etc., to whom the thought of firing a gun at another human being was abhorrent, or supposed to be. We may pay for that some time. But there may yet be time to collect and train an army of men whose brutal instincts will be attuned to the even more brutal machines of twentieth-century war.

CONGRESS IN A FOG

A draft run on lottery principles will not deliver this result. A selective draft will—if the local draft boards are instructed to select strong, smart, young, brutal men exclusively.

The snarl into which the joint congressional conference worked itself on the draft bill coming to an agreement last night indicated that many Congressmen do not yet grasp this necessity for us to learn the art of total war. The age-limit dispute was especially revealing.

The draft ought to be made as popular as possible; and it ought to be aimed at raising contingents of born brutes and young brutes.

Instead, there was a lot of talk about age limits as high as 44 before the top of 35 years was decided upon. The conferees would have done better had they decided on a 21–25-year group—where the bulk of real fighters will come from—or a 21–30 group at the outside.

So the real reason why some of these men wanted a selective service was to take your sons, you mothers of America, to take your sons and to train them to become brutes.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator recalls the quotation from General O'Ryan.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Train them to be young brutes. That is why this newspaper wants the selective service, so that smart, young, and strong men, men who are by natural instinct brutes, may be put in the Army. It wants to take my son and your son and make them into brutes.

Is that what we are coming to in the United States of America? Is that what we mean when we talk about democracy, and that this is the democratic way? Of course, as the Senator from West Virginia has said, that is the idea that was in the mind of General O'Ryan, one of the fathers of the selective-service draft. Make them into brutes! Take them into the Army for a year, and then turn them out as brutes, and what do you expect to have? Talk about gangdom and gangsterism in this country. Take 400,000 men each year and train them to be brutes; train them that the proper thing is war; that it is a fine thing to kill a man; take them and teach them against every principle which they have been taught at their mother's knee; and teach them that the Sermon on the Mount was wrong; teach them that the Ten Commandments mean nothing; and what kind of a country will we have?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. One military authority, protesting against a 30-day training provision in the draft, said it takes 3 months' time to break down a boy to have the right military point of view.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly. This writer said that by voluntary enlistments you could not get the kind of brutes you want. You had to go out and pick them out, pick the smart, the strong, the young, and teach them to be brutes. It makes one's blood curdle to think that what those who are really back of the selective draft want to make out of young Americans. Yet we hear talk about it being the democratic way. Is there anything democratic about what he says?

The draft ought to be made as popular as possible, and it ought to be aimed at raising contingents of born brutes and young brutes. * * * if the local draft boards are instructed to select strong, smart, young, brutal men exclusively.

Is there anything democratic about picking out the strong, the smart, and the brutal man, or making brutes out of those who are selected? Certainly some of us realized that that was what was going to be attempted. Is there any wonder that the mothers of America have gathered around this Capitol at times, and that they have prayed, or wanted to pray on the Capitol steps, only to be driven off the Capitol steps when they wanted to pray? Is that democracy? Is that Christianity? How are we to preserve democracy in the United States if the women of the country, the mothers of the country, cannot come here and pray on the Capitol steps?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I saw a statement in the press a few days ago—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from West Virginia—that the Capitol police were so very anxious to keep any women whose boys might be drafted from coming here and praying on the steps of the Capitol that they refused to allow a United States Senator to drive or walk through the Capitol Grounds. I should like to know whether that statement in the newspaper was correct or not.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I came to my office and noticed a crowd around the Capitol Grounds, and I asked what was wrong. I was told they were going to have a demonstration that night. I usually like to look into things, and I drove up in my car to go into the Capitol Grounds, but they said, "Wait a minute." I said "I would like to come in and see." He said, "We are not permitted to allow anybody here." I said, "A Member of Congress is not allowed in?" They said, "Nobody is allowed in the Capitol Grounds tonight, and that is final." That is an actual instance of what happened that night.

Mr. WHEELER. If this hysteria and if these columnists are going to run the country and if they are going to have more influence with this administration and the next administration than the Congress of the United States has, it will not be long before a Senator will not even be permitted to speak, to say nothing of entering the Capitol Grounds.

The columnists are boasting of the fact that they were the ones who put over the 50-destroyer deal. I congratulate them. They were the ones who sold it and they were the ones who put it over. But what a travesty it is upon the administration of our national affairs to think that a lot of young boy columnists, just out of college in some instances, are able to put over and to formulate the policies of the United States of America. But they are formulating them. Some of them are columnists who are paid to work up sentiment in the United States as to what the administration and the bureaus of the Government should do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has the Senator seen the pictures of the recent maneuvers of the National Guard and Regular Army in northern New York, which were very widely publicized, with the picture of a truck labeled "This is a tank" participating in the maneuvers? That was in a great many newspapers. Yet at this very time, in addition to transferring, without any authority of law, in fact, in absolute contravention of law, to a foreign power, one-seventh of the Navy of the United States, vessels which, as was ably pointed out by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, are needed by the seamen of the United States—in addition to that, it is now proposed to transfer some 400 tanks to Canada. It is said they are old tanks. Perhaps they are, but if Canada can use them, we could use them. If there is such a desperate emergency as we have been led to believe, we certainly need all the tanks we have. An old tank is better than no tank at all. An old destroyer was better than no destroyer at all. Yet we are now confronting the fact that the President of the United States, by an absolute usurpation of power, almost as dictatorial an exercise of power as Hitler or Mussolini ever undertook, has transferred one-seventh of the Navy of the United States to a foreign power, and now we are told that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I will take the floor in my own right.

Now we are told, Mr. President, that we are to transfer our tanks, our field guns, and other elements of war, which we have recently been told are so vitally needed.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Missouri also knows that the next move by this same committee, which was successful in getting the destroyer fleet sent across the ocean——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator means the committee to get us into war—the William Allen White committee to get us into war?

Mr. HOLT. Yes; that is right. Now a campaign has been begun to send abroad 25 of our 53 flying fortresses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; and I understand it is now the purpose to turn over to a foreign power all of our flying fortresses, which are the principal air defense of the United States at the present time, and the force most vitally suitable for hemisphere defense. That committee to get us into war is urging that we turn those flying fortresses over to Great Britain. They will also perhaps urge that we turn over all the torpedo boats we have to Great Britain.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I want the Senator also to know that the author of this conscription bill advocates openly, and does what he can secretly, to get us to give the bomb sight to England. If he is as successful in doing that as he was in getting the conscription measure across, we will not have any secrets. He said, "Let no secrets be withheld."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say that I heard General Craig, the former Chief of Staff, and General Marshall, the present Chief of Staff, both testify that that bomb sight was the most vitally important military secret that the United States had ever had, and that even to consider its transfer to a foreign power was very closely akin to treason, for the reason that if we were to transfer that bomb sight to any power and some of its airplanes were shot down, as they necessarily will be in a certain number, any foreign power which was a prospective enemy of the United States would immediately acquire the secrets of our bomb sight.

Mr. President, let me say, in connection with what the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] said, that when that advertisement of William Allen White's committee to get us into war first appeared it contained the statement that the names of the persons who paid for the insertion of the advertisement were on file in the State Department and that anyone could obtain them who wanted to.

I wrote to the State Department and asked who they were. I received a mimeographed form from the State Department in which they explained the reason why they would not make the names public. I wrote the State Department when the remarkable advertisement appeared the other day in the New York Times advocating a coalition government now between the United States and Great Britain—advocating the abrogation of the independence of the United States to form a joint government with Great Britain, and I received back the same type of mimeographed form.

I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I shall introduce a resolution as soon as I can get it drawn up to call on the State Department for that information, and I would like to see whether the State Department has the nerve to turn down a request made by the United States Senate itself.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I wanted the Senator to know that I myself have a list of persons who made donations to that committee. Every single international bank in New York, with the exception of one, has a director or someone who has contributed to it. The directors of the companies making munitions and selling them to England and to the United States also donated to that committee. I will say to the Senator that I can produce the names.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They could not have made a better investment. That is prudent management on the part of those who own those companies.

Mr. President, I have concluded what I wished to say, except that I shall point out that in the action which we have taken today in adopting the conference report we have, to all intents and purposes, said our last word on the subject of sending conscripted boys abroad to fight in foreign quarrels. We have no control now when we put this weapon in the hands of the President of the United States—a man who has already shown his disregard for Congress by turning over one-seventh of our Navy to a foreign power. We have no control now to prevent him, if he so desires, from ordering these draftees overseas to fight on the old, sodden, blood-soaked fields of Europe, the ancient battlefields of Europe, without any declaration of war by Congress. If the President of the United States could fly directly in the face of a specific statute prohibiting the transfer of naval vessels to a belligerent he certainly would not hesitate, if the occasion demanded, to order these draftees abroad.

We have seen American troops ordered abroad without any authority of Congress, by some former Presidents of the United States. The Marines occupied Nicaragua for 3 or 4 years. They occupied Haiti. They were even so arbitrary that the Marine Commandant refused to allow one of the most distinguished Members of this body to land in Haiti—the distinguished and beloved senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

So when we have constituted this weapon, and turned it over to the President—and it does not make any difference who wins in the Presidential election either, because President Roosevelt and Mr. Willkie are apparently in entire accord as to this assumption of dictatorship, they are in entire accord—when we have forged this weapon and turned it over to the Executive without restriction, we have no right to complain when we see the boys ordered abroad. If anyone doubts that following the demand for 50 destroyers, which has already been fulfilled, now being followed by a demand for tanks, for our flying fortresses, for the other weapon which we have on hand—if anyone doubts, that, if necessary, that will be followed by a demand for our battleships and for the sending of troops abroad, he has certainly reckoned without his host.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I should like the Senator to know that the present President of the United States said in Brooklyn, in 1920, after having been Assistant Secretary of the Navy, that he had violated enough laws to be sent to the penitentiary for 999 years. He said that boastingly in 1920, when he did not have much power. What would he do in 1940?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I will say very frankly that I do not think that on the question of arrogation of power by the Executive there is very much difference between the present Democratic nominee for the Presidency and the present Republican nominee for the Presidency.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I noticed a statement in this morning's newspaper that President Roosevelt had announced that the Navy Department revealed that United States Navy personnel have sailed or will sail the destroyers into a Canadian port. Does that not constitute a violation of the Neutrality Act as well as of the other acts which have been violated in the transfer of the destroyers?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is no question that that is a violation of the Neutrality Act, and there is no question that the transfer of the destroyers was a violation of statutory legislation. There is no question on earth that the instance which the Senator has cited is, of course, a specific violation of the Neutrality Act which was adopted by strong administration support at the special session of Congress last fall.

Mr. TAFT. Also I wish to call the Senator's attention to another statement made by the President at the press conference yesterday. The article in the newspaper says—

> That no appropriation will be necessary for the establishment of new naval and air bases on sites recently acquired from Great Britain.

Is the Senator from Missouri advised whether we are going to neglect that end of the deal entirely?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have already signed several blank checks, I will say to the Senator from Ohio, which I understand are now about to be filled in.

Let me say in that connection, and in connection with the destroyer deal, that the President has flattered himself by likening himself to Thomas Jefferson in the purchase of Louisiana. There probably was never a more faulty analogy in the history of the world than that. Thomas Jefferson did negotiate for the purchase of Louisiana, but he negotiated for payment in cash, and that could not be carried into effect until Congress had seen fit to appropriate the money. In the first place, France did not owe us any money at that time. France did not owe us four or five billion dollars. France did not owe us anything. But Thomas Jefferson had sense enough to negotiate for a purchase in fee. If he had taken a 99-year lease on Louisiana, the imperial commonwealth in which I live, and many other very important States, would have been turned back to France 37 years ago, provided we had complied with the treaty, which we pride ourselves on doing. I call attention to the fact that if we comply with the agreement which the President, without submission to the Senate, has made with Great Britain in this case, and turn back these bases at the end of 99 years, we will have ringed our most vital chain of defense—the Panama Canal—with a whole series, a whole chain of alien air bases and naval bases, which, according to the President's own statement, would make the Panama Canal untenable. By taking a 99-year lease we have agreed to spend millions upon millions of dollars, and possibly billions of dollars, fortifying those air bases and naval bases, with the prospect of turning them back at the end of 99 years to an alien power, which would make the defense of the Panama Canal untenable.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says we have promised or contracted to spend billions. With whom?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The whole theory of the destroyer deal is that we shall spend whatever money is necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly we shall spend it, when we get good and ready, but according to our desires, and not in response to the dictates of any foreign nation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is perfectly true; but whatever we spend will go into the hands of a foreign power at the end of 99 years. The more we spend, and the better we fortify the bases, the stronger we make the threat against the Panama Canal by a foreign power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Neither the Senator from Missouri nor the Senator from Texas can look into the future. We do not know what changes will occur in the next 99 years. At the end of 99 years we may own not only the bases but the islands themselves.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is true. Before the Senator entered the Chamber I had pointed out that if Mr. Jefferson, to whom the President likens himself in flattering fashion, had made a contract for 99 years in connection with the Louisiana Purchase, the imperial domain of Louisiana would have been turned back to France 37 years ago.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am more concerned with the safety of this country right now, and in the next few years, than I am with what may happen 99 years from now. I am assuming that the men who live 99 years from now will be able to meet their responsibilities and will undertake to meet their responsibilities just as we are now undertaking to meet our responsibilities.

If the Senator will answer one more question, I shall resume my seat.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator refers to alien bases. Is not an alien base better than no base at all?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Not if it is in the hands of a foreign power.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not in the hands of a foreign power.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. At the end of 99 years it will be in the hands of a foreign power.

Mr. CONNALLY. At the end of 99 years we shall all be in New Jerusalem. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have the faith to believe that this Republic will endure longer than 99 years. I admit that some events of the past year or two have cast some doubt upon that hope. I am as much interested in what happens to my children and my children's children and their children as I am in what happens to the Senator from Texas and myself at the present moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement about the conference report which has been agreed to.

It seems bitter irony that on the very day we agree to a conference report on a bill conscripting all boys between the ages of 21 and 35 while we are at peace, Canada puts in effect a conscription law which conscripts only single boys between the ages of 21 and 24. Canada is at war and has been for a year. The boys in Canada are required to give only 30 days' service in the Army, as compared with the boys in the United States, who are required to give 1 year's service, and 10 years reserve duty. Canada is to call 30,000 conscripts. We are to call 900,000. Canada is at war. We are supposedly at peace; and on the very same day we pass a conscription law to go into the homes of America and take the boys and send them anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, Canada takes her boys for only 30 days——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will recall that in addition to the provisions of the Canadian draft law which he has mentioned, the Canadian draft law also provides that the men drafted shall not be sent overseas without their own individual consent.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct. I was going to state that no Canadian conscript was required to serve outside Canada or her territory. If a stranger were to look at the two draft laws, he would conclude that the United States is at war and that Canada is at peace.

In my opinion, the United States is at war. I do not mean directly in war; but we all know that certain acts, such as the transfer of destroyers, are acts of war committed by the President of the United States, knowing that he can be stopped by only one method. We have taken a direct step toward war at the direction of the President. According to one man who is close to the President, one of the purposes of conscription is to show Hitler that the President has the American people behind him, and to break the morale of Hitler. Break the morale of Hitler! The only way to break the morale of Hitler is to meet him in the way we all realize he may be met; but for us to pass a conscription law and take action which completely destroys the fundamental rights of Americans in order to break the morale of Hitler is so ridiculous that it does not deserve the attention of anyone who has been a student of international affairs.

It is quite interesting to compare Canada with the United States today. The acts of the United States point to a nation at war. The acts of Canada do not. However, we live in a peculiar time, with a peculiar Executive.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the Chair's interpretation of the limitation of debate that any Senator who engages in the post mortem on the draft, the sale of destroyers, and the establishment of bases is thereafter barred from speaking on the La Follette amendment, if we shall ever get back to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The interpretation of the Chair is that during the further consideration of the pending amendment no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. No matter what he speaks on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the present debate is during the consideration of the amendment, and any Senator who speaks will be held to the rule.

Mr. WILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wish to suggest that if we can get back to the bill and proceed we may get through at some time.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I think the country should give the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] a vote of thanks for his very clear statement today before the Senate. As he said, there has been much "baloney" or "bunk," or buncombe in this debate, with the result that the minds of our people have become confused.

Today the Senate has agreed to the conference report on the conscription bill. I am satisfied that in a few days or a few weeks, unless there are some incidents, or unless there is something more to stir the mental equilibrium of this country, we shall settle down to consider the meaning of the conscription bill. I believe America will be sportsmanlike enough to accept it in all its meaning.

Mr. President, I voted against the conscription bill. One of the reasons why I voted against it was very clearly set forth today in a reply to an inquiry by the Senator from Maryland of the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. The chairman of the committee estimated that it will be 45 days before conscription can get under way and any of the conscripts can be sent out for training. That is one reason.

Mr. President, in my opinion much of what has been said in the Senate and in the newspapers has been in the nature of a political smoke screen to prevent the American electorate from seeing that we are unprepared in the most vital particulars. That fact has been obscured, with the idea in mind that the American people will not place the blame for our unpreparedness where it belongs, upon the party and leadership in power.

It has been conceded, and conclusively shown throughout the debate, that the first line of defense in any conflict which might approach our shores is the Navy. It is conceded that apparently our Navy has not learned any lessons since 1918. It is conceded that our ships are just as vulnerable to attack from bombs and torpedoes as are the ships of the British.

What is the first line of defense, and what is the first step we must take to obtain preparedness? Is it to make our ships more nearly immune from attack from torpedoes and bombs. The war in Europe has demonstrated a new technique of land warfare, known as the German "blitzkrieg." It is conceded as a conclusive fact that 150,000 Germans, equipped in "blitzkrieg" methods, not only penetrated but paralyzed 3,000,000 Frenchmen. What lesson do we draw from that fact? Does that mean now more semitrained men or better training for the Regular Army and National Guard?

That brings up the second line of defense, which is the air fleet. We have found that the Navy must have a supplemental arm in the air. However, we are inadequately prepared in that respect. Why? Who has been Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and air fleet the last 7 years? We just have not any air fleet to supplement the Navy or to act as an independent arm, for defense or offense. I was referring to the "blitzkrieg" methods of Hitler as related to the Army of the United States. It is expected that under voluntary enlistments shortly we will have 375,000 men in the Regular Army. I ask this question: Are they trained in the "blitzkrieg" technique of offense and of defense? Have they modern equipment, tanks, antiaircraft guns, and so forth? The unanimous answer is "No." Has the Army a supplemental air arm, such as the spearhead Hitler had? It will be remembered that he had 150,000 men equipped with super land dreadnoughts, followed by tanks and mechanized units of men with machine guns, and over and above this land organization he had a synchronized air force of Stukas and bombers. Is our Army prepared in that way? The answer is "No." Where is the equipment? Whose business was it to have it for the Army? Whose business was it to tell this country what we should have?

The President and Hitler came into power at the same time. Hitler prepared, the President slept.

Now we are calling out the National Guard, and that will add another 375,000 men, which will give us an Army of 750,000. Is there in the Army or the guard any group trained and equipped to meet an offensive attack by anyone using the "blitzkrieg" method, as employed by Hitler, or is the guard of the Army trained and equipped in "blitzkrieg" methods to take the offensive? The answer is, "No." Why? Someone slept.

What has all this to do with conscription? Well, if we have not trained and equipped the Regular Army to know how to fight in modern warfare, if we have not equipped and trained our troops in the National Guard to fight under the new methods and with the new methods and new technique and equipment, why call out other men who cannot be properly trained and equipped? Why further unbalance our economy and interfere with the regular course of affairs, upset homes, business relations, and so forth, when the Regular Army and guard need training and equipment? I agree with those who say that there will not be 75,000 conscripts called out before Christmas, and if they are called out they will be called out as fillers for the guard and Army. These men, and more, could have been gotten by voluntary enlistment.

Mr. President, what I have stated substantially sets forth the reasons why I voted against the conscription bill. Calling men out and putting them in quarters does not make soldiers. And peacetime conscription is not an American way.

Mr. President, first let us take our Regular Army and make it "blitzkrieg" conscious. Let it be equipped and trained accordingly; then take the National Guard and do likewise. We will then have 750,000 men in the third line of defense, and if we get the first line—a navy invincible, with a coordinated air arm—and a second line of defense, another air fleet such as is being used now in Europe; and our third arm of defense, an Army of men properly trained, equipped, and mechanized, then nothing in the world will touch these shores.

CHEESE DAY—WISCONSIN

But, Mr. President, I did not rise primarily to make these comments. I rose to say that today in Wisconsin is Cheese Day. What a wonderful subject that is; what it would mean for the heated temperaments we see manifested every day to have a nice piece of cool Wisconsin cheese for them to sink their teeth in. Today at the little town of Monroe, Wis., there are assembled about 75,000 people to celebrate the advent of Cheese Day. At noon, about this time, they are dealing out 50,000 cheese sandwiches to the folks who have come. Perhaps to many that may seem to be rather an irrelevant subject, but is it? If we thought a little more about our home economy, if we thought a little more about attending to the problems of this country instead of meddling in foreign affairs, instead of sticking our noses into other people's business, we would be better off. When one sticks his nose into Wisconsin cheese it smells good, and he knows if he puts his teeth in it it tastes good.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said on another occasion to my Democratic colleagues who were going to the Democratic Convention in Chicago. I said, "When you are tired and disgruntled"—and were not many of them tired and disgruntled after that convention—"come up into the State of Wisconsin to refresh yourselves, meet our people, get acquainted with nature and with nature's marvelous food—cheese." On that occasion I said in the Senate—and it was almost a prophecy—"Gentlemen, of course, you Democrats will listen to your master's voice and the voice will determine the nominations." We have heard of a man who once was "drafted" for a third term, but we saw in Chicago a man drafting himself; and, in addition to that, we have seen something phenomenal, for against the conviction of the whole Democratic Convention, we have seen him draft the Vice Presidential candidate for his party.

Mr. President, if you have any doubt about that, just talk to the Democrats. They did not like it; but the whip went into action and the action resulted not in a people's choice but in a master dictating the choice.

Someone may say that it is a long way from cheese and conscription. No. If the people eat cheese they do not want to become masters; if people eat good, wholesome, clean food, nature's food, coming from the cow who drinks the fine spring waters of Wisconsin, eats the luscious grasses, and from this source produces the constituents of cheese, they do not want to reach out and use the strong arm of force and conscript when there is no need for conscription, especially when voluntary enlistments will solve the problem.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Since the Senator is talking about cheese, I suggest that the proper type of cheese to be used today, the day on which we pass a conscription law, is limburger cheese. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. I would say to the Senator that probably a better thing for him to use if he wants something smelly would be to use some of the mash that comes from the hills of West Virginia.

But, Mr. President, seriously, I want to say that the Governor of the State of Wisconsin has set this day aside as Cheese Day, and I desire to call the attention of those who pay me the honor to listen that one of our problems in the Middle West would be solved if the people of this country ate as much cheese per capita as they eat per capita in Canada, or if the people here ate as much cheese per capita as is eaten in Holland. Yes; just doing that, then one of the economic problems of the Middle West would be solved. So, instead of following the economic mirages of the new dealers, why not use the simple economic route of doing unto your neighbor as you would be done by, buy the products that make sunshine in your souls and keep your head clear so that you can see and act straight? The backbone of the country, the farmers of the Middle West, are entiled to this consideration.

TAXATION

Mr. President, for over 30 years now I have been interested in taxation, because I have been privileged to pay taxes. I use that word "privileged" advisedly.

We the people, through our legislative agents, impose these taxes.

In recent years I have become interested in taxation, not simply from the standpoint of one who pays taxes, but from the scientific angle. I have seen many crackpot notions put into being.

Like all things human, our methods of taxation in many instances are inequitable, unfair, and unwise. This is particularly true when hasty action presses legislation into being.

There is an old saying which goes something like this: "Act in haste and repent at leisure." Taxation cannot be considered as a separate matter.

So, Mr. President, can anyone tell me why there is so much haste about a piece of legislation which may give a wrong direction to future legislation, injure our economy, and so forth. I have not been able to find out the reason, unless it is politics.

There is every reason why this bill should not be passed at this time.

We are right in the midst of a political campaign. It is conceded that the four "p's"—passion, prejudice, the purse, and patronage—will be important factors in the decision arrived at in the campaign. Perhaps there is another "p" which will be important. I classify it as the "pass-the-buck-excess-profits bill."

May I be privileged to interject a few ideas into this discussion which I think have a decided bearing on whether or not we should pass this bill.

First. In applying this tax we should make it, as far as possible, an equitable tax. By equitable tax I do not mean simply a tax that is equitable to the taxpayer, but one that is equitable to the country at large, having in mind future possible contingencies or emergencies.

We know that industry as a whole, with few exceptions, has for about 11 years had a hard time of it with the result that industry's reserves have been depleted. Aye, more; industry's capital in many instances has been depleted. In my State of Wisconsin we are about 50 percent industrial. I know whereof I speak.

It is only in the last 3 or 4 years that industry, generally speaking, has been operating in the black. During the previous 6 or 7 years it has been operating in the red.

As a whole, industry has stood the gaff well because patriotic men have hoped and prayed and striven to keep jobs open and men employed, and the life of the various communities going. Industry after industry reduced in capital structure because of losses.

We must not now decapitate industry by taxation. If we do so, we decapitate jobs; we decapitate the economic life of communities; and if we do that we destroy values, not only material and economic, but we destroy the morale of our people. It is all important in this period that we do not destroy material values. It is, of course, more important that we do not destroy spiritual values.

Therefore, it appears to me that in order to make it, so that when we have to face the emergencies after this period is over—post-war period—the emergencies of depression and distress, and lack of business, we do not at this time make it so, there are no reserves built up in industry to help take up the jars that are going to follow.

I know the Government needs taxes, but it must not destroy our economic system which produces taxes. I am thinking of men who will need jobs, of communities which will need smoking chimneys, of businessmen who need pay rolls, of homes that need sustenance.

Therefore, Mr. President, it appears to me that to tack on another 3.1 percent corporate normal tax is not a fair nor an equitable way to get at this problem. Why? Because it almost bleeds the patient dry. No man can live without blood in his veins and the industry of America cannot live long when you take the economic lifeblood out of its system.

What is more, if industry cannot build buffers against the shocks that must inevitably come, industry will be run over and destroyed like all the nations were in Europe before the "blitzkrieg" methods of Hitler. But if industry is equipped with reserves it will continue as it has in the past to meet the assaults that must come.

I am speaking for men who want work and who want to continue at their jobs. I am speaking for those who have saved and created buildings and machinery that constitute the working tools of the workingman. I want them to have something for their efforts and industry.

If we destroy, as we have been destroying, values in this country of ours, you will have the soil properly inoculated for either communism or fascism. I do not want that to happen.

It has been popular certain times in years past for leaders in the Nation to create "isms" and division between management and labor. Many people have profited politically and economically by that very method—many people in this country and many abroad. Hitler is one of them abroad.

We must give the men of enterprise, the builders, an incentive to start the wheel of progress; it will energize them for greater effort; it will result in more taxable income—better for Government, labor, capital, and the public generally.

EXCESS PROFITS

Mr. President, I believe in—

First. A plan of excess-profits taxation, but one which would encourage rather than discourage production. I believe in regulation and taxation of income as a means of financing defense and war costs.
